1. BRYCE YOUNG | Alabama 5101 | 204 lbs. | 3JR Pasadena, Calif. (Mater Dei) 7/25/2001 (age 21.76) #9

BACKGROUND: Bryce Young, an only child, was born in Wynnewood, Pa. (just outside of Philadelphia) at Lankenau Hospital (the same hospital where Kobe Bryant was born). His father (Craig), who was born in Pennsylvania but raised in Southern California, and his mother (Julie) decided to relocate the family to Pasadena shortly after Bryce was born. Young started playing quarterback at age 5, in 2008, and continued playing throughout youth football. Although basketball was his first love, he continued to ascend in football and started working with a quarterback coach (Danny Hernandez) in the sixth grade. Young quarterbacked the Inland Empire Ducks club team in eighth grade, leading it to an undefeated national championship in 2015. Young originally attended L.A. Cathedral High School (an all-boys Catholic school) and spent his freshman season as the varsity backup behind a four-year starter. As a sophomore, he became the full-time starter and passed for 3,431 yards, 41 touchdowns and only 3 interceptions. Prior to his junior season, Young transferred to football powerhouse Mater Dei High School in Santa Ana, where he became the first African American quarterback in school history. He was mentored by head coach Bruce Rollinson and offensive coordinator Dave Money, who also coached quarterbacks JT Daniels, Matt Barkley and Matt Leinart. Young later became the third Mater Dei quarterback to win the Heisman Trophy, joining Leinart (2004) and John Huarte (1964). As a junior, Young led Mater Dei to a 14-1 record and the 2018 Division-I state championship, finishing the season with 69.8 percent completions, 3,866 passing yards, 39 touchdowns and 6 interceptions. As a senior, he led Mater Dei to a 12-1 record and collected numerous accolades, including the California Gatorade Player of the Year, USA Today Offensive Player of the Year and conference MVP. Young finished the 2019 season with 71.9 percent completions (294-for-409), 4,528 passing yards, 58 touchdowns and 6 interceptions, plus added 357 rushing yards and 10 rushing touchdowns. He finished his high-school career with 14,334 total yards (13,250 passing, 1,084 rushing) and 178 total touchdowns (152 passing, 26 rushing). Basketball was Young’s first love, and he started working with a basketball trainer (Mike Teller) when he was 11. Young was the starting point guard on club teams through eighth grade but decided to focus on football in high school and only played basketball recreationally.

A five-star recruit, Young was the No. 1 dual-threat quarterback in the 2020 recruiting class and the No. 1 recruit in California (two spots ahead of D.J. Uiagalelei and three ahead of C.J. Stroud). He was ranked as the No. 2 recruit in the country, behind defensive tackle Bryan Bresee. When he was in eighth grade, Young took a visit to Texas Tech and head coach Kliff Kingsbury offered him on the spot, giving the 14-year-old quarterback his first scholarship offer. He soon collected numerous high-profile offers and verbally committed to USC (a half-hour from his Pasadena home) in July 2018, the summer before he enrolled at Mater Dei. After Steve Sarkisian was hired as Alabama’s offensive coordinator in 2019, he was able to flip Young to the Crimson Tide. Young continued to consider nearby USC, but he ultimately signed with Alabama and enrolled early in January 2020. He earned his degree in psychology (his father is a mental health therapist) and graduated with a 3.0 GPA (December 2022). Young became one of the highest NIL earners (seven figures) in college football and took his offensive linemen out to dinner at Logan’s Roadhouse every Wednesday during the season. His parents moved to Vestavia Hills, Ala. (one hour east of Tuscaloosa) to be closer to their son. Young elected to skip his senior season and enter the 2023 NFL Draft.

STRENGTHS: Quick-minded player and processes his surroundings extremely well (is “genius level” on the board, according to one NFL GM) ... his vision and ability to create out of structure are special ... instinctive pocket presence and had extensive basketball training growing up (his favorite athlete is Steph Curry), which developed his ability to create space to throw (Nick Saban: “He plays like a point guard.”) ... deftly negotiates pressure and has a knack for setting up and eluding rushers with controlled, cunning movements ... very quick to reset his eyes/feet on the move and get the ball out with his twitchy release ... naturally accurate from any arm angle (78.0 percent adjusted career completion rate) ... consistently throws the football before his target’s body/eyes are turned toward him ... identifies pre-snap blitzers like a seasoned pro and always knows his hot routes (set and reset protections with pro-style verbiage) ... level-headed and grasps the mental side of the game, which allows him to perform with a calming presence (one of seven two-time team captains under Saban) ... slow heartbeat in high-pressure situations ... very well-prepared and dedicated to his craft (NFL scout: “Winning is the most important thing to him.”) ... posted a 23-4 win-loss record as a starter ... played at a high level versus top opponents (314.6 yards per game with 35 touchdowns and 6 interceptions in 13 starts versus ranked teams) ... threw a touchdown in all 27 starts over the last two seasons (an Alabama record for consecutive games with a touchdown).

WEAKNESSES: Vastly undersized with a slight frame – measured 204 pounds at the NFL Scouting Combine, but his playing weight is “around 190 pounds,” according to NFL scouts ... minimal growth potential and doesn’t have the body type to get much bigger ... his size will restrict his effectiveness operating muddy pockets and ability to slip tackles in the NFL ... his pocket arm strength is closer to average than above-average ... his deep ball will lose some life downfield ... won’t be able to get away with holding the ball in the NFL as long as he did in college (average time to throw in 2022 was 3.02 seconds) ... often welcomes chaos to buy time as a passer, raising the odds of him taking hits ... 12 career fumbles ... his lack of size leads to obvious durability concerns ... missed one game as a junior because of a sprained AC joint sprain in his right (throwing) shoulder.

SUMMARY: A two-year starter at Alabama, Young thrived in offensive coordinator Bill O’Brien’s pro-style spread attack, becoming the first quarterback in school history to win the Heisman Trophy. The first Alabama player to throw for 3,000-plus yards in separate seasons, he set the single-season school records for passing yards (4,872) and touchdowns (47), while finishing his career No. 2 in passing yards (8,356) and passing touchdowns (80). A point guard on the football field with his rare vision and spatial awareness, Young plays with impressive body rhythm and controlled urgency with his mind, feet and release. Although some of his magic acts will be tough to replicate in the NFL and will lead to durability concerns, he has a sixth sense for pressure and the crafty reaction skills to improvise, buy time and create off-script. Overall, Young is a size outlier (he will be the smallest quarterback in the NFL the moment he is drafted) with average arm power, but he is a natural passer with an instinctive feel for throw location and play extension. Despite limited physical traits, he has the high-end intangibles and talent required to be an impact starter.

2.

C.J. STROUD | Ohio State

6030 | 214 lbs. | 3SO

Inland Empire, Calif. (Rancho Cucamonga)

10/3/2001 (age 21.57)

BACKGROUND: Coleridge Bernard “C.J.” Stroud IV, the youngest of four children, grew up in the Inland Empire region of Southern California, about an hour east of Los Angeles. He was introduced to sports, mainly basketball and football, at age 5 by his father (Coleridge III). Stroud was a quarterback throughout youth football (won two youth-league titles) and middle school, playing for the Pomona Steelers in Snoop Dogg’s football league. When he was age 13 in April of 2015, his family faced intense adversity after his father was arrested on charges of carjacking, kidnapping, robbery and misdemeanor sexual battery. He pleaded guilty and is currently serving a 38-year sentence at Folsom State Prison. He previously had been convicted of felony drug possession and receiving stolen property in 1989, receiving stolen property in 1991 and armed robbery and second-degree robbery in 1992. C.J.’s mother (Kimberly) filed for divorce in 2012. With his father in prison and not eligible for parole until 2040, Stroud’s family has faced numerous financial challenges and often moved around, including living in a small apartment above the storage facility in Upland, Calif. where Kimberly worked. Stroud attended Rancho Cucamonga High School, where he played quarterback on varsity all four years, serving as the backup as a freshman and sophomore (348 passing yards and 5 touchdowns combined over his first two seasons). He became the starter as a junior. Despite the team starting 0-4, it finished 7-1 over the final eight games as Stroud posted 2,343 passing yards, 19 touchdowns and 6 interceptions. As a senior, Stroud led Rancho Cucamonga to a 9-4 record and the state playoff semifinals. He finished his final season with 65.9 percent completions, 3,878 passing yards, 47 passing touchdowns and 9 interceptions, adding 4 rushing touchdowns to earn U.S. Army All-America honors. Stroud, who grew up participating in AAU tournaments around the country, also lettered in basketball (his first love) and was Rancho Cucamonga’s starting shooting guard.

A four-star recruit, Stroud was the No. 2 pro-style quarterback in the 2020 recruiting class and the No. 4 recruit in California (behind Bryce Young, Justin Flowe and D.J. Uiagalelei). He was ranked as the No. 42 overall recruit nationally. Stroud didn’t grow up with a quarterback coach or other training resources and faced a much slower recruitment process than his peers, especially with minimal tape from his first two years of high school. He didn’t receive any scholarship offers until after his junior season. Colorado was his first offer, followed by several other Mountain West (Boise State) and Pac-12 (Cal, Oregon State, Washington State) schools. The summer before his senior year, Stroud attended multiple Elite 11 recruiting camps but was often overlooked until the Opening Oakland Regional, which earned him an invitation to The Opening in Frisco, Texas in July 2019. There, he earned MVP honors and led his team to the 7-on-7 championship. It was at that event where he bonded with Julian Fleming and Jaxon Smith-Njigba, two highly-ranked receivers who were committed to Ohio State. They recommended Stroud to the Buckeyes’ coaching staff and Ohio State reached out with an offer a few months later. Stroud skyrocketed up the recruiting rankings and added offers from Georgia, Michigan, Oregon and others. His final choice came down to Georgia and Ohio State, with the Buckeyes winning out, primarily because of Stroud’s relationships with Fleming, Smith-Njigba and Gee Scott Jr. Stroud has two older brothers (Isaiah and Asmar) and an older sister (Ciara). His father was his “best friend” growing up, but Stroud didn’t talk with him throughout high school following his father’s incarceration. He rekindled the relationship after enrolling at Ohio State and the two often talk on the phone. Stroud elected to skip his final two seasons and enter the 2023 NFL Draft.

PRO DAY	6030	213	32 3/4	10 1/8	78	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	(position drills only – choice)

STRENGTHS: Smooth delivery, clean feet, and the ball comes out quick and tight ... uses a plant-and-drive motion to generate functional velocity on his passes ... layers the football with outstanding touch and control ... puts a premium on accuracy and places his throws away from defenders to avoid turnovers (85-to-12 touchdown-to-interception ratio the last two seasons) ... strong decision-maker and made incremental improvements getting deeper into his progressions ... identifies coverages pre-snap to anticipate the voids and understand where to attack the defense ... his comfort zone is inside the pocket, but he is also able to slide and make subtle movements to change throwing platforms ... showed more of a willingness to scramble and use his legs towards the end of his Ohio State career ... faced considerable adversity throughout his childhood because of his father’s situation, but it built character and Stroud doesn’t mentally wilt in tough times ... named a team captain in 2022 and is described as “reserved and confident” and one of the “funniest” players on the team by his teammates ... averaged 9.8 yards per attempt in his career and ranked No. 1 in the FBS in 30-plus yard completions (31) in 2022 ... posted 21-4 record as a starter ... one of the most productive quarterbacks in college football over his two-year starting tenure, averaging 324.9 passing yards and 3.4 passing touchdowns per game.

WEAKNESSES: Narrowly-built and needs to continue adding weight to work off NFL contact ... doesn’t have a power arm ... guilty of locking and lingering on his preferred read ... accustomed to being protected very well in the pocket ... subpar backfield elusiveness will lead to punishment from NFL pass rushers ... inconsistent ability to reset and figure out plan B when the defense fools him ... capable of using his legs to scramble (forced 3 missed tackles in the Peach Bowl against Georgia), but was an inconsistent improviser and didn’t look comfortable escaping for the majority of his OSU career (only 1 missed tackle in his first 27 games) ... must become a more competitive finisher as a ball carrier, especially on short-yardage runs ... needs to improve his ball security in the pocket (10 career fumbles, including a strip sack, scoop and score against Iowa in 2022) ... lost both of his starts against rival Michigan (other two losses came to Oregon and Georgia) ... benefited from an all-star cast around him ... missed one game because of a separated AC joint in his right (throwing) shoulder (September 2021) as a redshirt freshman.

SUMMARY: A two-year starter at Ohio State, Stroud was a record-setting passer for the Buckeyes in head coach Ryan Day’s multiple spread offense. While leading the FBS in touchdown passes (41) in 2022, Stroud broke Drew Brees’ Big Ten record for the most touchdowns in a two-year span and finished with 17 Ohio State records (second in school history with 8,123 career passing yards). Structurally sound, Stroud throws with patience and poise and he can make all the throws. Though he appears comfortable on plays designed to move his launch point, his improvisation skills when things break down are a work in progress (his outstanding performance on the 2022 Georgia tape raises the level of optimism). Overall, Stroud must become more comfortable embracing his athleticism and escapability, but he is an outstanding rhythm passer with touch, pacing and ball-speed control to carve up the defense. His passing skills give him an encouraging floor as an NFL starter and his development as a creator will ultimately determine his NFL ceiling.

GRADE: 1st Round (No. 4 overall)

3. ANTHONY RICHARDSON | Florida 6042 | 244 lbs. | 3SO Gainesville, Fla. (Eastside) 5/22/2002 (age 20.93) #15

BACKGROUND: Anthony Richardson, the oldest of two boys, was born and raised in Miami (Fla.) by his mother (LaShawnda Lane) and often lived with other relatives. He has a relationship with his biological father, but his great uncle (Tanka Lane) was the central male figure in Richardson’s childhood. Tanka, who passed away when Richardson was in middle school, introduced Richardson to football at age 4, when he played for the Carol City Chiefs. Richardson also ran track in elementary school and started playing basketball at age 10. His family moved to Gainesville in 2013 and Richardson enrolled at Professional Academies Magnet at Lofton High School, where he studied Fire, EMS and public safety. Lofton doesn’t have athletic programs, which allowed Richardson to play sports at Eastside High School. He originally played wide receiver as a freshman before moving to quarterback after the starter broke his finger. After scoring 23 touchdowns (13 rushing, 10 passing) as a sophomore, Richardson led the Rams to a 7-4 record and playoff berth in 2018, finishing his junior year with 1,567 passing yards, 924 rushing yards and 33 total touchdowns (17 passing, 16 rushing). He played the first six games of his senior season before a shoulder injury ended his year, finishing with 1,398 passing yards, 151 rushing yards and 15 touchdowns (8 passing, 7 rushing). Richardson’s senior season was featured on the Netflix documentary “QB1: Beyond the Lights.” Richardson finished his four-year varsity career with 78 total touchdowns (41 rushing, 37 passing). He also lettered in basketball at Eastside and averaged 10.5 points and 7.5 rebounds per game as a junior, helping the team to a 26-3 record in 2018-19.

A four-star recruit, Richardson was the No. 9 dual-threat quarterback in the 2020 recruiting class and the No. 30 recruit in Florida (No. 1 quarterback recruit in the state). As Richardson played high school football in the Gators’ backyard, newly hired head coach Dan Mullen extended a scholarship offer to him after his breakout sophomore year in the spring of 2018. A few months later, Richardson verbally committed. However, his recruitment started to increase during his junior year (including offers from Georgia, Michigan and Penn State), and Richardson decided to decommit from Florida to examine his options. After almost flipping to Penn State, he decided to stay home, recommit to Mullen and enroll early (graduated from Lofton in December 2019). Richardson was the first Gainesville-area quarterback to sign with Florida since Chris Stephens in 1999. After only one season as the Gators’ full-time starter, he opted out of the 2022 bowl game and elected to skip his final two seasons of eligibility to enter the 2023 NFL Draft.

PRO DAY	6042	246	32 5/8	10 1/2	80 1/8	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	(stood on Combine testing)

STRENGTHS: Big, twitchy athlete with rare arm strength (velocity and distance are both easy for him) ... drives his throws to every inch of the field and the ball gets on receivers fast ... efficient arm-action release for a big-bodied passer, regardless of platform ... displays a natural feel for downfield touch on his bucket throws ... promising eye use and made whole-field reads in college ... loose and agile to comfortably throw on the move and execute rollouts and boot action ... feels pressure in the pocket and is able to step up or make subtle slides/shuffles mid-read ... brawny frame and not an easy guy to tackle in the open field or pocket ... nifty runner (on scrambles or designed runs) with options to elude using his quickness or power (39 broken tackles in 2022 were the fourth-most in the FBS) ... looks like Cam Newton in short-yardage and goal-line situations and can be a powerful weapon on draws and zone reads ... explosive athlete (set the quarterback record with a 40.5-inch vertical at the combine) ... extraordinary speed for his size to pick up chunk yardage (had at least one 15-yard run in nine games in 2022) or hit home runs with downfield acceleration (six career runs of 45-plus yards) ... humble, hardworking and his coaches say he has the “required wiring” to digest and apply hard coaching.

WEAKNESSES: Up-and-down accuracy and still developing his pacing and placement as a passer (misses too many open receivers) ... breakdowns with his base, mechanics and release points disrupt his rhythm ... lacks consistency with some of the details, like throwing to the correct shoulder to lead receivers ... not every throw requires his fastball and he needs to learn how to control his ball speeds ... gets himself in trouble forcing things and is prone to JV-level mistakes at times ... undeveloped anticipation for routes about to come open ... his deep accuracy looks great one play and then misses by five yards the next ... eight career fumbles ... plays through pain, but he missed time because of injuries as a redshirt freshman, including a strained hamstring (September 2021), concussion (October 2021) and nagging pain in his right knee, which required arthroscopic surgery (December 2021); missed the final month of his senior year in high school with a right shoulder injury (October 2019) ... received a ticket for driving 105 mph at 4 a.m. (April 2022) and had to pay a fine and write an essay detailing what he learned from the incident ... started only 13 games in college with a sub-.500 record (6-7).

SUMMARY: A one-year starter at Florida, Richardson became the full-time starter as a redshirt sophomore in head coach Billy Napier’s play-action, outside-zone offense. His 2022 season was full of highs and lows (his 53.8 completion percentage accurately reflects his up-and-down play), although his supporting cast was equally inconsistent from game-to-game. An athletic, large-statured passer, Richardson has the arm to drill every throw imaginable with plus velocity, while also using his legs to be an explosive playmaker (had four 100-yard rushing games compared to only three 250-yard passing games). However, he has scattershot tendencies and is more of a see-it thrower, lacking anticipation and relying on his arm over repeatable footwork/mechanics (only 393 career pass attempts). Overall, Richardson’s volatile accuracy and decision-making cloud his evaluation, but he is a freakshow talent with special size, speed and arm strength, and he put enough promising plays on film to be optimistic about his potential ceiling. He fits an RPO or NFL vertical-passing offense that will also utilize his athleticism, but he needs on-field reps and a patient coaching staff willing to weather the early storm.

GRADE: 1st Round (No. 13 overall)

4. WILL LEVIS | Kentucky6037 | 229 lbs. | SSRMadison, Conn. (Xavier)6/27/1999 (age 23.83)#7

BACKGROUND: Will Levis, who has three sisters, was born in the Boston suburb of Newton, Mass. and grew up in North Attleborough, Mass., before his family moved to Madison when he was age 7. He started playing baseball, basketball and football in elementary school and was often coached by his father (Mike). Going into his eighth-grade year, Levis started working with Travis Meyer, a private quarterback coach in Connecticut. He enrolled at Xavier High School, an all-boys Catholic school in Middletown, and started to grab the attention of coaches as a freshman. Levis officially moved up to varsity as a sophomore and became the starter, passing for 676 yards and nine touchdowns over six games. As a junior in 2016, he accounted for 1,972 passing yards and 25 total touchdowns (19 passing, 6 rushing), while throwing only five interceptions. As a senior captain, Levis set a school record for passing yards (2,793) and passing touchdowns (27) and added six rushing scores. He was named first team All-Conference and second team All-State as a senior. Levis also lettered in baseball and carried a 4.0 GPA through high school.

A three-star recruit, Levis was the No. 28 pro-style quarterback in the 2018 recruiting class and the No. 2 recruit in Connecticut (CB Josh Jobe was No. 1). Playing in an area not known for producing high-level quarterbacks, his recruitment was lukewarm following his junior season. However, Levis attended Nike’s The Opening in April 2017 and became the first quarterback to win the Nike Football Rating MVP, with the highest score in the country among quarterbacks. After that camp, his recruitment went from stagnant to robust, as he received several offers from Ivy League (Dartmouth, Harvard, Princeton, Yale) and Power 5 programs (Florida State, Iowa, North Carolina, Ole Miss, Syracuse). However, Levis had his eye on Penn State because of the proximity to home, and he committed to James Franklin almost on the spot in July 2017, then stayed loyal to the Nittany Lions through signing day. After three seasons at Penn State, Levis found himself blocked on the depth chart by Sean Clifford and entered the transfer portal. He graduated from Penn State in only three years with a degree in finance (May 2021) and enrolled at Kentucky, where he is working on his master’s degree in finance. His father (Mike) was a receiver at Division III Denison (1986-1989). His mother (Beth) played soccer at Yale (1986-90) and was a two-time All-American. His younger sister (Jill) currently plays lacrosse at Central Connecticut State. His maternal grandfather (David Kelley) was the last three-sport varsity athlete at UMass, playing football, lacrosse and wrestling (he later coached at Yale). His great-grandfather (Alva Kelley) was an All-American defensive end at Cornell (1938-40) and later the head coach at Brown (1951-58), Colgate (1959-61) and Hobart (1963-70). His uncle (David Kelley) played football at Yale. Levis opted out of the 2022 bowl game and declined his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl.

PRO DAY	6037	231	32	10 1/2	78 3/8	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	(position drills only – choice)

STRENGTHS: Well-built athlete with impressive physical traits ... lightning-quick release with above-average velocity to drive the ball to every inch of the field ... strong in the pocket to brush off tackle attempts and make accurate, off-balanced throws ... stands tall versus the blitz and can withstand constant pressure ... improved pocket footwork in his drops and also his slides/shuffles to buy time ... composed and focused on money downs (71.6 percent completions on third downs in 2022) ... sells play fakes with conviction to draw coverage ... offers functional run skills and is a physical finisher to routinely pick up extra yardage after contact ... extremely high pain tolerance to bounce back and play through injuries ... super-competitive demeanor and not afraid to fail ... his high school and college coaches speak highly of his leadership, presence and intensity as a worker (NFL scout: “Football is really important to him.”) ... voted a team captain in both of his seasons at Kentucky and immediately became “the guy” when he arrived in Lexington (Kentucky OC Liam Coen: “The team feeds off of him. ... His personality is one of which that guys naturally follow.”) ... posted a 17-7 career record as a college starter (8-7 versus the SEC, 9-0 against non-SEC team) ... accounted for 43 passing touchdowns in his two seasons at Kentucky, which ranks No. 5 in school history.

WEAKNESSES: Average passing instincts, decision-making and accuracy ... doesn’t consistently trust his vision, creating too many hitches/pullbacks with his arm or disruptions in his base ... predetermines throws before reading ... will lock onto receivers and trusts the play design to a fault ... needs to refine his lower-body passing mechanics to keep all his movements on the same page ... inconsistent deep ball trajectory, often underthrowing his target ... his accuracy is passable, but ball placement must improve to help his receivers from having to adjust ... doesn’t throw receivers open and needs to anticipate windows quicker when asked to play in rhythm ... holds the ball too long and takes some unnecessary sacks, especially when late to read blitz ... missed one game as a senior because of a left foot injury (October 2022), which affected him over the second half of the season ... his production declined in 2022 with a new supporting cast.

SUMMARY: A two-year starter at Kentucky, Levis had a promising 2021 season in offensive coordinator Liam Coen’s scheme (31.8 points per game, 10 wins). However, he struggled with consistency in 2022, as the offense saw a complete makeover with Wan’Dale Robinson and multiple offensive linemen departing to the NFL and new play-caller Rich Scangarello taking over for Coen, who left to become the Los Angeles Rams’ offensive coordinator. Physically built for the pro game, Levis is strong in the pocket, moves very well for his size and has a power arm to deliver with velocity and accuracy from various platforms. However, defenses are too easily able to put doubt in his mind, which leads to forced or inaccurate throws because of hesitancy in his game. Overall, Levis needs more reps to continue developing his read efficiency and ball placement, but he has an NFL starter’s skill set with his impressive physical tools (size, arm, athleticism) and exceptional competitive toughness. Similarities with Carson Wentz should be considered both a positive and negative, but he has starter-level traits and upside.

GRADE: 1st Round (No. 14 overall)

5. HENDON HOOKER | Tennessee 6032 | 217 lbs. | 6SR Greensboro, N.C. (Dudley) 1/13/1998 (age 25.29) #5

BACKGROUND: Alan Hendon Hooker, who is the middle child of three, was born and raised in Greensboro. Though he played multiple sports throughout his childhood, he was born into a football family (his first word was “ball”) and groomed to play quarterback at a young age (he idolized Randall Cunningham). He was a star basketball and football player at Southwest Guilford Middle School before enrolling at James B. Dudley High School. Hooker was the backup quarterback (behind current NFL cornerback Emmanuel Moseley) as a freshman (Dudley won the state title that year) and became the varsity starter as a sophomore. As a junior, he recorded 2,234 passing yards, 1,217 rushing yards and 32 total touchdowns (17 passing, 15 rushing), leading Dudley to a 13-2 record and earning All-State honors. As a senior, Hooker led Dudley to the 2016 Class 4-A state championship (MVP of the title game with six touchdowns) and earned back-to-back All-State honors. He finished his prep career as Dudley’s all-time leading passer with 6,027 passing yards, 2,975 rushing yards and 103 total touchdowns (55 passing, 48 rushing). Hooker was a four-year letterman in basketball and earned All-Conference honors three times, while eclipsing 1,000 points in his career.

A four-star recruit, Hooker was the No. 11 dual-threat quarterback in the 2017 recruiting class and the No. 7 recruit in North Carolina (top quarterback recruit in the state). He grew up wanting to follow in his father’s footsteps at North Carolina A&T, which offered him a scholarship when he was still in middle school. However, several SEC and ACC schools started to show interest, including Clemson and Tennessee. Hooker narrowed down his final choice to North Carolina A&T, NC State, Notre Dame and Virginia Tech, and he committed to the Hokies after his junior season. Instead of enrolling early, he stayed at Dudley to play basketball as a senior. After 15 starts over four seasons in Blacksburg, Hooker graduated with a degree in public relations (December 2020) and entered the transfer portal, seeking a fresh start. He communicated with several potential destinations, including Colorado, NC State, Northwestern and Ohio State. Hooker couldn’t physically visit schools because of COVID, but he had visited Tennessee during his high school recruitment, and he committed to the Volunteers. Just weeks after he arrived in Knoxville, Jeremy Pruitt was fired as Tennessee’s head coach because of NCAA violations. Hooker, however, had a relationship with new head coach Josh Heupel, who had recruited him in high school when Heupel was the offensive coordinator at Missouri. Hooker took advantage of the NCAA’s extra year of eligibility because of the COVID pandemic and returned for a sixth season in 2022. His father (Alan) played quarterback at North Carolina A&T (1984-87), set 15 school records and was enshrined in both the MEAC and North Carolina A&T Halls of Fame. He went undrafted in the 1988 NFL Draft but spent training camp that year with the Dallas Cowboys. Hooker’s mother (Wendy) also attended North Carolina A&T (Alan and Wendy have been married 31 years). His younger brother (Alston) is a rising sophomore quarterback at North Carolina A&T. Hendon and Alston co-authored a book “The ABCs of Scripture for Athletes.” His older sister (Nile) also attended North Carolina A&T and graduated in 2018. Hooker accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl but was unable to participate because of his knee injury.

STRENGTHS: Highly efficient passer ... clean load and delivery with a smooth stroke ... shows a natural feel for trajectory and pacing on his deep ball (led the FBS with 27 completions of 30-plus yards in 2022) ... shows the pocket presence to find cleaner platforms with his quick-reaction movements ... instinctive athlete and displays open-field elusiveness and acceleration (combined 45 rushes of 10-plus yards over the last two seasons) ... showed a better feel on his 2022 tape for manipulating safeties with his eyes ... played in a quarterback-friendly offense, but not a basic offense (protection calls, option routes, etc.) and showed full ownership at the line of scrimmage with excellent communication ... leaner features, but his toughness is off the charts ... “First one in, last one out” sounds cliché, but that is the reality with Hooker’s mindset and work ethic (Tennessee head coach Josh Heupel: “When you walk into this building, you’re going to feel his energy and passion every single day.”) ... set the Tennessee record for consecutive pass attempts without an interception (261, third-longest streak in SEC history) ... needed only two seasons to rank top-five in Tennessee history with 58 career touchdown passes.

WEAKNESSES: Simplified college offense with heavy-play action (53.6 percent of his dropbacks in 2022) ... too many passes sail, forcing receivers to work for the catch ... his decision-making often feels predetermined in Tennessee’s offense ... quick to check down and needs to improve his timing from read to read ... the smallest hints of pressure will draw him out of the pocket ... late to locate blitzers and can be surprised by pressures ... fumbled 39 times in college, including 22 times over his two seasons at Tennessee ... older prospect and will be 25 when he is drafted (was in the same high school recruiting class as Tua Tagovailoa, who is about to enter his fourth NFL season) ... his medical reports will be important after he suffered a torn ACL in his left knee (November 2022), which sidelined him for most of the pre-draft process ... additional medical info: tested positive for COVID (August 2020), which let to further tests and revealed a potential heart condition; deemed a “false alarm” after a procedure and he missed only two games; he suffered an convulsing episode (couldn’t stop shaking for 2.5 hours) on the sidelines a few months later (December 2020), which Hooker blamed on medication from the heart procedure.

SUMMARY: A two-year starter at Tennessee, Hooker thrived in head coach Josh Heupel’s offense, which is an offspring of Art Briles’ system (spacing and fast tempo to put defenses in conflict). After an inconsistent tenure at Virginia Tech, he reinvented himself in Knoxville (was the Heisman Trophy favorite at the time of his ACL injury late in the 2022 season) and finished his college career with 105 total touchdowns and 11,057 yards of total offense. Hooker gets the ball out on time with a smooth delivery and does a great job moving the pocket (play-action, rollouts, boots) to change his launch point. With basic half-field and high-to-low reads, his college production and efficiency were aided by the Vols’ quarterback-friendly offense, so there is a learning curve awaiting him in the NFL. Overall, Hooker must refine his internal clock and progression reads, but his instinctive athleticism, football character and poised decision-making amid chaos are appealing traits. He projects as a developmental passer with down-the-road starting potential, as long as his knee is healthy.

GRADE: 2nd Round (No. 49 overall)

6. JAKE HAENER | Fresno State 5115 | 207 lbs. | 6SR Danville, Calif. (Monte Vista) 3/10/1999 (age 24.13) #9

BACKGROUND: Jake Haener (HAY-ner), eldest of two boys, was born and raised in the Bay Area and started playing football at the pee-wee level. He established himself as one of the top, up-and-coming area quarterbacks in the sixth grade and enrolled at Monte Vista High School in Danville. Haener became the starting quarterback as a sophomore and threw for 2,483 yards, 18 touchdowns and 10 interceptions. As a junior, he led Monte Vista to the playoffs and finished with 64.8 percent completions, 3,005 yards, 35 touchdowns and six interceptions. As a senior, Haener led the Mustangs to a 12-1 record and the North Coast Section Division I Championship. He earned first team All-Section and All-Bay honors with 2,976 passing yards and 43 total touchdowns (37 passing, six rushing). Haener finished his prep career with 8,464 passing yards and a school-record 90 touchdown passes over 35 games. He played baseball as a freshman before deciding to focus on football. Haener is also a scratch golfer.

A three-star recruit, Haener was the No. 25 pro-style quarterback in the 2017 recruiting class and the No. 62 recruit in California. He picked up a handful of FBS (Akron, FAU, Hawaii, Toledo) and FCS (Eastern Washington, Northern Colorado) offers, but he stayed patient for Pac-12 offers. The summer prior to his senior year, Washington (his mother and grandfather’s alma mater) offered him and Haener committed to head coach Chris Petersen. After redshirting in 2017 and serving as Jake Browning’s backup in 2018, Haener felt like he’d won the quarterback battle during 2019 fall camp, but the Huskies named five-star transfer Jacob Eason the starter. Within 24 hours of the decision, Haener transferred out and landed at Fresno State, where he reconnected with head coach Jeff Tedford, who had been a mentor to him since Haener’s pee-wee days. While Tedford resigned after the 2019 season, Haener became the starter for head coach Kalen DeBoer in 2020 and ‘21. Haener decided to take advantage of the extra year of eligibility and return for a sixth college season. After DeBoer left to take the head coaching job at Washington, he entered the transfer portal, with many assuming he would follow DeBoer and return to Seattle. But he decided to stay at Fresno State when Tedford was rehired as the Bulldogs’ head coach. Jake’s father (Ryan) was a high school quarterback and safety at Fresno Bullard, where he was teammates with Kevin Sweeney, who was a record-setting quarterback at Fresno State (Jake wore Sweeney’s retired No. 9 Bulldogs’ jersey). Jake’s mother (Julie) competed in equestrian and is a well-known television journalist who has worked for KTVU, the FOX affiliate in San Francisco, for 26 years. His parents started dating after meeting at a Fresno State game in the early ‘90s. Haener graduated with his degree in communications. He accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl.

STRENGTHS: Efficient field-reader and routinely finds his third or fourth progression on the play ... twitchy trigger when he sees his window come open ... has enough arm to make opposite-hash throws ... above-average timing and accuracy in the short-to-intermediate part of the field ... able to layer over linebackers or in-between safeties ... has a great feel for coverage spacing and trusts his receivers to be in the right place at the right time ... comfortable throwing under duress, skillfully eluding pressure or changing arm angles to find a passing lane ... throws well on designed rollouts or scrambles ... his fumbles dropped from seven in 2021 to just two in 2022 ... resilient, fearless competitor (see: 2021 UCLA tape) and his toughness sets the standard in the program (NFL scout: “His guys gladly go to war with him because he puts his ass on the line every play.”) ... voted a three-time team captain by his teammates (Tedford: “To be on the field every single day with him and to see how focused he is, it’s unbelievable. The way he prepares and what this means to him, his discipline, his purpose, the whole bit.”) ... finished fourth in school history in career passing yards (9,120).

WEAKNESSES: Undersized frame and doesn’t have desired height, built or growth potential ... doesn’t have a power arm and struggles to consistently zip the ball, giving defenders a chance to drive on throws ... some of his balls flutter and struggle to cut through the wind ... inconsistent trajectory and placement on deep passes outside the numbers (33.3 percent completions in 2022) ... becomes overly reliant on check-down options at times ... missed four games as a super senior because of a right ankle fracture (September 2022); played through several other injuries, including an oblique injury suffered versus UCLA (September 2021).

SUMMARY: A three-year starter at Fresno State, Haener was productive in the Bulldogs’ spread RPO scheme under longtime mentor Jeff Tedford and led the program to the 2022 Mountain West Championship. He played at a high level in five career starts against Pac-12 opponents: 67.7 percent completions, 302 passing yards per game and eight total touchdowns, including a legendary comeback performance at UCLA in 2021. As a rhythm passer, Haener throws receivers open and displays a natural feel for placement, putting the ball away from the leverage of the defender. With his field vision, gutsy instincts and play confidence, he doesn’t wilt versus pressure and consistently finds answers when blitzed. Overall, Haener doesn’t have premium size or arm strength by NFL standards, but he helps compensate for his average physical tools with passing anticipation, natural accuracy and the competitive toughness to keep plays alive. As long as he is healthy, he has the mental makeup and instincts to be a resourceful NFL backup in the mold of Taylor Heinicke.

GRADE: 4th Round

7. AIDAN O'CONNELL | Purdue6033 | 213 lbs. | 6SRLong Grove, Ill. (Stevenson)9/1/1998 (age 24.66)#16

BACKGROUND: Aidan O’Connell, one of six children in his family, grew up in the Chicago suburbs, where he was a multi-sport athlete. Although basketball was his passion throughout middle school, he started playing quarterback in the third grade and was teammates with future Purdue WR Charlie Jones on the Buffalo Grove Bisons (also played baseball with Jones). O’Connell attended Adlai Stevenson High School in Lincolnshire (30 miles north of downtown Chicago), where his focus shifted to football. At age 13, he started working with former NFL quarterback and well-respected quarterback coach Jeff Christensen. O’Connell spent most of his first three seasons in high school quarterbacking the junior varsity team, although he was called up to varsity as a sophomore and was a reserve on Stevenson’s undefeated 2014 state championship team. As a junior, he served as the backup quarterback to Jack Sorenson, who signed with Miami (Ohio) after the 2015 season. As a senior, O’Connell made his varsity starting debut and set school records for passing yards (2,741) and touchdown passes (26), completing 61.6 percent of his throws (183-for-297) and tossing seven interceptions. He earned Class 8A All-State honors and also set the school’s single-game record for passing yards (447) in a win over against highly-ranked Muskegon (Mich.), which was Stevenson’s first game out of state. O’Connell was a multi-year starter for the basketball team at Stevenson and led the team in assists as a senior. He is also an avid golfer (8 handicap).

A no-star recruit, O’Connell was late to the recruiting scene with only one season of varsity experience. He received a few walk-on opportunities (Illinois and Northwestern) and heard from Ivy League schools (he graduated with a 4.1 GPA), but he didn’t have any Division I scholarship offers. His lone offer came from Division II Davenport (Mich.), but his older brother was a defensive lineman at Division III Wheaton College and O’Connell initially committed to join him. However, then recently-hired Purdue head coach Jeff Brohm made a late push and brought O’Connell to West Lafayette as a preferred walk-on. O’Connell was later put on scholarship in the summer of 2019. In July 2022, O’Connell married Jael (JAY-elle) Johnson, who was a four-year letterwinner for Purdue volleyball. His mother (Kathy) was involved in a serious car accident in June 2020, requiring intensive rehab and multiple surgeries. His older brother (Patrick) played at Ball State (2015) before transferring to Wheaton (2016-19). His younger brother (Liam) was a defensive lineman at FCS-level Valparaiso (2018-21). His younger brother (Seamus) just completed his freshman year as a quarterback at Wheaton. He also has a young sister (Grace) and an older brother (Sean), who recently passed away (November 2022). O’Connell graduated with his degree in general management and also earned his master’s degree in technology, leadership and innovation (May 2022). He opted out of Purdue’s 2022 bowl game but accepted his invitation to the 2023 East-West Shrine Bowl.

PRO DAY	6033	210	32	9 3/4	76 1/2	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	(position drills only – choice)

STRENGTHS: Accurate passer and shows a natural feel for downfield touch ... delivers with adequate velocity when he can generate torque through his hips ... processes things quickly, and his intelligence shows on and off the field (32 on the Wonderlic) ... does a nice job leading receivers and anticipating windows ... not going to extend plays with his legs, but has shown improvement sliding in a muddy pocket ... sustains his accuracy on designed sprints/rollouts ... comfortable hurrying his throws from different platforms, when required ... stares down the gun barrel and makes throws ... a lot of five-man protections in the Purdue offense and the coaches trust him to make the right reads pre- and post-snap ... mature (recently married), and his coaches say he is universally loved in the program (NFL scout: “Very coachable and believes in the work. Intangibles like that, you can tell he was raised right.”) ... wants to be an NFL chaplain after his playing days ... finalist for the 2022 Burlsworth Trophy (top former walk-on) ... had no trouble producing in Purdue’s offense and finished top five in almost every school passing category (14 career 300-yard passing performances ranks second-best in school history, two behind Drew Brees).

WEAKNESSES: Narrow frame with a lean lower body ... guilty of forcing passes into crowded areas and giving defenders a chance to make plays ... routinely stares down his intended target and doesn’t use much eye manipulation ... struggles to drive the ball without engagement from his hips or lower half ... drops his eyes, clams up and ball placement falters when he feels the rush ... will have some mechanical breakdowns versus pressure, falling off throws ... wasn’t asked to read the entire field ... not a rush threat and picking up yards with his legs will never be a strength of his game ... inconsistent downfield passer on his 2022 tape (his completion percentage on throws of 20-plus yards dropped from 52.7 percent in 2021 to 28.8 percent in 2022) ... older prospect and will turn 25 during his NFL rookie season ... missed final three games of the 2020 season with a toe injury and missed one game as a senior because of a rib injury (September 2022).

SUMMARY: A three-year starter at Purdue, O’Connell was productive in former head coach Jeff Brohm’s quarterback-friendly, spread offense (play action, spacing concepts, etc.). Just a one-year starter in high school, he went from a walk-on and the Boilermakers’ ninth-string quarterback to one of the best passers in Purdue history, setting the school-record for career completion percentage (66.67 percent). O’Connell sees the field well (even if he only uses half of it) and can throw receivers open with his anticipation and ability to layer the ball. However, he is inconsistent handling pressure and needs to better abide by the quarterback Hippocratic Oath (keep team from harm), often locking onto reads and telegraphing where he wants to go. Overall, O’Connell isn’t a quick-twitch mover or thrower and is guilty of trying to get away with throws he knows he shouldn’t make, but he is strong-minded, accurate and touches the ball up at every level of the field. He has the skills and intangibles of a capable backup in the NFL.

GRADE: 4th Round

8. JAREN HALL | BYU6001 | 207 lbs. | 5SRSpanish Fork, Utah (Maple Mountain)3/24/1998 (age 25.09)#3

BACKGROUND: Jaren Hall, the second of five children, grew up in Spanish Fork (just south of Provo) and was a multi-sport standout throughout his childhood. He enrolled at Maple Mountain High School, where he was a three-year letterman at quarterback. As a junior, Hall was named first team All-Region with 2,375 passing yards and 17 total touchdowns (16 passing, one rushing). He earned honorable mention All-State honors as a senior and led Maple Mountain to the 2015 playoffs, recording 1,336 passing yards and 17 total touchdowns (13 passing, four rushing). Hall finished his prep career with 5,768 total yards and 59 total touchdowns. He also lettered in basketball (averaged 10.3 points and 3.3 rebounds per game as a senior) and baseball (first team All-State as a junior and senior, with a .370 batting average, eight home runs, 54 RBI and 29 stolen bases).

A three-star recruit, Hall was the No. 20 dual-threat quarterback in the 2016 recruiting class and the No. 6 recruit in Utah. He was lightly recruited and committed to BYU over Utah. A few weeks after his high school graduation, Hall moved to Roseville, Calif., where he served a two-year mission as a member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. He joined the BYU football team in 2018 and served as Zach Wilson’s backup in 2019 and 2020. Hall also played as an outfielder on the BYU baseball team in 2019 and 2020 and posted a .245 batting average, two home runs and 11 RBI over 30 games. Hall married his wife (Breanna) in December 2019 and they welcomed their daughter (Jayda) in July 2021. Jaren’s father (Kalin) was a junior college All-American at Dixie College before transferring to BYU, where he combined for 1,359 rushing yards and 13 touchdowns over two seasons (1992-93). Jaren’s mother (Hollie) was a gymnast at BYU (1993). Kalin and Hollie were married in June 1993. Jaren’s older brother (KJ) played running back at BYU (2015-17). His younger brother (Dawson) is currently an outfielder on the BYU baseball team. His younger brother (Kyson) is currently a wide receiver at BYU and just finished his freshman season in 2022. Hall accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl.

STRENGTHS: Athletic and quick-footed ... very efficient in the RPO game and on play-action-boots ... spins the ball well on the move and his arm strength looked better on his 2022 tape ... controlled mechanics in the pocket or in motion, with a clean, compact release ... displays workable ball placement on pitch-and-catch and bucket throws ... cunning as a scrambler and when buying time (sacked just 12 times in 2022) ... fully functioning internal clock and not afraid to throw the ball away (7.6 percent of his attempts in 2022 were throwaways, which ranked No. 2 among qualifying FBS quarterbacks) ... well-built and strong for his shorter stature ... mature and married with a family (Blake Freeland: “He’s very selfless and a great leader.”) ... competitive, multi-year team captain and was raised to be a leader.

WEAKNESSES: Shorter than ideal with a history of injuries ... inconsistent deep-ball accuracy and his receivers are often waiting for the football ... accuracy suffers when forced to reset his feet/eyes on the move ... when he misses, it is usually high ... it will be tougher for him to make defenders miss in the NFL than it was in college ... needs to take better care of the football, having accounted for more fumbles (13) at BYU than interceptions (11) ... his durability is a question mark: missed five games in 2019 because of multiple concussions; redshirted in 2020 because of a hip injury; missed two games as a junior with a rib/core injury (September 2021); missed time as a senior because of a right ankle injury (November 2022) ... turns 25 before draft weekend.

SUMMARY: A two-year starter at BYU, Hall was a multi-sport athlete for the Cougars and played in offensive coordinator Aaron Roderick’s balanced scheme. The first African-American starting quarterback in school history, he replaced Zach Wilson and posted an outstanding 51-to-11 touchdown-to-interception ratio the past two seasons. A compactly-built athlete with strong character, Hall is poised in the pocket and a smooth operator on the move to make plays with his arm or legs. He won’t benefit from as many scheme-winners at the next level and will need to improve his passing anticipation to push the ball versus NFL defenses. Overall, Hall is a cerebral, dual-threat passer with above average control and efficiency in his process, but his average arm talent, short stature and injury history are potential road blocks. He has NFL backup potential in an RPO-based, play-action offense.

GRADE: 4th-5th Round

9. TANNER MCKEE | Stanford

6062 | 231 lbs. | 3SO

Corona, Calif. (Centennial)

#18

BACKGROUND: Tanner McKee, the second of four children, was born in Irvine and grew up in Corona, where he played multiple sports (baseball, basketball, football and volleyball). He enrolled at Centennial High School, where he played junior varsity as a freshman and was the backup quarterback on varsity as a sophomore in 2015. Towards the end of his sophomore year, McKee had a mole on his forehead test positive for melanoma (skin cancer runs in his family), which required surgery (June 2016) to remove the cancer and two lymph nodes. A few months later, he became the starting quarterback as a junior and posted 3,755 passing yards, 539 rushing yards and 56 total touchdowns (39 passing, 17 rushing), earning second team All-State and Conference Player of the Year honors. As a senior, McKee led Centennial to a 12-1 season (only loss came in the playoffs to Mater Dei) and another conference championship. He finished his final season with 2,150 passing yards, 675 rushing yards and 34 total touchdowns (23 passing, 11 rushing), earning All-State and All-Conference honors. McKee, who had a 21-4 record as a starter, finished his prep career as the school’s all-time leader in completion percentage (73.0 percent) and second in career passing yards. He also lettered in basketball and volleyball at Centennial.

A four-star recruit, McKee was the No. 3 pro-style quarterback in the 2018 recruiting class (No. 46 recruit overall) and the No. 7 recruit in California (No. 2 quarterback in the state behind JT Daniels). A member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, his father (Jeremie) spent time as a missionary in New Zealand and Tanner always planned to serve a missionary trip when he was 18 (it isn’t required, but strongly encouraged). McKee was upfront with college recruiters about his plans, but that didn’t scare off dozens of the nation’s top programs (like Alabama, Georgia, Notre Dame, Texas, USC, etc.) from offering him a full-ride. His father graduated from BYU, where he met his wife and Tanner’s mom (Layna), but Tanner was drawn to Stanford because of the balance of academics and athletics. He signed with head coach David Shaw and then left for a 21-month missionary trip in Brazil. McKee returned to the United States prior to the 2020 season and was a reserve behind Davis Mills, then took over as the Cardinal starter in 2021. He married his wife (Lauren) in June 2022 in Newport Beach. With Shaw resigning after the 2022 season, McKee decided to skip his final two seasons of eligibility and enter the 2023 NFL Draft.

STRENGTHS: Tall, projectable frame and sees the field well ... can drive the ball with placement on slants and in-breakers ... has a good feel for touch on fades and outs ... his accuracy is above average when he sets his feet and stays balanced through delivery ... will come off his first read to work progressions ... shows promising pocket awareness with efficient strides in his drops and climbs ... experienced with three-, five- and seven-step drops ... stands in the face of pressure with admirable toughness ... competes with a steady, even-keeled demeanor and his coaches praise his intelligence and intangibles ... set a Stanford freshman record with 19 total touchdowns (15 passing, four rushing).

WEAKNESSES: Limited athlete and not a rush threat ... doesn’t have the elusive footwork to consistently make rushers miss in the pocket ... one of only eight FBS quarterbacks to be sacked 40-plus times in 2022 (several being his fault) ... when pressured and moved off his spot, his effectiveness quickly declines ... his long levers create a long, often low delivery (ball comes out shoulder level) ... inconsistent in the medium part of the field ... needs to take better care of the football (nine fumbles the past two seasons) ... won only six games in 21 career games as the starter (6-15 record) ... missed two games because of a left knee injury (November 2021) and wore a brace ... older prospect (turns 23 on draft weekend) for his experience level.

SUMMARY: A two-year starter at Stanford, McKee played in former offensive coordinator Tavita Pritchard’s pro-style scheme and split his snaps from under center and shotgun. Although his starting production is underwhelming (Stanford finished 109th in scoring offense in 2022), his stats actually look better than expected after studying his tape and seeing the inconsistent pieces around him. A pro-style pocket passer, McKee has an NFL arm with the ball placement and field vision to move the football when everything stays on schedule. However, he is unproven as a three-level passing threat who can also handle pressure. Overall, McKee is an accurate rhythm passer and prepped in a multiple-read offense, but there weren’t many second-chance plays on tape and his lack of mobility will be tough to overcome versus next-level speed. His NFL projection is similar to that of Mike Glennon coming out of college.

GRADE: 5th Round

10. CLAYTON TUNE | Houston

6024 | 220 lbs. | 5SR

Carrollton, Texas (Hebron)

#3

BACKGROUND: John “Clayton” Tune, the youngest child in his family, grew up in Celina, where he started playing quarterback at the pee-wee level. When Tune was age 7, his older brother (Nathan) led Celina High School to an undefeated 16-0 season and the 2005 state championship. Nathan went on to play at North Texas (2006-10), then was a high school assistant after his playing days and allowed Clayton to be a ball boy and practice with older players when he was in middle school. As an eighth grader at McMath Middle School in Denton, Clayton Tune led the team to a championship. He enrolled at Denton Ryan High School, a successful program in North Texas, where he was expected to compete for the starting job with another fellow freshman (Spencer Sanders, who would go on to play at Oklahoma State). However, Tune broke both of his wrists in a freak basketball accident prior to the 2014 season and Sanders was the clear starter. The coaches wanted to shift Tune to safety, but the family decided to move to nearby Carrollton, where Tune enrolled at Hebron High School and became the starting quarterback as a sophomore, posting 1,825 passing yards and 24 total touchdowns. As a junior, he was named District Player of the Year with 2,445 passing yards, 512 rushing yards and 30 total touchdowns (22 passing, 8 rushing). As a senior, Tune led Hebron to the playoffs for the third straight year (they lost to Allen, the eventual 2017 state champions) and finished with 2,416 passing yards, 368 rushing yards and 33 total touchdowns (23 passing, nine rushing, one kickoff return). He finished his prep career with 6,686 passing yards, 1,074 rushing yards and 86 total touchdowns (66 passing, 20 rushing). Tune also ran track as a sophomore (hurdles and jumps).

A three-star recruit, Tune was the No. 35 pro-style quarterback in the 2018 recruiting class and the No. 115 recruit in Texas (No. 6 QB in the state; Spencer Sanders was No. 1). He initially committed to Kansas after his junior season but backed out eight months later, amid his senior year, when he picked up offers from Houston, Ole Miss and UCF. Tune still considered Kansas but signed with the Cougars and head coach Major Applewhite and enrolled early in January 2018. He was expecting to redshirt in 2018 but was forced onto the field after starter D’Eriq King suffered a serious knee injury. Tune entered the 2019 season as the backup, but he stepped into the starting role after four games when King elected to sit out the rest of the season and take a redshirt. He took advantage of the extra year of eligibility because of COVID and returned for a fifth season in 2022. His father (Steve) is a former professional Motocross driver. Tune graduated with his degree in business administration in finance. He initially accepted an invitation to the 2023 East-West Shrine Bowl before flipping to the Senior Bowl.

STRENGTHS: Good-sized athlete and operates well on the move (led all quarterbacks with a 6.89 three-cone at the combine), both inside and outside of the pocket ... balanced passer with NFL-worthy accuracy, regardless of platform ... three-quarter delivery with outstanding placement on deep outs ... functional arm strength ... instinctive pocket presence to slide, climb and work around the noise ... trusts his internal clock and has a feel for buying just enough time for routes to come open ... comfortable picking up first downs with his feet (35 first downs as a runner in 2022) ... three-time team captain, as voted by his teammates, and has earned respect from his peers (Houston assistant coach: “It makes it easy when your best player is also your hardest worker – that’s him.”) ... takes the game very seriously with developed physical and mental toughness (went through the ringer in college and battled adversity) ... finished his career No. 2 in school history (behind Case Keenum) in passing touchdowns (104) and total touchdowns (119).

WEAKNESSES: Too many low-percentage decisions on his film ... doesn't shy from tossing up 50-50 balls to see what happens and trusts his receivers (or his arm) too much ... eye discipline is not a strength, bird-dogging his desired read and telegraphing throws ... doesn't have high-level arm power and his passes lose noticeable life when he attempts to make off-balance attempts ... will run into pressure at times in the pocket ... his field vision and read timing stand to improve ... stayed durable in college but had a few issues in high school, including a right leg injury during the playoffs as a junior (November 2016).

SUMMARY: A four-year starter at Houston, Tune showed clear development over his time in college and thrived in Dana Holgorsen's version of the Air Raid offense. Tune returned for a fifth season in 2022 and set the AAC record with 40 passing touchdowns, third-most in the FBS (behind Caleb Williams and C.J. Stroud). With his mental fortitude and clutch gene, Tune consistently played his best late in games and executed regardless of the moment. Although he forces throws at times, especially when going big-play hunting, he plays well in rhythm and trusts his internal clock to know when to bail or get the ball out. Overall, Tune will face a learning curve as his decision-making and eye discipline translate to the pro game, but he is a natural passer with functional mobility, accuracy and intangibles worthy of the NFL game. He has the necessary tools to become a backup and spot starter at the next level.

GRADE: 5th-6th Round

11. STETSON BENNETT | Georgia 5113 | 192 lbs. | 6SR Blackshear, Ga. (Pierce County) 10/28/1997 (age 25.50) #13

BACKGROUND: Stetson Bennett IV, the oldest of five children, was born in Atlanta and started football training at age 3. His family moved to Brantley County (southeastern part of Georgia) when he was in first grade, and he played baseball and football. At age 12, Bennett played quarterback and defensive back for the Brantley Bandits, a competitive travel team coached by his father. When Bennett was in eighth grade, the family moved from Brantley County to Pierce County and he enrolled at Pierce County High School in Blackshear, Ga. After becoming the starting quarterback as a sophomore, he was named the Offensive Player of the Year as a junior with 2,924 passing yards, 547 rushing yards and 29 total touchdowns (18 passing, 11 rushing). As a senior, Bennett earned second team All-State and Region Offensive Player of the Year honors, finishing with 3,724 passing yards, 490 rushing yards and 46 total touchdowns (40 passing, six rushing). He finished his prep career ninth in Georgia high school history in both passing yards (9,091) and passing touchdowns (95). Bennett also lettered in baseball and was the starting shortstop and leadoff hitter.

A two-star recruit, Bennett was the No. 104 pro-style quarterback in the 2017 recruiting class and the No. 286 recruit in Georgia. Prior to his senior year, he traveled over 4,000 miles across the country to various camps, in an effort to earn an Elite 11 finals invite (he received the nickname "Mailman" because he wore a U.S. Postal Service hat at each competition as a way to stand out). His first offer was from FCS-level Mercer, and he was recruited by several Ivy League programs (scored 30 on his ACT). Bennett finished with two FBS offers (Georgia Southern and Middle Tennessee State), but he grew up attending Georgia games (more than 90 of them throughout his childhood) and accepted a preferred walk-on spot with the Bulldogs. After redshirting in 2017, Bennett participated in 2018 spring practices but was blocked on the depth chart by Jake Fromm and Justin Fields, so he left the program. He enrolled at Jones County Junior College in Ellisville, Miss. where he led the team to a 10-win season with 20 total touchdowns. Considered a three-star juco recruit, Bennett initially committed to head coach Billy Napier at Louisiana. With Fields looking to transfer, though, Georgia brought Bennett back to Athens – this time on scholarship (he was the lowest-ranked recruit in the Bulldogs' 24-player class in 2019). After spending the 2019 season as Fromm's backup, Bennett found himself in a crowded quarterback room in 2020 with freshman D'Wan Mathis and transfers Jamie Newman (Wake Forest) and J.T. Daniels (USC). Because of opt-outs and injuries, Bennett finally got his chance to start a month into the 2020 season, although Daniels finished the year as the starter. Daniels and Bennett shared the quarterback duties over the first month of the 2021 season, before Bennett emerged as the full-time guy and started his last 26 games for the Bulldogs. His parents met and graduated from the Georgia College of Pharmacy (they now own seven pharmacies). His father (Stetson III) was a walk-on quarterback at Georgia Southern (1989) before transferring to Georgia. His grandfather (Buddy Bennett) was a running back at South Carolina (1958-60) and later coached at Tennessee (defensive backs) and Arkansas (defensive coordinator). Bennett is scheduled to graduate in May with his degree in economics (December 2022). He declined his invitation to the 2023 East-West Shrine Bowl.

STRENGTHS: Average arm, but can make opposite-hash throws because of clean mechanics and quick stroke (makes use of his short arms) ... poised competitor and trusts the design of the offense ... anticipates and throws before his targets are out of their breaks ... delivers with touch and trajectory ... displays a natural feel in the pocket and senses pressures ... has a knack for finding clear sightlines ... throws well on the move and is a better athlete than expected (one of 12 FBS quarterbacks with 10-plus rushing touchdowns in 2022) ... self-starter with unquestioned toughness ... accustomed to overcoming hurdles and surpassing expectations (head coach Kirby Smart: "He didn't cry, pout, leave or transfer. He just kept working and working and when he got the opportunity, he took advantage of it.") ... finished his career top five in school history in completions (601), passing yards (8,428) and touchdown passes (66) ... finished with a 29-3 record as a starter.

WEAKNESSES: Undersized with a smaller stature and modest build ... not a power thrower ... inconsistent timing on intermediate-to-deep throws and guilty of hanging the ball in the air ... his accuracy will falter under pressure, forcing his receivers to work for it ... gets stuck on his primary target and his eyes need continued refinement ... older prospect and will turn 26 as an NFL rookie ... production was aided by defined reads and heavy play action ...NFL scouts say he is "hardheaded" and will clash with coaches at times ... arrested for public intoxication (January 2023) during his pre-draft preparation in Dallas.

SUMMARY: A three-year starter at Georgia, Bennett was groomed in offensive coordinator Todd Monken’s play-action based offense. From walk-on to juco to Bulldogs’ backup to starter to back-to-back national championships, his college career has been a Hollywood script, and he leaves Georgia as one of the most accomplished players in school history (he started four College Football Playoff Games and was named MVP of all of them). Aside from his impressive college resume, Bennett is quick-footed and efficient with the game-manager qualities to operate an NFL offense. He throws with touch when in rhythm, but he doesn’t have the arm to drive the ball into tight windows and his accuracy will waver under pressure. Overall, Bennett is a smallish passer who doesn’t have the physical traits that most NFL teams seek at the position, but he is a sound decision-maker with the competitive temperament and make-it attitude that translate to his on-field play. He is ideally suited for a move-based NFL offense in which he can be a No. 2/No. 3.

12. DORIAN THOMPSON-ROBINSON | UCLA 6015 | 203 lbs. | 5SR Las Vegas, Nev. (Gorman) 11/14/1999 (age 23.45) #1

BACKGROUND: Dorian Thompson-Robinson, the middle child of three, was born in Columbia, S.C. while his mother (Marva), a college professor and administrator, was working on her doctorate at South Carolina. They then lived in Tallahassee before moving to Las Vegas, and Thompson-Robinson started playing football at age 7. He attended Bishop Gorman High School, a private Catholic school and football powerhouse, and likely would have started as a freshman at most other schools. However, he was stuck behind Tate Martell, who signed with Ohio State, on the quarterback depth chart. He was relegated to backup duties his first three years of high school while also seeing some time at wide receiver (eight receiving touchdowns). As a senior, Thompson-Robinson became the starter and completed 68.8 percent of his passes (176-for-256) for 3,275 yards and 38-to-3 touchdown-to-interception ratio. He added seven rushing touchdowns. He was named an Under Armour All-American and led Bishop Gorman to a 13-win season and the 2017 state championship.

A four-star recruit, Thompson-Robinson was the No. 2 dual-threat quarterback in the 2018 recruiting class (behind Justin Fields) and the No. 3 recruit in Nevada (behind his high school teammates Palaie Gaoteote IV and Brevin Jordan). Despite attempting just 48 passes over his first three high school seasons, he shined at recruiting camps and picked up several notable offers before he became a starter, including from Alabama, Georgia, LSU, Michigan, South Carolina, Tennessee, UCLA and Utah. His final decision came down to Michigan (his mother’s alma mater) and UCLA, and he committed to the head coach Jim Mora Jr. and the Bruins in April 2017. Despite a coaching change at UCLA midway through the 2017 season, Thompson-Robinson stayed committed to the Bruins and new head coach Chip Kelly, becoming the top-ranked recruit in UCLA’s 2018 class. He took advantage of the extra year of eligibility and returned to the program for a fifth season in 2022. During the pandemic, he trained with his older brother (Christopher), who is a professional MMA fighter. Thompson-Robinson graduated with his degree (December 2022). He accepted his invitation to the 2023 East-West Shrine Bowl.

STRENGTHS: Quick, twitchy release, regardless if he is stationary or on the move ... above-average arm strength and spins lasers with proper weight transfer ... naturally accurate in the short-to-intermediate game ... displays playmaking instincts with his legs and arm ... terrific skill as a runner and shows a timely understanding for when to keep passing plays alive or take off as a ball carrier ... has elusive qualities once he reaches the open field and is a true dual-threat (one of only two FBS quarterbacks with 25-plus passing touchdowns and 11-plus rushing touchdowns in 2022) ... boasts the toughness, both physical and mental, to power through adversity (head coach Chip Kelly: “He’s the toughest kid I’ve ever been around.”) ... plays through minor injuries and set the UCLA record for quarterback starts (48), finishing with a winning record (25-23) as a starter.

WEAKNESSES: Slight frame, thin torso and lacks ideal body mass ... gets tunnel vision as a passer and doesn’t see all 11 defenders on the field ... plays frenetic in the pocket and will lose his bearings ... more comfortable escaping the pocket instead of climbing/sliding ... guilty of unnecessarily speeding up his process and dropping his eyes too quickly ... confused footwork creates uneven platforms, making throws more difficult than they should be ... puts too much air on his deep balls with inconsistent downfield placement ... his ball security must improve (10 fumbles in 2022, 39 fumbles in his career) ... despite staying on the field in college, his body type will lead to durability concerns with teams; missed one game as a sophomore because of a leg injury (September 2019); missed one game after injuring the thumb on his throwing hand (November 2021).

SUMMARY: A five-year starter at UCLA, Thompson-Robinson showed steady improvements each season in Chip Kelly’s balanced offensive attack and had his best season as a “super senior” with a school-record 69.6 percent completions. He departs Westwood as the school’s all-time leader in several categories, including total offense (12,537), completions (860), touchdown passes (88) and total touchdowns (116). With his live, accurate arm, the ball spins clean off his hand and his dual-threat skills allow him to create off-schedule plays. Thompson-Robinson handled quite a bit in Kelly’s offense (checks at the line, multiple play options based on pre-snap reads, etc.), but he is still prone to youthful mistakes, especially when things get hectic. Overall, Thompson-Robinson plays panicked at times and must take better care of the football, but he has an NFL-quality arm with the toughness and ability to create that will appeal to pro teams. His veteran presence will help him compete for a backup role very early in his NFL career.

GRADE: 6th-7th Round

13. MAX DUGGAN | TCU

6014 | 207 lbs. | 4SR

Council Bluffs, Iowa (Lewis Central)

#15

BACKGROUND: Maxwell “Max” Duggan (DUGG-in), the youngest of three children, was born and raised in southeastern Iowa near the Nebraska border (about 15 minutes from Omaha). As the son of a former college quarterback and longtime high school coach, Duggan started playing quarterback in elementary school and was on the sidelines for his dad’s games as a waterboy or assistant. He played through little league and middle school, leading his eighth-grade team to the Metro Youth Football League title. Duggan attended Lewis Central High School, where he played for his father and started on varsity as freshman, accounting for 1,389 passing yards, 359 rushing yards and 16 total touchdowns. As a sophomore, he completed 62 percent of his passes for 1,651 yards and 15 touchdowns and added 592 rushing yards and 14 rushing touchdowns. Duggan passed for 748 yards, rushed 551 rushing yards and accounted for 17 total touchdowns as a junior before a season-ending injury in November 2017. He returned as a senior and had his best season, leading Lewis Central to an 11-1 record and the school’s first state semifinal playoff performance. Duggan was named the Iowa Gatorade Player of the Year with 2,130 passing yards, 1,223 rushing yards and 48 total touchdowns (24 passing, 24 rushing). He finished his prep career with 5,918 passing yards, 2,725 rushing yards and 110 total touchdowns (fourth-best in Iowa state history). Duggan also was a four-year letterman in baseball, basketball and track (sprints and relays) and finished fourth at the 2018 state championships in the 200 meters (22.02).

A four-star recruit, Duggan was the No. 5 dual-threat quarterback in the 2019 recruiting class and the No. 1 recruit in Iowa. He was labeled as the best quarterback recruit from the state of Iowa since Kyle Orton in 2001. After hearing from lower-level programs following his freshman year, Duggan, who grew up a fan of Iowa and Notre Dame, received an offer (his first from a Power 5 FBS school) from Kirk Ferentz and the Hawkeyes after his sophomore season. However, he wanted to move away from home for college and connected with former TCU play caller Sonny Cumbie, then committed to the Horned Frogs as a junior in April 2018. Duggan stayed loyal to his commitment despite several major offers, including from Georgia, Notre Dame and Ohio State. His father (Jim) played quarterback at South Dakota before coaching football for 34 years, winning multiple state titles at St. Albert High School (2006, 2007) and serving as head coach and offensive coordinator when Max was at Lewis Central. Max’s mother (Debra) was an accomplished hurdler at South Dakota, won three conference indoor titles (1983, 1985-86) and was inducted into the school’s Hall of Fame. His parents, who met at South Dakota, adopted two children from South Korea: a son, Sam, who would later play quarterback at Lewis Central and a daughter, Megan. Max (the couple’s only biological child) arrived a few years later. He graduated with his degree in business (December 2022). Duggan accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl.

PRO DAY	6011	207	30 3/4	9 7/8	74	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	(stood on Combine testing)

STRENGTHS: Good-sized athlete with legitimate dual-threat ability ... displays a strong arm and drills the football with gunslinger velocity ... has a quick-enough delivery and arm power to make off-platform throws ... aggressive downfield thrower and gives his targets a chance to make plays (led the FBS with 17 touchdown passes of 20-plus yards in 2022) ... productive on both designed runs and off-script scrambles ... surprises defenders with open-field acceleration ... outstanding play strength, toughness and ball security as a runner (only two fumbles in 2022) ... the son of a coach and gives a Herculean effort, leaving his heart and guts on the field every time ... consistently bounces up and plays through pain (including a broken foot in 2021) ... lost his starting job with a new coaching staff but handled the situation like a pro ... highly productive as a senior and accounted for 248 total points, which ranked No. 3 among all Power 5 quarterbacks.

WEAKNESSES: Not a touch passer ... his accuracy and timing decline the further he works down the field ... footwork and body rhythm are often disjointed, which affects the consistency of his ball placement ... his college completion percentage was helped by a ton of screens (26.2 percent of his throws in 2022 came behind the line of scrimmage) ... doesn’t properly use his eyes to hold safeties ... undeveloped pocket presence and sporadically picks when to climb or escape ... his medicals will be important: he was born with an undiagnosed heart defect called Wolff-Parkinson-White syndrome, which was discovered through a COVID test, and underwent a nine-hour heart procedure (summer 2020); required a subsequent emergency surgery to address a post-op blood clot; played through a broken bone and torn tendon in his foot as a junior, which required offseason surgery; suffered a broken left fibula (November 2017) as a junior in high school.

SUMMARY: A four-year starter at TCU, Duggan thrived in former offensive coordinator Garrett Riley’s RPO-based offense and finished his college career with a 26-18 record as a starter. Although head coach Sonny Dykes tabbed Chandler Morris as the starter for the 2022 season, Duggan played in the season opener after Morris was injured and ripped off one of the best seasons in school history, leading TCU to the National Championship Game and finishing as the Heisman Trophy runner-up. Duggan is a passionate player with the arm strength, toughness and escapability to make plays with his legs and through the air. Though he showed growth in 2022, he isn’t a functionally-sound passer, and his sporadic field reads and accuracy are a high hurdle to clear at the next level. Overall, Duggan’s pocket skills and downfield passing lack the necessary refinement for the NFL game, but he is a courageous competitor with dual-threat talent and calm confidence. He is an intriguing project for a patient NFL coaching staff.

GRADE: 6th-7th Round

14. TYSON BAGENT | Shepherd

6031 | 213 lbs. | 5SR

Martinsburg, W.Va. (Martinsburg)

BACKGROUND: Tyson Bagent (rhymes with “agent”), the oldest of four children, was born and raised in the eastern panhandle of West Virginia. He started playing football in the Jefferson County youth football league (coached by his father) and played for the Razorbacks until middle school. Bagent attended Martinsburg High School and became the starting quarterback as a sophomore. He led Martinsburg to back-to-back 3A state championships his junior and senior years, finishing with a combined 28-0 over his final two seasons. As a senior, Bagent finished with 71.9 percent completions (197-for-274) for 3,199 passing yards, 49 total touchdowns (41 passing, 8 rushing) and only three interceptions. He was named first team All-State, Gatorade Player of the Year in West Virginia and the J.R. House Award as the top quarterback in the state. Bagent finished his high school career with 7,800 passing yards and 112 touchdowns (97 passing, 15 rushing). He also lettered in basketball.

A no-star recruit, Bagent wasn’t ranked by the online recruiting services and went vastly underrecruited. He had interest from a few FBS programs, like West Virginia and Marshall, but no offers. He received FCS-level offers from Albany and Robert Morris, but neither situation was attractive enough to take him away from Division II Shepherd, a program he grew up around and to which he had several family connections. His mother (Casey) grew up in Shepherdstown and graduated from Shepherd in 2002. His father (Travis) played baseball at Shepherd and graduated in 1999. Travis is a 28-time world-champion arm wrestler and widely considered the greatest left-handed arm wrestler of all time. Bagent’s younger brother (Ezra) also was a quarterback at Martinsburg and signed with Shepherd in the 2023 recruiting class. After his junior season at Shepherd, Tyson entered the transfer portal and took two official visits (West Virginia and Maryland) and received offers from both schools. He set up visits with Northwestern and Western Kentucky and expected several more offers. However, he pulled his name out of the portal after two weeks because a transfer to Division I would have disrupted his path to graduation (minimum 30 additional credit hours required before graduation) and he loved his situation at Shepherd. Bagent accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl.

STRENGTHS: Lean, athletic build with a projectable frame ... has a whip for an arm and spins a zippy spiral ... balanced in his setup and gets the ball out quickly for catch-and-run opportunities ... flashes the ability to touch up and layer throws against zone ... comfortable drilling the ball over the middle of the field ... has functional pocket mobility to slide and buy time (6.95 three-cone was second-best among combine quarterbacks) ... very confident, yet level-headed with a quick memory to move on from mistakes ... was the unquestioned leader of the locker room and a close teammate (Shepherd head coach Ernie McCook: “He raises the level around him and owns everything, never pointing a finger. ... It’s in his DNA, he wills the team to win.”) ... durable four-year starter, and his father instilled a strict work ethic in him from a young age ... played under three different offensive coordinators, which helped shape his football mind ... extremely productive and left Shepherd with every school passing record.

WEAKNESSES: All of his college experience came at a lower level of competition ... doesn’t consistently incorporate his base or hips to drive throws ... throws with steady accuracy, but his placement will need to be more precise to fit NFL windows ... prefers to work from a stationary base with inconsistent mechanics after he is flushed ... guilty of being a stubborn passer at times with his preferred reads ... his interceptions usually were a result of his unrefined eye use, leading defenders to the target ... will hold the ball too long with multiple route concepts and needs to quicken his eyes ... his internal clock will need a reset versus an NFL pass rush ... room to improve his pre-snap pressure reads ... wasn’t a rush threat in college.

SUMMARY: A four-year starter at Shepherd, Bagent played in a spread, five-step passing game in college with RPO packages designed to stretch the defense. After spending a week in the transfer portal after the 2021 season, he turned down multiple FBS offers and returned to Shepherd for his senior year, then set the NCAA all-division record for career touchdown passes (159) and the Division II record for career completions (1,400). With his live arm and confident play style, Bagent led Shepherd to 43 wins in his 53 starts, including back-to-back 13-win seasons in his final two years. He didn’t look out of place during Senior Bowl week, but his ability to quicken his eyes, play more fundamentally sound and adjust his decision-making will be what determines if he can stick at the next level. Overall, Bagent only knows Division II defensive speed and faces a steep learning curve against NFL competition, but he has the mindset and functional physical profile worth developing. He has a chance to be the first Division II quarterback drafted since 1994.

SUMMARY: Micale “Malik” Cunningham grew up playing sports in the heart of Alabama and attended Park Crossing High School. He finished his prep career with 8,470 all-purpose yards and earned All-State as a senior (49 touchdowns). A four-star “athlete” recruit, Cunningham was offered by Alabama as a safety, but he wanted to play quarterback and was drawn to Louisville because of Lamar Jackson. He finished his Cardinals career with 120 total touchdowns, one more than Jackson for the top spot in the school record books. Cunningham scans the field quickly and generally makes sound decisions to deliver strikes. His strengths as a player are his shifty footwork and improvisational skills to escape pressure and extend plays. Overall, Cunningham is an instinctive athlete with natural run skill, but he is undersized and his inconsistent throwing mechanics affect his accuracy. An NFL team would be wise to figure out how to utilize his playmaking talent.

SUMMARY: Thomas “Tommy” DeVito was born in Livingston, N.J. and was a two-year starting quarterback at Don Bosco Prep. As a senior captain, he passed for 2,005 yards and 16 touchdowns. A four-star recruit, DeVito was the top-ranked player in Syracuse’s 2017 class and became the starter in 2019. He battled injuries and decided to transfer after losing his starting job. DeVito joined Illinois in 2022 and posted career bests across the board, leading the Illini to an 8-5 record. Although he takes too many hits on his body, he competes with admirable toughness to stand tall in the pocket and play through pain. He is timely in his reads and puts the ball out in front of receivers to let them make plays away from defenders. His footwork and arm slots become unglued when pressure forces platform changes. Overall, DeVito showed improved pocket feel and downfield touch in 2022, but an NFL career requires more consistency than what he has put on tape thus far.

SUMMARY: Tim DeMorat, the youngest of four kids, grew up on the Atlantic coast in Florida. He played baseball and football at Viera High School, passing for 4,518 yards and 45 touchdowns his final two seasons. A no-star recruit, DeMorat received four FCS-level offers and committed to Fordham, becoming the starter as a true freshman in 2018. As a senior, he led the FCS in passing yards and leaves as one of the top passers in FCS and Patriot League history, having set the league records for passing yards and touchdowns (career and single-season), while playing in a wide-split offense, DeMorat has a strong arm and shows a natural feel for recognizing coverages and layering throws in between defenders. He tends to linger on his preferred read and will lead defenders to the football. Overall, DeMorat must develop his eye discipline to be a consistent small-window thrower in the NFL, but he is a functional athlete with the arm and intangibles to be a developmental option.

SUMMARY: Tanner Morgan, one of three children, started his prep career at Hazard High before transferring to Ryle, where he was named a finalist for Kentucky’s Mr. Football. A three-star recruit, he initially committed to P.J. Fleck at Western Michigan, then followed him to Minnesota when Fleck accepted the Gophers’ head coaching job. A five-year starter, Morgan, who married his wife (Sarah) in July 2022, set several Minnesota passing records, including completion percentage and wins as a starter (33). Morgan showed improved pocket movement each season and does a nice job on play action, where he can find his rhythm and deliver. But he struggles to read pre-snap and his lack of passing anticipation puts the football in harm's way. Overall, Morgan will get NFL looks because he is a gutsy competitor and his ball placement showed improvement in 2022. But defenses aren't scared of his arm and the further the throw, the more his accuracy suffers.

SUMMARY: Holton Ahlers (AYE-lurrs), the youngest of four brothers, was born and raised in Greenville. He was a three-sport standout and four-year starting quarterback in high school, and he finished No. 2 in state history in total offense. A three-star recruit, Ahlers had offers from Florida and Georgia but wanted to stay close to home and picked East Carolina over NC State. He leaves ECU as the school's all-time record holder in several categories, including passing yards (also an AAC record) and touchdowns responsible for. Ahlers is a competitive, sturdy passer willing to hang tough and make throws from a muddy pocket. A left-handed passer, his release is a tad mechanical and inconsistent delivery balance alters his accuracy. Overall, Ahlers efficiently works through his reads and plays with the aggressive confidence to push the ball downfield, but continued improvements with his footwork and ball placement are vital for him to stick in the NFL.

SUMMARY: Sean Clifford, who has a younger brother (Liam) on the Penn State roster, was a three-year starter at St. Xavier High School and led the Bombers to the Division I state championship in 2016. A four-star recruit, he committed to Penn State over several SEC offers and became the Nittany Lions' all-time leader in passing yards, passing touchdowns and completion percentage. Clifford was the first player in his high school's history to be a two-time captain and was only the second four-time captain in Penn State history. He was effective in a college RPO-based system, and his willingness to hang tough in the pocket or utilize his mobility helped keep drives alive. However, he needs to get through his progressions quicker and make things easier on his receivers to finish catches. Overall, Clifford throws well on the move and NFL teams love his toughness and smarts, but his current decision-making and ball placement are too inconsistent for what is required at the next level.

SUMMARY: Adrian Martinez was born in Hanford, Calif, and his mother (Deanna) passed away from cancer when he was age 10. After compiling more than 4,000 yards of offense as a junior, he missed his senior year at Clovis West (torn labrum). A four-star recruit, he flipped from Cal to Tennessee, then Nebraska late in the process. He started four seasons in Lincoln and set the school record for total offense (10,792 yards). He transferred to Kansas State for his final season but was hampered by a leg injury in the second half of 2022. Martinez is a decent-sized athlete to move the pocket or use his legs to pick up chunk yardage (45 rushing touchdowns). He is a creative passer with an adequate arm, but his ball placement and timing lack precision, often because of spotty vision and a failure to make on-schedule decisions. Overall, Martinez has the physical tools and toughness to earn looks from NFL teams, but he must develop more consistency as a passer.

SUMMARY: Lindsey Scott Jr. was the 2015 Gatorade Louisiana Player of the Year and won the state title as a senior at Zachary High. A three-star recruit, he signed with LSU (same class as LB Devin White) but left after one season. He led East Mississippi Community College to a juco title and then spent one season on the bench at Missouri. He played two seasons at Nicholls State but lost his starting job and transferred to Incarnate Word with one year of eligibility left. He then had one of the best seasons in NCAA history with a record 71 total touchdowns. Scott has plenty of life in his throws and can throw from different arm slots. As a runner, he has shifty feet and instinctive vision to make defenses pay for giving him a lane. His 2022 season was a redemption story and a testament to his resolve and talent. Overall, Scott is undersized and his ball placement tends to waver, but he throws with anticipation and is a true dual threat with his explosive movements.

1. BIJAN ROBINSON | Texas 5110 | 215 lbs. | 3JR Tucson, Ariz. (Salpointe) 1/30/2002 (age 21.24) #5

BACKGROUND: Bijan (bee-ZAHN) Robinson grew up in Tucson, where he lived with his mother (LeMore Saul) and maternal grandparents (Cleo and Terri Robinson). After his mother was married, he chose to remain with his grandparents instead of moving in with his stepfather and his children. Robinson started playing flag football at age 5 and graduated to tackle football at age 8. He enrolled at Salpointe Catholic High School in Tucson and came off the bench on varsity as a freshman. As a sophomore, Robinson became the feature runner and posted 2,023 rushing yards and 26 touchdowns on 189 carries (10.7 average), leading the team to a 12-2 record and appearance in the 2017 4A state championship game. As a junior, he was named the 4A Conference Offensive Player of the Year with 2,400 rushing yards and 35 touchdowns on 170 carries (14.1 average), leading Salpointe to a 13-1 record and another appearance in the 4A state title game. As a senior, Robinson was named the 2019 Arizona Gatorade Player of the Year and All-American, finishing his final season with 2,235 rushing yards and 38 touchdowns on 126 carries (17.7 average). He became the first player in Arizona history to rush for 2,000-plus yards in three consecutive seasons and twice earn the Ed Doherty Award (state’s top high school football player). Robinson finished his prep career as Arizona’s all-time leader in rushing yards (7,036) and touchdowns (114).

A five-star recruit, Robinson was the No. 1 running back in the 2020 recruiting class and the No. 2 recruit in Arizona behind Georgia CB Kelee Ringo (No. 15 recruit nationally). The offers came flooding in from several national powerhouse programs like Alabama, LSU, Michigan, Notre Dame and USC. Robinson showed the most interest in Ohio State and Texas but shifted his focus to the Longhorns and committed to Tom Herman prior to his senior year in high school. His grandfather (Cleo) was the only father figure in his life and Robinson referred to him as “Dad.” Cleo ran track at Northern Arizona and spent almost 30 years as an on-field and replay official, most recently for the Pac-12 Conference. Cleo’s brother (Paul) played running back at Arizona and was drafted in the third round (No. 82 overall) of the 1968 NFL Draft. Paul led the league in rushing as a rookie and earned two Pro Bowl nods (1968-69) in his six-year NFL career. Robinson had double-digit NIL deals over his final two years at Texas, including Lamborghini Austin and his own condiment called “Bijan Mustardson.” He elected to skip his final season of eligibility and enter the 2023 NFL Draft.

STRENGTHS: Runs with a unique mix of elusiveness, vision and power ... twitchy reflexes in his lower body to be a one-cut maestro or bounce runs outside with his lateral burst ... “knee-bender” runner with the feet to shake defenders in tight quarters, skillfully using jabs and jukes to escape trouble ... instinctive ability to find developing holes and string moves together (wears jersey No. 5 because of Reggie Bush) ... accelerates in a blink and doesn’t lose speed in his cuts ... responsible for 45 plays (31 runs, 14 catches) of 20-plus yards in his career, including 8 carries of 50-plus yards (clocked 22.3 mph on the GPS) ... thick, strong build, and half-hearted tackle attempts won’t get him on the ground ... doesn’t consistently punish as a runner, but runs physically, absorbs contact really well and maintains his balance ... doesn’t need a runway to step through tackle attempts ... can run the full running back route tree but also effectively runs receiver routes out of the slot (hitches, posts, etc.) ... average catch radius, but the ball sticks to his hands at the catch point ... has the talent potential to be an above-average pass blocker ... took on more of a vocal role in 2022, and coaches say he was a positive influence in the locker room (source close to the program: “Kid has every right to big-time everyone, but that’s not who he is ... hangs with the best players and the walk-ons ... his religion is important to him, and he practices what he preaches.”) ... consistently productive, averaging 6.3 yards per carry over his career ... ranked top five in the FBS in all-purpose yards per game (157.8) in 2022 and became the 23rd player in Texas history to earn unanimous All-American status (first on offense since Colt McCoy in 2009).

WEAKNESSES: Doesn’t always run angry through contact ... has a tendency to run tall and would benefit with lower pad level ... guilty of making too many moves in the backfield at times ... will get bounce happy, especially when it worked earlier in the game ... currently inconsistent in pass protection and must improve his patience and strike timing ... fumbled six times in his career ... proven workhorse, and durability isn’t a concern, but missed final two games as a sophomore because of a dislocated left elbow (November 2021).

SUMMARY: A three-year starter at Texas, Robinson was the lead back in head coach Steve Sarkisian’s spread RPO offense, which utilizes both zone and gap principles. He became the first Longhorn to rush for more than 1,500 yards and post more than 300 receiving yards in a single season, and his 3,410 career rushing yards ranks fourth in school history behind Ricky Williams, Cedric Benson and Earl Campbell (all four-year players). With his natural ability to sort, cut and burst, Robinson has the instinctive feel and contact balance to set up defenders and force missed tackles (led the FBS with 104 forced missed tackles in 2022). He is a chore to bring down for defenders thanks to his natural run strength, although he does need to improve his nuance and finish as a pass blocker. Overall, Robinson is the complete package as both a runner and receiver with vision, instincts and elusive traits that will translate well to the NFL. He is one of the most talented players in the draft class.

GRADE: 1st Round (No. 6 overall)

2. JAHMYR GIBBS | Alabama

5091 | 199 lbs. | 3JR

Dalton, Ga. (Dalton)

BACKGROUND: Jahmyr (JAH-meer) Gibbs, who has two younger sisters, grew up in Dalton (15 miles south of the Tennessee-Georgia border) and had a challenging upbringing. He was raised primarily by his grandmother (Angela Willis), who eventually became his legal guardian when he was 13 years old. Because of financial struggles, Gibbs and his grandmother had to stay in a shelter at one point, and he would often bounce from house to house of friends throughout high school. He attended Dalton High School, where he emerged as a varsity star as a sophomore. Gibbs, who also saw snaps at cornerback and as a return man, rushed for 1,400 yards and 20 touchdowns as a junior in 2018. As a senior, he earned All-State and All-American honors and was named Georgia’s Mr. Football with 2,554 rushing yards and 40 touchdowns on 233 carries (11.0 yards per carry average). Gibbs set the metro single-game record with 420 rushing yards and eight touchdowns in the 2019 season opener. He finished his prep career with 4,882 rushing yards and 70 touchdowns, including three kick return scores. Gibbs also played basketball (his first love) for two seasons at Dalton and ran track (relays and sprints), setting career-bests in the 100 meters (11.64) and 200 meters (22.84).

A four-star recruit, Gibbs was the No. 8 running back in the 2020 recruiting class and the No. 10 recruit in Georgia (No. 2 running back in the state behind Auburn’s Tank Bigsby). His recruitment started to take off during his junior year, and he committed early to Georgia Tech, which showed early interest (running back coach Tashard Choice was his main recruiter and a strong influence). Gibbs finished with more than 30 offers, including national powers like Alabama and Ohio State, and continued taking visits leading up until signing day. He narrowed his final choice to Florida, Georgia Tech and LSU but stayed loyal to his initial commitment and signed with the Yellow Jackets, becoming the school’s highest-ranked recruit since 2004. After two seasons in Atlanta, Gibbs entered the transfer portal following the 2021 season and signed with Alabama. His cousin (Isaiah Mack) was undrafted in 2019 out of Chattanooga and has played defensive line the past four seasons for five different NFL teams. Gibbs elected to skip his final season of eligibility and enter the 2023 NFL Draft.

PRO DAY	5093	199	30 3/8	9 1/2	74	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	(no broad, shuttle, 3-cone, bench – choice)

STRENGTHS: Quick as a hiccup and makes impressive full-speed cuts ... uses sudden steps and varied tempo to create his own run lanes ... owns the peripheral vision to feel openings ... skillfully presses, sets up his blocks and sticks his foot in the ground to weave through the defense ... lateral agility and one-step acceleration makes him a nightmare for open-field defenders ... stays balanced at contact to bounce off tacklers or wriggle/twist forward to gain extra yards ... pacing and burst as a route runner make him a tough one-on-one cover (lined up in the slot or outside on 26.4 percent of his passing snaps in 2022) ... plucks away from his body with reliable hands (one drop on 52 targets in 2022) ... understands protections and hot reads to play on any down ... recognizes pass rush lanes and can cut down blitzers when he stays low ... fumbled four times in his two seasons at Georgia Tech, but didn’t put the ball on the ground at Alabama (195 offensive touches) ... experienced kick returner, averaging 23.9 yards per return with one touchdown (44/1,052/1) ... his high school and college coaches describe him as a “humble competitor” and “not an attention seeker” ... was the most dangerous home run threat for the Tide offense in 2022 and ranked third in the SEC in yards per carry (6.1).

WEAKNESSES: Lean lower body and lacks the desired build or growth potential for the position ... average run strength, and momentum can be slowed through contact (only ... will finish with some pop but prefers to elude instead of delivering blows at contact ... fearless in pass pro but doesn't have the sand in his pants to anchor vs. full-speed blitzers ... inconsistent sustain or redirect as a blocker, struggling to counter after initial contact ... workload questions — reached 20 offensive touches in only seven of his 31 career games (surpassed 25 offensive touches only once) ... only two career touchdowns on a goal-to-go play ... low touchdown output, scoring once every 25.5 carries in his college career ... missed three games as a freshman because of injury and one game as a junior because of an ankle injury (November 2022); injured his left shoulder (October 2022).

SUMMARY: A one-year starter at Alabama, Gibbs was the lead back in the Tide's committee backfield in offensive coordinator Bill O'Brien's balanced offense (responsible for only 33.0 percent of Alabama's 2022 team carries). He led the team in rushing, receptions (his 44 catches were the second-most in a season by a running back in Alabama history) and kick return yards in 2022, ranking top 15 in the FBS in all-purpose yards per game (135.7). Quick to press, sort and burst, Gibbs has sudden start/stop footwork to nimbly get in and out of his cuts and destroy pursuit angles with instantaneous acceleration. Not only does he have twitchy athletic gifts, but his understanding of football geometry and feel for blocking designs are very advanced, making him an offensive line's best friend as a runner. Overall, Gibbs doesn't have ideal size or run power for NFL punishment, but he is an electric athlete with the explosiveness, vision and pass-catching skills to be an exciting NFL weapon. Though his workload will need to be managed, his talent is a mixture of Alvin Kamara and Chris Johnson.

GRADE: 1st-2nd Round (No. 22 overall)

3. ZACH CHARBONNET | UCLA 6003 | 214 lbs. | 4SR Camarillo, Calif. (Oaks Christian) 1/8/2001 (age 22.30) #24

BACKGROUND: Zachariah “Zach” Charbonnet (SHAR-buh-nay), who has two brothers and two sisters, grew up in the Los Angeles area and played multiple sports, primarily basketball and baseball. His mother (Seda Hall), who was raised in Paris before moving to the United States when she was 16, didn't allow him to sign up for football until the seventh grade. Charbonnet attended Oaks Christian School, a private school in Westlake Village, and earned varsity playing time as a freshman running back. He became an integral part of the offense as a sophomore with 844 rushing yards and 23 touchdowns. As a junior, Charbonnet helped Oaks Christian to a 12-3 record and the school's first sectional championship. He finished his junior year with 2,049 rushing yards and 23 touchdowns, earning 2017 Division-II Co-Offensive Player of the Year honors. As a senior, Charbonnet again led Oaks Christian to a 12-win season (and fourth consecutive league title) and finished with 1,795 rushing yards and 17 touchdowns. He also started on defense, playing cornerback as a freshman and sophomore before moving to linebacker as a junior. Charbonnet finished his prep career with 4,741 rushing yards (8.2 average) and 62 touchdowns. He also lettered in track (sprints and relays) and helped set a school record in the 4x400 relay (3:19.88), winning a division title as a junior (May 2018).

A four-star recruit, Charbonnet was the No. 4 running back in the 2019 recruiting class and the No. 8 recruit in California (his Oaks Christian teammate Kayvon Thibodeaux was No. 1). He was underrecruited initially because he didn't attend any off-season recruiting camps and avoided media interviews, but his high school tape drew the attention of several top programs. He was recruited by nearby UCLA and USC, but Michigan lured him to Ann Arbor, where he was the highest-ranked offensive recruit in Jim Harbaugh's 2019 class. Charbonnet led Michigan in rushing as a freshman but saw his workload decrease as a sophomore, and he entered the transfer portal in January 2021. He returned to the west coast and signed with UCLA (his parents also moved closer to the Rose Bowl to attend games). He embraces his diverse ethnic background, including Creole, Cambodian and Chinese. Charbonnet opted out of the 2022 bowl game and turned down his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl.

PRO DAY	6006	222	32 1/8	9 3/4	75 5/8	-	-	-	-	-	4.46	7.16	- (stood on Combine testing)

STRENGTHS: Above-average vision and run tempo, hitting holes with timing and acceleration ... outstanding contact balance and not an easy ball carrier to get on the ground (averaged 4.2 yards after contact per carry in 2022) ... when he drops his pads, he forces defenders to be perfect with their tackle execution ... keeps his strong legs pumping to sustain forward momentum and fight for every yard ... reels in throws away from his frame as a pass catcher ... outstanding instincts in pass protection ... fumbled only twice in his college career ... both UCLA and Michigan coaching staffs say he spent more time in the weight room than anyone else on the team (UCLA head coach Chip Kelly: “His work ethic on our team is second to none”) ... quiet, business-like personality who avoids the limelight and social media (very goal-oriented and stays away from distractions) ... posted back-to-back 1,000-yard rushing seasons in his two seasons with the Bruins, leading the Pac-12 in rushing yards per game (135.9) and per carry (7.0) in 2022.

WEAKNESSES: Average explosiveness as a ball carrier ... has limited juice around the corner and doesn't have the long speed to run away from linebackers at the next level ... gathers to cut and open his stride, showing slight hip tightness in his movements ... willing and ready to pick up blitzers, but must improve his execution by fixing bad habits (lowering his eye level or lunging) ... missed two games because of lingering injuries as a senior in 2022; required a knee scope (January 2019) when he arrived at Michigan to address a meniscus issue from high school, missing 2019 spring practices.

SUMMARY: A two-year starter at UCLA, Charbonnet was an ideal fit for head coach Chip Kelly's diverse run offense (pins, pulls, counters, etc.) and was mentored by Bruins running back coach DeShaun Foster (former second-round pick out of UCLA who spent seven seasons in the NFL). The Michigan transfer was consistently productive in his two seasons with the Bruins, leading the FBS in all-purpose yards per game (168.0) and the Pac-12 in rushing (1,359) in 2022. Charbonnet reads the field and his blockers exceptionally well and consistently picks up positive yardage with his ability to absorb contact. He is an average burst runner and can be tracked down from behind, but while he won't hit many home runs, he will pile up the doubles (22.6 percent of his carries resulted in a 10-plus-yard gain in 2022). Overall, Charbonnet is not a dynamic start-stop athlete to quickly change rush lanes or escape trouble, but he has extraordinary vision with reliable pass-catching and blocking skills and impeccable football character. He projects as a low-end NFL starter.

GRADE: 2nd-3rd Round (No. 61 overall)

4. DEVON ACHANE | Texas A&M 5084 | 188 lbs. | 3JR Missouri City, Texas (Marshall) 10/13/2001 (age 21.54) #6

BACKGROUND: Devon (DUH-von) Achane (Ay-chain) grew up south of Houston and started playing football at age 4. He attended Thurgood Marshall High School in Missouri City and moved up to varsity full-time as a sophomore and rushed for 1,196 yards and 18 touchdowns, adding an interception on defense. As a junior, Achane led Marshall to a 15-1 season and the 2018 5A state championship game (lost to Aledo High School). He finished the season with 1,361 rushing yards and 43 total touchdowns (30 rushing, seven receiving, three kick returns, two punt returns, one passing). As a senior, Achane recorded 201 carries for 2,266 yards (11.3 average) and 40 touchdowns, adding 38 receptions for 768 receiving yards (20.2 average) and 10 touchdowns. He was named the 2019 Offensive Player of the Year and led Marshall to the school's second consecutive state title game, losing again to Aledo. Achane finished his career with 4,823 rushing yards, 2,004 receiving yards and 116 total touchdowns. After only one year of experience in track before high school, the track coach convinced him to take the sport seriously at Marshall, and he became one of the most decorated track athletes in the country. Achane was named the 2020 Gatorade Texas Track & Field Athlete of the Year and posted the best 4x100 relay time (40.40) nationally. As a junior, Achane placed first in the 200 meters (20.46) at the 2019 5A state championships (fastest in the country) and posted a personal-best 10.53 in the 100 meters. He helped Marshall to two state track championships (might have been three, but the 2020 season was cancelled because of COVID).

A four-star recruit, Achane was the No. 4 all-purpose back in the 2020 recruiting class and the No. 21 recruit in Texas. After his first varsity season as a sophomore, several FBS programs took notice, and he received offers from Houston and SMU. Achane added offers from national powers like Georgia, Texas and USC before narrowing his top five to Alabama, Florida State, Houston, LSU and Texas A&M. In the end, he committed to Texas A&M over LSU. Achane also joined the Aggies' indoor and outdoor track teams and was named an All-American in the 100 meters, 200 meters and 4x100-meter relay. His personal bests at Texas A&M include a 10.14 100 meters, 20.20 200 meters and 6.63 (indoor) 60 meters. To put those numbers in perspective, the standard 200-meter time for Olympic Trial qualifiers is 20.24. Achane elected to skip his senior season and enter the 2023 NFL Draft.

STRENGTHS: Elite speed athlete (4.32 40-yard dash was the third-fastest among all combine participants) ... bouncy runner with springs in calves to stack cuts on cuts on cuts ... aggressively presses the hole with the footwork to plant and redirect without any wasted motion ... his acceleration is instant, allowing him to scoot through lanes or find a back door when the designed run is taken away ... runs tough between the tackles with improved patience to follow his blocks ... proved to be a capable pass-catcher with promising ball skills ... did some encouraging things as a blocker, dropping his pads into the gut of blitzers or throwing his body at their legs to cut them ... averaged 30.7 yards per kick return with two touchdowns in his two seasons as the team's featured return man (20/613/2) ... had some reps as a gunner on punt coverage ... only two career fumbles ... strong football character — suffered a foot injury late in 2022, and instead of shutting things down with his eyes towards the NFL, he pushed to get back for the season finale (Achané: "I owed it to my teammates.") and he rushed for 215 yards (16 forced missed tackles) and helped the Aggies upset LSU (head coach Jimbo Fisher: "He's a tremendous human being, player, leader, competitor, and he has nothing but heart and toughness about him in everything he does.") ... led the SEC and ranked fourth in the FBS with 161.0 all-purpose yards per game in 2022.

WEAKNESSES: Has good-sized thighs, but doesn't have a body type for NFL punishment ... his tempo as an inside runner is still developing ... doesn't consistently drop his pads and drive through contact ... lacks the power in his lower body to pump his legs to finish ... inconsistent adjusting to throws away from his frame ... needs to learn how to better sell his routes and not give away his path ... struggles to drop anchor in pass protection with several missed chips on his film ... missed two games as a junior because of a left foot injury (November 2022).

SUMMARY: A one-year starter at Texas A&M, Achane shared carries with Isaiah Spiller in 2021 and became the featured back in 2022 in former offensive coordinator Darrell Dickey's inside zone scheme. The 16th player in school history to surpass 1,000 rushing yards in a season, he was the only Power 5 player to score as a rusher, receiver and kick returner in 2022 and earned first team All-SEC honors as both a running back and all-purpose back. He was also an All-American track athlete for the Aggies (Achané: "I'm a football player who just happens to also run track."). An explosive player with the ball in his hands, Achane makes quick reads, collects his feet and accelerates out of his cuts with sprinting speed (at his best on counter plays). He isn't getting much bigger, and each NFL team will feel differently about his projected workload and role. Overall, Achane's undersized build understandably creates doubt about him as an every-down NFL back, but his vision and rare acceleration allow him to access run paths most backs can't. With his added value as a receiver (a few NFL scouts project him best as a receiver) and returner, he has high-upside potential, similar in ways to Jahvid Best as a prospect.

GRADE: 2nd-3rd Round (No. 67 overall)

5. TYJAE SPEARS | Tulane 5095 | 201 lbs. | 4JR Ponchatoula, La. (Ponchatoula) 6/15/2001 (age 21.87) #22

BACKGROUND: Tyjae (Tah-zhae) Spears, who is the second youngest of nine children (six boys, three girls), was born in Hammond, La., and was raised in Ponchatoula (about an hour north of New Orleans). His father (Margene) introduced him to multiple sports throughout his childhood, and he immediately gravitated toward running back in football, also seeing time on defense at linebacker and cornerback. Spears joined the football team at Ponchatoula High School but missed most of his freshman year because of injury and was a little-used reserve as a sophomore when the team went 10-3 and made the playoffs. As a junior, he shared the running back duties and finished the 2017 season with 243 rushing yards, 311 receiving yards and four total touchdowns. Ponchatoula finished 2-9 in 2018, but Spears led the team in rushing with 920 yards and nine touchdowns, adding 880 receiving yards and nine receiving scores. He was also a standout in track (sprints and relays) and set personal bests in the 100 meters (10.87) and 200 meters (22.47).

A three-star recruit, Spears was the No. 88 running back in the 2019 recruiting class and the No. 50 recruit in Louisiana (No. 5 running back in Louisiana). He had offers from Southern Miss and Texas State but decided to stay close to home and committed to Tulane. Spears didn't receive an offer from a Power 5 program until two weeks before signing day when Chris Klieman was hired at Kansas State and made a run at the running back. However, Spears stayed loyal to head coach Willie Fritz and the Green Wave — proximity was important, so his family could see him play. Spears also joined the track team at Tulane. He elected to skip his senior season and accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl (voted the Senior Bowl practice player-of-the-week by NFL scouts).

STRENGTHS: Runs with quick feet, lateral agility and explosive cutting skills ... sees the field well to instinctively read, slash, flow ... regains his speed post-cut in a flash ... impressive body balance and control on his start/stop moves (averaged 4.52 yards after contact per carry in 2022) ... stays patient behind lead blocks and accelerates through creases before pursuit can react ... can make defenders miss in the hole with subtle hip/shoulder shimmies ... will lower his pads and keeps his feet through weak tackle attempts ... comfortable chipping and flashes fight in pass pro (Spears: “My quarterback becomes my best friend, and you have to protect your buddy.”) ... quick hands to pluck in the screen game ... nose for the end zone and tied for the FBS lead (with Pitt’s Israel Abanikanda) in total touchdowns (21) in 2022 ... scored a touchdown once every 13.8 carries during his career ... led the AAC in rushing yards (1,581) in 2022 and averaged more than 6.0 yards per carry in each of his four seasons in college.

WEAKNESSES: Smallish frame and build with a lean lower body ... tends to slow at contact and lacks the run strength to power through congestion ... average contact balance and will struggle to escape NFL wrap tackles ... accelerates in a flash but lacks a breakaway gear and can be caught from behind ... shows blocking determination on some plays but looks disinterested on others ... his lack of size hurts his success rate vs. blitz pickup ... inconsistent tracking on throws over his shoulder ... battled a nagging hamstring injury in 2022 spring and regular season; suffered a torn ACL and meniscus in his right knee (September 2020), requiring season-ending surgery.

SUMMARY: A three-year starter at Tulane, Spears was consistently productive in offensive coordinator Jim Svoboda’s RPO-based multiple offense. After a torn ACL in 2020 and shared workload in 2021, he had an extremely productive 2022 campaign, finishing No. 5 in the country in rushing yards (1,581) and rushing yards per carry (6.90). Spears is a slippery runner with his dynamic start/stop cutting skills, patient vision and darting acceleration, which are highlighted on counter and outside zone plays. He has the functional skills to provide value in the passing game, but he can be more dependable as a blocker and pass catcher. Overall, Spears doesn’t have desired build or run strength, but his explosive read-plant-burst action allows him to abruptly change his rush path and elude tacklers. He shows the potential for three-down duties, although he will be at his best as part of a committee, similar to the Buffalo Bills’ James Cook.

GRADE: 3rd Round (No. 73 overall)

6. TANK BIGSBY | Auburn

Atlanta, Ga. (Callaway)

BACKGROUND: Cartavious “Tank” Bigsby, who is one of three children, grew up in LaGrange, Ga., (near the Alabama border) where he started playing football in local rec leagues in elementary school. He was a standout running back throughout middle school before enrolling at Callaway High School in Hogansville. He saw immediate action as a freshman and was a four-year letterman. As a junior, Bigsby earned All-State honors and Regional Offensive Player of the Year honors with 2,221 rushing yards (9.3 yards per carry) and 22 touchdowns. He led Callaway to an 11-win season in 2018 with 778 yards and eight touchdowns coming in four playoff games. As a senior, Bigsby missed time because of an ankle injury, but still finished with 1,636 rushing yards and 27 touchdowns. He also lettered in track and set personal-bests in the 100 meters (11.15), 400 meters (56.16) and long jump (20 feet 1.5 inches).

A four-star recruit, Bigsby was the No. 4 running back in the 2020 recruiting class (behind Bijan Robinson, Zach Evans and Demarkcus Bowman) and the No. 6 recruit in Georgia (No. 40 overall recruit nationally). His first offer came during his freshman year when Alabama offered him a full ride followed by the rest of the SEC and other national programs like Clemson, Notre Dame and Ohio State. Bigsby was considered a strong lean to in-state Georgia and was silently committed to South Carolina, but he developed a connection with former Auburn star Cadillac Williams, who was a new addition to the Tigers’ coaching staff. His older brother (Cedric Maynard) rushed for more than 2,000 yards at Callaway in 2015 before signing with FCS Tennessee State. Bigsby was given his “Tank” nickname at age 2 by his father and aunt for his rowdy nature. He elected to skip his senior season and enter the 2023 NFL Draft.

PRO DAY	5114	215	32	9 1/4	77	4.45	2.50	1.58	-	-	-	-	-	(no shuttle or 3-cone – choice)

STRENGTHS: Long, muscular build with natural power within his frame ... flashes explosiveness to turn the corner or create big plays (led the SEC with eight carries of 30-plus yards in 2022) ... elusive runner and displays burst and body control in and out of his cuts ... squares his pads to the line and gallops through contact, using his stout body type to stay afloat ... runs with an edge ... competent pass catcher with quick hands to snatch throws away from his chest ... showed improvements in pass protection as a junior and has upside in this area with his size and strength ... returned kicks as a freshman, averaging 23.5 yards per return (13/306/0) ... durable and missed only one game in his three years in college ... finished his career No. 7 in Auburn history in rushing yards (2,903).

WEAKNESSES: Displays basic run instincts, but sporadically picks his spots and can be an inconsistent decision-maker in the backfield ... will miss run lanes and needs to introduce more patience into his run style ... makes too much contact with his own blockers and needs to trust them to do their job ... struggles to reset his vision on the move ... inconsistent setting up lead blocks and pullers on outside zone ... flashes some stiffness in his route cuts ... his drops are usually a result of wandering eyes before the catch is secured ... must improve his awareness and want-to in pass protection ... durability isn't a concern, but he did break his leg in the eighth grade ... his best season in terms of yards per carry came his freshman season.

SUMMARY: A three-year starter at Auburn, Bigsby was the team's most explosive asset in former offensive coordinator Eric Kiesau's zone scheme. He announced himself as one of the SEC's best backs as a freshman and led the Tigers in rushing each of his three seasons on The Plains (his 13 100-yard rushing performances ranks top-3 in school history). Bigsby runs with natural power, contact balance and body control and is just as likely to run through defenders as he is to juke them in space. He will miss run lanes because of spotty vision, tempo and patience, but he often had to create on his own, and those parts of his game should improve with better blocking and talent around him. Overall, Bigsby needs to improve his decisiveness and feel for finding creases, but he has playmaking skills thanks to his upfield explosiveness along with his upside as a receiver and blocker. He has NFL starting potential in a gap or zone scheme.

GRADE: 3rd Round (No. 87 overall)

7. ROSCHON JOHNSON | Texas 6002 | 219 lbs. | 4SR Port Arthur, Texas (Port Neches-Groves) 1/31/2001 (age 22.24) #2

BACKGROUND: Roschon (ROH-shahn) "Shug" Johnson, who is the youngest of three boys, was born and raised in Port Arthur (southeast Texas) and started playing tackle football at age 7. He quickly established himself as a star running back and safety at the youth level until moving to quarterback at age 10 because he was the best player on the field. Johnson enrolled at Port Neches-Groves High School, where he was a three-year starter at quarterback (30-8 record). As a sophomore, he earned honorable mention All-State and District MVP honors with 2,318 passing yards, 1,650 rushing yards and 56 total touchdowns (26 passing, 30 rushing). Johnson again earned District MVP honors as a junior with 64.9 percent completions, 2,918 passing yards and 35 touchdowns, adding 1,627 rushing yards and 29 touchdowns. As a senior, he was named All-State and All-District with 2,343 passing yards, 1,623 rushing yards and 50 total touchdowns (24 passing, 26 rushing). Johnson, who was also named an Under Armour All-American, finished his prep career as Port Neches-Groves' all-time leading passer (7,710 yards) and rusher (4,900), finishing with 85 total touchdowns. He was a 4.0 GPA student and also lettered in track (relays and jumps).

A four-star recruit, Johnson was the No. 6 dual-threat quarterback in the 2019 recruiting class and the No. 29 recruit in Texas (highest-ranked quarterback recruit in the state). He collected scholarship offers from numerous high-profile programs like Florida, Florida State, Ohio State, Oklahoma, Oregon, Penn State, Tennessee and Texas A&M. But Johnson had the goal of earning a full-ride at Texas since he was young, and he committed to the Longhorns prior to his junior year in July 2017 (was the first commit of the Texas 2019 recruiting class). He graduated early and enrolled in Austin in January 2019. With Shane Buechele (SMU) and Cameron Rising (Utah) both transferring out of Texas prior to the 2019 season, Johnson was expecting to be a backup behind Sam Ehlinger and Casey Thompson. But because of injuries at running back, he transitioned to running back one week before the start of the 2019 season, which ended up being a permanent move. Johnson graduated with his degree in business administration (May 2022). He opted out of the 2022 bowl game and accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl but broke his hand during the first practice and missed the rest of the week.

PRO DAY	6003	225	32	9 5/8	77 1/8	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	(stood on Combine testing)

STRENGTHS: Big-boned, broad-shouldered athlete with proportionate bulk ... stout, physical runner to breeze through arm tackles ... forward finisher, lowering his pads and driving his legs through contact ... aggressively presses the line, but also shows patience behind lead blocks ... able to find cutback lanes ... can force missed tackles in the backfield with his lateral footwork ... his stiff-arm is unyielding ... enough speed to stretch runs to the boundary or out-pace pursuit ... only one career fumble ... dogged blocking chops, both in pass protection and as a lead blocker in "21" personnel ... shows functional receiving skills out of the backfield ... led Texas in special teams tackles (seven) in 2022 — played on all four coverages ... addicted to working and self-improvement (was pushing sleds around at age 8) ... benefited from the "older brother" theory — his desire to keep up with his older brothers on the field instilled competitive persistence in him at a young age ... vocal leader and beloved in the Texas program (NFL scout: "He was Mr. Accountability for that entire offense ... and our special teams staff is going to love him.").

WEAKNESSES: High-cut runner, and run style lacks fluidity ... inconsistent rhythm as a ball carrier and guilty of taking extra steps behind the line of scrimmage ... feel for run lane development runs hot/cold ... physical finisher but often uses too much forward lean at contact and sacrifices his balance ... primarily a screen target and unproven running a full route tree ... love his fight in pass pro, but must improve his ability to ID blitzers pre-snap (his communication with the offensive line must improve as well) ... suffered a broken hand (January 2023) during the first practice at the Senior Bowl ... averaged only 9.5 offensive touches per game in his career and wasn't asked to be the featured back.

SUMMARY: Primarily a backup at Texas, Johnson was a complimentary back in head coach Steve Sarkisian's spread RPO offense. A high school quarterback, he moved to running back as a Longhorns freshman and played second fiddle to Bijan Robinson but embraced his role in the program and was a central part of the culture shift under the new coaching staff (Sarkisian: "What this guy brings every single day is pretty incredible. He's so mature. Unbelievable work ethic. Awesome teammate...he's got the utmost respect of everybody in our building, that is for sure."). A stout, good-sized runner, Johnson is a two-way creator with his lateral cuts to elude tacklers and the forward momentum to power through contact. With his football character and ability on special teams and as a blocker, his impact without the football is almost as impressive as his ability with the ball. Overall, Johnson is high-cut and can be inconsistent with his run rhythm, but he is a quick-footed, physical ball carrier with valuable third-down skills as a pass-catcher and blocker. He should immediately upgrade an NFL team's running back rotation and be a core special teamer.

GRADE: 3rd Round (No. 91 overall)

8. KENDRE MILLER | TCU 5111 | 215 lbs. | 3JR Mount Enterprise, Texas (Mount Enterprise) 6/11/2002 (age 20.88) #33

BACKGROUND: Kendre Miller, who has a sister, grew up in a small town in East Texas near the Louisiana border. His love for football started at age 6, and he continued to play throughout elementary and middle school. Miller attended Mount Enterprise High School (less than 200-student enrollment), where he was a four-year letterman and played on offense (quarterback and running back) and defense (safety and linebacker). As a junior, he earned third team All-State and first team All-District with 1,806 rushing yards (8.7 average) and 20 touchdowns, adding 47 tackles and 3.0 sacks on defense. Playing primarily at quarterback as a senior, Miller accounted for 2,805 rushing yards on 194 carries (14.5 average) with 34 rushing touchdowns. He also had 455 passing yards, seven touchdowns and five interceptions along with 80 tackles on defense. Mount Enterprise’s win total increased each of Miller’s four seasons: one win in 2016, three wins in 2017, five wins in 2018 and 10 wins in 2019. He was named the District MVP in 2019 and earned First Team All-State honors. Miller also lettered in basketball and track and set personal bests in the 100 meters (11.52) and high jump (6-2).

A three-star recruit, Miller was the No. 125 athlete in the 2020 recruiting class and the No. 220 recruit in Texas. He posted remarkable production in high school, but played in Class 2A, one of the smallest classifications in Texas, which scared off some college programs. Several programs recruited him as a linebacker while others saw a running back. Miller picked up offers from Southern Miss and Wyoming before developing a connection with UTSA head coach Jeff Traylor. He was set to sign with the Roadrunners, but TCU entered the picture two weeks before signing day and flipped Miller to the Horned Frogs. He elected to skip his senior season and enter the 2023 NFL Draft.

PRO DAY	5110	218	33	9 1/8	80 1/4	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	(no workout – right knee)

STRENGTHS: Good-sized back who can be tough to get on the ground ... accelerates into contact and consistently falls forward thanks to his leg drive ... presses the line with patience to find creases ... lateral agility allows him to pick through the crowd at the line of scrimmage ... able to drop his hips and cut back to force overpursuit in space ... better shake than expected for a bigger back ... runs with balance to regain his footing through soft contact ... will drop his pads and burrow through holes at the goal line ... NFL coaches will appreciate his competitive fight as a ball carrier ... wasn’t targeted often but showed promising hands when he was ... flashes violent hands/extension in pass pro (he isn’t consistent with it, but we know he has it in him) ... one of only nine FBS players with at least 17 rushing touchdowns in 2022 ... registered at least one explosive play (20-plus yards) in 12 of 14 games in 2022 ... impressive 6.7 yards per carry average in college.

WEAKNESSES: Upright runner and exposes the B’s (body and ball) ... displays peripheral vision but will miss holes at times, and his decision-making at the line can be inconsistent ... broken tackles are based more on his size and body balance rather than pure power ... tough to get on the ground but can be stalled or turned easily at contact ... not very graceful through tight line at the line of scrimmage ... fumbled six times on 361 career carries ... limited receiving experience and will need work to be more than just a screen target ... needs to do a better job deciphering all the moving parts as a blocker ... injured the MCL in his right knee in the College Football Playoff semifinals (December 2022), which required surgery (January 2023) and sidelined him for the national title game vs. Georgia and the pre-draft process ... only one season as the full-time starter.

SUMMARY: A one-year starter at TCU, Miller was the lead back in former offensive coordinator Garrett Riley’s RPO-based offense. A lower-level high school quarterback, he was pushed up the Horned Frogs’ depth chart when Zach Evans bolted for Ole Miss. Miller responded with 1,399 rushing yards in 2022, which were the most by a TCU player in more than 20 years when LaDainian Tomlinson led the country in rushing yards (2,158) in 2000. A patient runner, Miller has lively feet for his size to slice through openings, tempo his cuts or flash a pull-away gear on the outside. Though very competitive as a runner, he isn’t a true power back, and his upright run style might negate a few of his strengths vs. NFL competition. Overall, Miller is a work in progress as a receiver and blocker, and his decision making as a runner has room for improvement, but his lower-body agility, acceleration and natural balance are traits that can upgrade an NFL backfield. Not being able to work out pre-draft might hurt him a tad on draft weekend, but he has NFL starting talent.

9. ISRAEL ABANIKANDA | Pittsburgh 5101 | 216 lbs. | 3JR Brooklyn, N.Y. (Abraham Lincoln) 10/5/2002 (age 20.56) #2

BACKGROUND: Israel “Izzy” Abanikanda (Ah-BANNA-can-dah), who is the youngest of three children, was born and raised in Brooklyn to Nigerian parents. Following in his older brother’s footsteps, he started playing football at age 4 (in a league for six-year-olds) and began working with a personal trainer at age 7. After playing through elementary and middle school, Abanikanda attended Abraham Lincoln High School, where he worked himself into the varsity running back rotation as a freshman. After earning All-League honors as a sophomore with 493 rushing yards, he became the full-time starter as a junior and rushed for 1,082 yards and 14 touchdowns, adding 28 tackles as a defensive back to earn Brooklyn Borough MVP. As a senior, Abanikanda was named New York’s 2019 Gatorade Player of the Year and the Class 2A Co-Player of the Year with 1,350 rushing yards on 136 carries (9.9 average), adding 182 receiving yards, 30 tackles and two interceptions. He finished with 25 total touchdowns as a senior (20 rushing, 3 receiving, 2 kickoff returns) to again earn first team All-League and All-State honors. Abanikanda was also a standout track athlete and two-time 100-meter Gold Medalist at the New York City Mayor’s Cup Race. He placed third at the 2019 New York state championships in the 100 meters (10.94) and No. 14 in the 200 meters (23.19).

A three-star recruit, Abanikanda was the No. 30 running back in the 2020 recruiting class and the No. 2 recruit in New York. He considered offers from Duke, Purdue, Rutgers, Syracuse, Tennessee and Virginia Tech before committing to Pittsburgh in June 2019 prior to his senior year. His father (Saidi) and mother (Mariam) were born in Lagos, Nigeria. Saidi moved to the United States in 1984 to attend Georgia Tech, where he was a sprinter on the Yellow Jackets’ track team and later joined the football team despite no experience with the sport. After returning to Nigeria, Saidi met Mariam, got married and started a family before the family returned to the United States. Israel’s older brother (Michael), who was born in Nigeria, was a walk-on defensive back at Temple (2012) and Buffalo (2015-16). Abanikanda decided to opt out of the 2022 bowl game and skip his senior year to enter the 2023 NFL Draft.

STRENGTHS: Sports a cut, lean-muscled body type ... quick, supple footwork to make split-second cuts and decisively adjust his run path ... above-average vision and one-step burst to center developing holes ... scans quickly to set up blockers or find the abrupt cutback lane ... excellent spatial awareness to slalom around blocks and gravitate toward openings ... runs with a fully-charged GPS system ... can mash the accelerator when he has green grass in front of him (three touchdown carries of 65-plus yards in 2022) ... led FBS in scoring (11.6 points per game) and total touchdowns (21) in 2022 ... showed adequate receiving skills ... not fundamentally sound as a blocker but will work to keep rushers occupied ... offers kick return experience, averaging 22.8 yards in his career with a 98-yard touchdown (19/434/1) ... young for his class and will be only 20 years old when the 2023 NFL season kicks off ... highly productive 2022 season with 100-plus rushing yards in nine of 11 games, including a school-record 320 yards and six touchdowns vs. Virginia Tech (broke Tony Dorsett’s single-game record).

WEAKNESSES: Struggles to maintain his balance through contact and goes down too easily (averaged only 2.67 yards after contact in 2022) ... below-average finishing power and doesn’t run with the physicality for short-yardage wins ... runs with tall pads and doesn’t drive through tackle attempts ... ball security must improve (three fumbles in 2022) ... wasn’t asked to be much more than a screen target at Pitt ... late hands adjusting to throws away from his body as a pass catcher (five drops the past two seasons) ... shuffles and squares in pass protection but must develop his anchor and become more forceful with his hands/punch ... missed one game as a junior because of injury (November 2022) and left two other games in 2022 because of injuries; sidelined for the NFL Scouting Combine with a left hamstring injury (March 2023) ... will face workload questions in the NFL.

SUMMARY: A two-year starter at Pittsburgh, Abanikanda was the featured weapon in offensive coordinator Frank Cignetti Jr.’s balanced run attack. After a pass-heavy offense with quarterback Kenny Pickett and former coordinator Mark Whipple, Pitt dedicated the offense to the run game in 2022, and Abanikanda responded with a career-year, finishing No. 2 in the FBS in all-purpose yards (164.1 per game). Abanikanda has eyes that are able to keep up with his lower body athleticism, which allows him to use a variety of rush paths and run with rhythm. His body tends to weaken once defenders make contact (only 45.2 percent of his 2022 yardage came after contact), and his workload will need to be monitored at the next level. Overall, Abanikanda doesn’t have the contact balance desired for a featured NFL back, but he is an instinctive runner with outstanding vision, burst and run-away gear to be a productive part of a committee backfield. His development as a blocker and receiver will also determine his NFL ceiling.

GRADE: 3rd-4th Round

10. ZACH EVANS | Ole Miss5111 | 202 lbs. | 3JRHouston, Texas (North Shore)5/30/2001 (age 21.91)#6

BACKGROUND: Zachary “Zach” Evans, who is the youngest of five boys, was raised northeast of downtown Houston by his mother (Antoinette). He followed in the footsteps of his older brothers and started playing football in elementary school and emerged as an up-and-coming star in middle school. Evans enrolled at Galena Park North Shore High School, where he was a four-year varsity letterman as a running back. He rushed for 1,483 yards and 27 touchdowns as a sophomore and was recognized as the District’s Newcomer of the Year. As a junior, Evans led North Shore to a 15-0 record and No. 1 ranking nationally, including the 2018 6A state championship. He finished his junior year with 1,784 rushing yards and 29 touchdowns and was named the National Player of the Year. Evans again helped North Shore to the 6A state title in 2019, although he was suspended for the championship game (third game he missed as a senior because of suspension). He finished his senior year with 1,600 rushing yards (12.6 yards per carry) and 20 touchdowns, earning first team All-American and All-State honors. Evans earned MVP honors at the Under Armor All-American Game. He finished his prep career with 4,867 rushing yards and 76 touchdowns.

A five-star recruit, Evans was the No. 2 running back in the 2020 recruiting class (behind Bijan Robinson) and the No. 1 recruit in Texas. He ranked No. 16 overall nationally and was the highest-ranked running back from Texas since Adrian Peterson at one point during his recruitment. As a freshman, he received his first scholarship offer from LSU, which had recently signed another North Shore product K’Lavon Chaisson. Shortly after, the recruiting floodgates opened, and Evans was offered a full ride from almost every national program. During his senior season, he announced four finalists: Alabama, Georgia, LSU and Texas A&M. Evans signed with Georgia during the early signing period but planned to wait until the All-American Game to reveal his choice. But he delayed the announcement, and Georgia released him from his letter of intent in January. Evans reopened his recruitment and was reportedly considering LSU, Ole Miss, Tennessee and Texas A&M. But national signing day came and went without Evans choosing a school. A few months later in May 2020, Evans enrolled at TCU, which surprised everyone who tracked his roller coaster recruitment. He was not only the highest-ranked recruit in the Horned Frogs’ 2020 class (one spot ahead of wide receiver Quentin Johnston), but he was highest-ranked recruit in the history of the program (TCU’s first five-star signee). After two seasons in Fort Worth, Evans elected to enter the transfer portal and resurfaced at Ole Miss for the 2022 season. His father figure growing up was his grandfather (Albert), who passed away in September 2018. Evans elected to skip his senior season and enter the 2023 NFL Draft.

STRENGTHS: Sleek, balanced runner with an athletic build ... displays the lower body explosiveness to nimbly burst in any direction ... matches his vision with his one-step acceleration to clear holes and speed away from the crowd ... skillfully weaves through traffic and shows a natural understanding of run angles ... at his best on pitch/toss plays that get him on an outside track ... shows a breakaway gear to distance himself from the crowd ... inconsistent push-the-pile power but builds up speed, lowers his pads and barrels through contact at the second and third levels ... uses a physical stiff-arm to fend off tacklers ... catches the ball well on the move and should excel in the screen/swing game ... wasn’t overused in college, logging only 320 offensive touches ... consistently created chunk plays (averaged nearly 7.0 yards per carry and 11.0 yards per catch over his three-year career).

WEAKNESSES: Upright runner with inconsistent pad level ... undeveloped patience and block reading between the tackles ... occasionally runs with blinders and will miss some backside opportunities ... his legs lose life at contact as an inside runner ... makes some curious second-level decisions and needs to do a better job settling his feet to set up open-field cuts ... true pass protection reps were rare on film and unproven as a blocker ... will run before securing throws (five drops on 43 career targets) ... wasn't a return man in college and has minimal special teams experience ... the character and medical vetting process will be imperative ... he was suspended twice as a senior in high school for "violating team rules" and missed three games, including the 2019 state championship game ... battled several injuries the past two seasons: missed six of the final seven games as a sophomore with a turf toe injury (October 2021); missed one game as a junior with a hip injury (September 2022); knocked out of the Alabama game with a concussion (November 2022); sidelined for the NFL Scouting Combine with a left hamstring injury (March 2023).

SUMMARY: A one-year starter at Ole Miss, Evans shared the workload with SEC Freshman of the Year Quinshon Judkins in head coach Lane Kiffin's RPO-based scheme. His carries and rushing production increased each of his three college seasons, although he accounted for only 23.5 percent of the Rebels' carries in 2022. With his explosive one-cut skills, Evans has fantastic feet to give defenders the slip and excels with an outside track, using his acceleration to win the corner, out-angle pursuit and weave through the defense. His all-gas run style can be effective (22.9 percent of his carries in 2022 resulted in a 10-plus-yard gain), but he would also benefit with improved patience to better set up blocks and force missed tackles. Overall, Evans has some baggage and a few undeveloped areas on his NFL résumé, but there is no denying his burst and balance to create explosive plays in different ways. A boom-or-bust prospect, he has the athletic talent to be a dynamic change-of-pace option and offers RB1 potential for an NFL offense.

11. ERIC GRAY | Oklahoma 5094 | 207 lbs. | 4SR Memphis, Tenn. (Lausanne) 11/4/1999 (age 23.48) #0

BACKGROUND: Eric Gray Jr. grew up in Memphis and started playing youth football at age 4 (his mother, Sharone, was the director of the league). He played quarterback throughout his childhood before transitioning to running back for high school. Gray attended Lausanne Collegiate School in Memphis, where he was a four-year letterman on varsity. He became the starting running back as a sophomore and rushed for 2,251 yards and 38 touchdowns, helping Lausanne to the 2016 state championship and winning Tennessee Mr. Football honors. Gray led the team to back-to-back Division II-AA state titles as a junior as he had his most productive season with 3,151 rushing yards and 45 touchdowns. He planned to transfer to IMG Academy for his senior season but returned to Lausanne, where he won Tennessee Mr. Football honors for the third consecutive year (only player to do so) and Tennessee Gatorade Player of the Year honors for the second consecutive year. Gray was named a U.S. Army All-American and finished his final season with 2,499 rushing yards and 40 touchdowns. Lausanne enjoyed a 46-4 record in his four varsity seasons, and Gray set a state record with 138 career touchdowns. He also ran track (sprinter) his first three seasons in high school, setting career bests in the 100 meters (11.32) and 200 meters (23.94).

A four-star recruit, Gray was the No. 3 all-purpose back in the 2019 recruiting class and the No. 5 recruit in Tennessee (No. 1 running back in the state). He was heavily recruited by every SEC program but developed a connection with Jim Harbaugh and committed to Michigan the July prior to his senior season. However, the distance was an issue, and Gray decommitted a few weeks before signing day. He had a final five of Memphis, Michigan, Ole Miss, South Carolina and Tennessee and decided to stay close to home, graduating early and enrolling in Knoxville in January 2019. After head coach Jeremy Pruitt was fired in January 2021, Gray entered the transfer portal and committed to Oklahoma, where he spent his final two seasons. His father (Eric Sr.) played running back at Tennessee State (1985-87) and was the running back coach at Lausanne. Eric's uncle (Maurice Hall) won a national championship as a running back at Ohio State (2001-04). Gray graduated with his degree in multidisciplinary studies. He opted out of the 2022 bowl game and accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl (was voted the American team's practice player of the week at running back).

STRENGTHS: Runs low to the ground with a compact lower body ... controlled footwork and fluid hips for crisp cutting ... drops his hips to bounce laterally and make defenders miss in a phone booth or open space ... runs with bend and balance to keep his footing through tackle attempts ... patiently reads blocks and tempos his runs to keep linebackers from squaring him up ... has a sense for when to mash the gas or slow play his pace for better options ... hunts for extra-base hits and averaged a first-down every 2.7 carries as a senior ... effective screen target, adjusting to throws and catching well in stride (zero drops on 40 targets in 2022) ... not shy sticking his face in and picking up blitzers as a blocker ... coaches rave about his football character and toughness to play through minor injuries ... productive senior season, ranking top 15 in the FBS in rushing yards per game.

WEAKNESSES: Runs with nondescript power between the tackles ... lacks lower-the-shoulder strength in short yardage ... quicker than fast and lacks a legitimate home run gear ... doesn't consistently win foot races to the corner ... requires a moment to get racing again after he gears down ... more of a screen receiver than developed route runner ... flashes feistiness as a pass blocker, but his smaller frame will limit his success rate vs. NFL size ... room to clean up his ball security (five career fumbles) ... doesn't bring any special teams experience with him.

SUMMARY: A two-year starter at Oklahoma, Gray was the lead back in offensive coordinator Jeff Lebby's up-tempo, RPO-based scheme. After teasing his talented skill set at Tennessee and first season at Oklahoma, he put together a career year as a senior, leading the Big 12 in rushing yards per carry (6.4) and ranking second in rushing yards per game (113.7). Gray is quick to gather, plant and burst with the explosive cutting skills to shake defenders and pick up chunk yardage (his 44 carries of 10-plus yards in 2022 ranked No. 7 in the FBS). Although he isn't an inside grinder, he stays behind his pads with the low center of gravity and pacing that help him pinball off contact. Overall, Gray has only average speed and run power, but he is a balanced, agile runner with darting quickness and steady pass-catching skills. His play style is similar to Clyde Edwards-Helaire and he should be a productive change of pace/passing-down back in the NFL.

12. CHASE BROWN | Illinois 5094 | 209 lbs. | 5SR London, Ontario (St. Stephen's Episcopal) 3/21/2000 (age 23.10) #2

BACKGROUND: Chase Brown, who has a sister and identical twin brother, was born and raised in south Ontario and played youth and club football in London, Ontario. He originally attended London South Collegiate Institute, where he was a standout running back as a freshman and sophomore. Looking for increased exposure as a football recruit, Brown and his brother in August 2016 transferred (on scholarship) to St. Stephen's Episcopal School, a private school in Bradenton, Fla. The 16-year-old twins moved in with their host family (Karen and Phil Yates). In his first year with his new school, Brown helped lead the program to the 2016 state title with 1,416 rushing yards and 19 touchdowns, adding 13 tackles on defense. As a senior, he again led St. Stephen's to a conference championship and earned second team all-state honors with 1,508 rushing yards and 27 touchdowns, becoming the school's all-time leading rusher (2,924 yards) in two seasons. Brown also lettered in track and set the school record in the 100 meters (10.88) and anchored the 2018 state champion 400-meter relay (42.98) along with his twin brother.

A three-star recruit, Brown was the No. 59 running back in the 2018 recruiting class and the No. 144 recruit in Florida. He received scholarship offers to Power 5 programs like Indiana and Syracuse but committed to Western Michigan because he hoped to become a commercial pilot (like his host father) after football (Brown: "The main reason I went is for their aviation program"). After one season with the Broncos, Brown decided to enter the transfer portal and sign with Illinois, rejoining his twin brother. Brown was originally denied immediate eligibility, but his transfer waiver was granted midway through the 2019 season. He was born two minutes ahead of his identical twin brother (Sydney), who was a five-year starting safety at Illinois and is also a prospect in the 2023 NFL Draft class. Brown's father (Darren Isaac) was a running back for three seasons in the Canadian Football League (1991-93) and a former coach. His mother (Raechel Brown) is a former figure skater. Brown is a Canadian citizen and currently has a visa as an international student. He graduated with his degree in communication and is pursuing his master's degree in strategic brand communication. Brown opted out of the 2022 bowl game and accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl (was voted the National team's practice player-of-the-week at running back).

PRO DAY	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	(stood on Combine testing)

STRENGTHS: Compact build and low center of gravity helps him absorb and bounce off contact ... sees the field well and trusts his vision ... sharp, balanced cuts leave missed tackles all over the field ... runs with timing and patience to allow blocks to engage before accelerating through the hole ... presses the line and abruptly sticks his foot in the ground on stretch and outside zone runs, forcing overpursuit with his cutting control ... quickly taps into his top gear to create explosive runs (ranked No. 2 in the FBS with 48 runs of 10-plus yards in 2022) ... his 40-inch vertical and 10-foot 7-inch broad jump ranked No. 1 among running backs at the NFL Scouting Combine ... made clear improvements as a route runner and blocker on the 2022 tape ... gained 25 pounds since he arrived at Illinois and changed his nutrition to prepare his body for the workload vs. Big Ten competition ... had a career-year as a senior, surpassing 100 rushing yards in 10 of 12 games, including vs. the top run defenses (Michigan, Minnesota, Wisconsin) on the schedule.

WEAKNESSES: Average run power and not a consistent drive-through-contact runner ... slight hip tightness and can be tripped up by arm tackles ... inconsistent second-level cuts ... accelerates well, but pull-away gear doesn't always match timed speed ... inconsistent blocking reps on tape, either missing the blitz or struggling to square and sustain ... ball security must improve (five fumbles in 2022) ... smaller target as a pass catcher ... low touchdown production considering his offensive touches ... suffered two Grade-2 AC sprains as a junior, one in preseason camp (August 2021) and another vs. Maryland (September 2021).

SUMMARY: A three-year starter at Illinois, Brown was the lead back in offensive coordinator Barry Lunney's zone-based run scheme. A Canada native, he leaves Illinois as the school's No. 2 all-time leading rusher after a standout 2022 season, finishing second in the FBS in carries (328) and third in rushing yards per game (136.9). Built low to the ground, Brown feels the flow of pursuit and cuts against it with above-average balance, pacing and toughness. He wasn't asked to run a variety of routes, but he catches the ball cleanly away from his frame when leaked out as a receiver. Overall, Brown has mediocre run strength and must continue to prove himself as a blocker, but his ability to pair his quick-scan vision with his controlled footwork should translate well to the next level. He projects as an NFL rotational back who will be ready when/if a starting opportunity arises.

GRADE: 4th Round

13. DEWAYNE MCBRIDE | UAB 5103 | 209 lbs. | 3JR Starke, Fla. (Vanguard) 7/8/2001 (age 21.80) #22

BACKGROUND: DeWayne "Debo" McBride Jr., who has five sisters, grew up in northern Florida with his mother (Melissa Hill) while also living with his grandmother at times. He was introduced to football by his father (DeWayne) and was a standout running back throughout youth levels. McBride started his prep career at Bradford High School in Starke and moved up to varsity as a freshman. He transferred to Fleming Island High School for his sophomore and junior seasons, helping the team to an 11-3 record in 2017. For his senior season, he transferred again, this time to Vanguard High School in Ocala where his uncle (DeWhitt Betterson), who was a productive running back at Troy (2001-04), was on the coaching staff. In his final season, McBride rushed for 963 yards and 12 touchdowns on 121 carries (8.0 average), adding 17 tackles, 3.0 tackles for loss and 1.0 sack as a linebacker on defense. McBride also lettered in track (relays and throws) at Vanguard and set personal-bests in the shot put (44 feet 2.25 inches) and discus (147-10.75).

A three-star recruit, McBride was the No. 111 running back in the 2020 recruiting class and the No. 266 recruit in Florida. He collected numerous FBS-level offers from programs like Coastal Carolina, Louisville, Purdue, Rutgers, Troy and Tulane. But McBride enjoyed his visit to UAB and committed to former head coach Bill Clark. He was the fifth-ranked recruit in the Blazers' 2020 class. His younger brother (Dejon) is a three-star defensive tackle recruit in the 2023 class with high-profile offers from schools like Louisville and Ohio State. His cousin (DeWhitt Betterson Jr.) is a redshirt freshman running back at Troy. McBride opted out of the 2022 bowl game and declared early for the 2023 NFL Draft.

PRO DAY	5104	215	30 3/8	9 3/8	74 1/4	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	20 (bench only – right hamstring)

STRENGTHS: Remarkable contact balance with the innate ability to keep his legs alive and feet afloat (1,072 rushing yards after contact in 2022) ... patient between the tackles with quick-read vision to hit the crease or cutback lane ... displays the lateral agility to quickly switch gaps and get north-south ... above-average proximity awareness and has enough shake to string moves together at the second level (eight carries of 45-plus yards in 2022) ... shifty without gearing down ... highly determined and beats himself up when grounded by a single defender ... remarkable final season in college, finishing No. 2 in the country with 1,713 rushing yards in only 11 games — also set school records in rushing touchdowns (19) and total points (114) in a single season.

WEAKNESSES: Doesn’t have separating speed and can be tracked down from behind ... average backfield burst and needs to rely on his quick reactor hit holes with proper timing ... his eyes get ahead of his lower body at times, creating wasted steps in his gather-and-cut motion ... flashes the ability to convert his speed to power as a runner but needs to use consistent pad level to finish through defenders ... had five catches in his career and is unproven as a receiver and blocker ... fumbled nine times over the past two seasons, and ball security is a sincere concern ... was sidelined at the combine because of a right hamstring injury (March 2023) ... rushed for 100-plus yards in every game in 2022 except against the LSU defense (managed just 2.6 yards per carry).

SUMMARY: A two-year starter at UAB, McBride was a record-setting back in former offensive coordinator Bryant Vincent’s outside zone scheme. After an impressive sophomore season, he led the FBS in rushing yards per game (155.7) and per carry (7.4) in 2022, setting numerous UAB records, including rushing yards in a season (1,713) and game (272). With his compact build and shifty feet, McBride absorbs contact well with knee bend and toughness to quickly regain his balance (his 4.6 yards post-contact ranked No. 1 in the FBS in 2022). Though he has instinctive run qualities, his lower body and eyes aren’t always synced up, and his ordinary burst and long speed will be more noticeable versus NFL defenses. Overall, McBride is unproven as a pass catcher and blocker, which might restrict his NFL role, but his contact balance, vision and lateral agility are among the best this running back draft class has to offer. He projects best in a zone scheme.

GRADE: 4th Round

14. KENNY MCINTOSH | Georgia 6002 | 204 lbs. | 4SR Fort Lauderdale, Fla. (University) 3/3/2000 (age 23.15) #6

BACKGROUND: Kenneth “Kenny” McIntosh, who is one of six children, grew up in Pompano Beach where he started playing baseball, basketball and football at the pee wee level (also ran track in middle school). He attended University School and was teammates with Zay Flowers (Boston College) and started playing varsity football in the eighth grade. After playing primarily at safety as a freshman, McIntosh saw his playing time at running back increase as a sophomore, rushing for 1,214 yards in his first season as the feature back. As a junior, he finished with 1,261 rushing yards and 14 touchdowns, rushing for 114.6 yards per game and earning All-County honors. McIntosh has his most productive season as a senior with 1,423 rushing yards (10.5 yards per carry) and 20 touchdowns. He finished his prep career with 44 rushing touchdowns and eight touchdown receptions. McIntosh also lettered in basketball his first three years and played with Team Florida on the AAU circuit through his junior year.

A four-star recruit, McIntosh was the No. 11 running back in the 2019 recruiting class and the No. 24 recruit in Florida. With his football bloodlines and talent, he received scholarship offers from Miami (Fla.) and Rutgers in eighth grade followed by Alabama in ninth grade. McIntosh considered offers from Auburn, Florida, Notre Dame, Ohio State, Oklahoma and others before committing to Georgia during his senior season (he didn’t want to go somewhere cold, but also wanted to leave the state of Florida for college). McIntosh grew up in a football family: his older brother (R.J.) played defensive tackle at Miami (Fla.) and was a fifth-round pick (No. 139 overall) in the 2018 NFL Draft (has played five seasons in the NFL); his older brother (Deon) played running back at Notre Dame (2016-17) before a year at the junior college level and two seasons at Washington State (2019-20), leading the team in rushing as a senior; their father (Richard) led Dillard High School to the 1989 Florida 4A state championship as a fullback. McIntosh accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl.

STRENGTHS: Sculpted body with defined muscle tone and excellent pound-for-pound strength ... runs physically and balanced — doesn’t explode into contact but makes it a chore on defenders to ground him ... flashes short-yardage and goal-line surge ... runs with burst and acceleration to quickly clear holes ... nice job off tackle and follows pullers and cutbacks once he finds space ... keeps his momentum alive with his ability to swerve through congestion ... dangerous as a pass catcher and didn’t register a drop in college (90 career targets) ... finished third on the team in both receptions and receiving yards in 2022 (led the team in both rushing and receiving in Peach Bowl win against Ohio State) ... locates pressures well and gets into position to square up blitzers ... his father and older brothers didn’t allow him to grow up soft ... averaged 26.8 yards as a kick returner (14/375/0) ... only 280 career carries and wasn’t worn down.

WEAKNESSES: Inconsistent off-script creator ... erratic vision/anticipation at the line of scrimmage ... late to find the cutback lane and makes too much contact with his own blockers ... inconsistent pad level into contact ... needs to do a better job making the first man miss ... can rip off chunk plays, but not a true home run hitter (his initial acceleration is better than his finishing speed) ... four fumbles over the last two seasons ... straight-legged as a blocker and needs to better bend and roll his hips to slow down defenders ... battled several minor injuries: missed two games as a sophomore with a minor knee injury (October 2020); missed one game as a junior because of a hamstring issue (October 2021); missed 2021 spring practices with an elbow injury (March 2021); battled a thigh contusion early in his senior year (September 2022) ... arrested on misdemeanor charges of reckless driving and failure to wear a seat belt (April 2022) after the car he was driving collided with another vehicle around 4 a.m. (George Pickens was also in the car) ... modest career production with only one 100-yard rushing game.

SUMMARY: A one-year starter at Georgia, McIntosh was the leader of the Bulldogs’ backfield committee in offensive coordinator Todd Monken’s scheme. With Zamir White and James Cook off to the NFL, he emerged atop Georgia’s running back depth chart as a senior and produced as both a rusher and receiver (one of only two FBS backs with 40-plus catches and 500-plus receiving yards in 2022). Nicknamed “The Blueprint,” McIntosh displays natural pass-catching skills and posted more 25-plus-yard catches (five) than runs (four) in 2022. He is able to sift and glide through lanes but is more of a point-of-entry back with sporadic vision and make-you-miss ability. Overall, McIntosh needs to be led to the hole and isn’t much of a creator, but he offers burst as a runner and pass-catching skills. He projects best as a committee back who specializes in catching the football, similar to his role in college.

GRADE: 4th-5th Round

15. DEUCE VAUGHN | Kansas State 5050 | 179 lbs. | 3JR Round Rock, Texas (Cedar Ridge) 11/2/2001 (age 21.49) #22

BACKGROUND: Christopher “Deuce” Vaughn II, who has two younger sisters, was born in Fayetteville, Ark., while his father was an assistant coach at Arkansas. His first go-to sport was soccer, which he played throughout elementary and middle school. After several years of flag football, Vaughn started playing tackle football in the seventh grade after the family moved to the Austin area. He enrolled at Cedar Ridge High School, where he got a taste of varsity football as a freshman. After playing a part-time role as a sophomore, Vaughn became the full-time starting running back as a junior and rushed for 1,901 yards and 21 touchdowns, earning 2018 District Offensive MVP honors. As a senior, he set the school’s single-season rushing record with 1,940 yards, again earning District MVP as well as honorable mention All-State honors. Vaughn finished his prep career with 5,472 all-purpose yards and 50 touchdowns. He played junior varsity basketball as a freshman and also lettered in track, posting personal bests in the 100 meters (11.20), 200 meters (23.62) and long jump (21 feet 9.75 inches).

A three-star recruit, Vaughn was the No. 16 all-purpose back in the 2020 recruiting class and the No. 157 recruit in Texas. After his junior season, South Florida was the first school to offer him followed by Missouri and Arkansas. Kansas State offered him in February 2019, and Vaughn committed a few months later after an official visit to Manhattan. His father (Chris) played linebacker at Murray State (1994-97) before he worked his way up through the college coaching ranks as a defensive assistant: Tulsa (2000), Arkansas (2000-07), Ole Miss (2008-11), Memphis (2012-13) and Texas (2014-15). After leaving the college ranks following an NCAA investigation into recruiting violations, Chris joined the Dallas Cowboys’ front office in 2017 as a scouting assistant and currently serves as the assistant director of college scouting. Deuce elected to skip his senior season and enter the 2023 NFL Draft.

STRENGTHS: Built lower to the ground than a fire hydrant ... uses his smaller stature to his advantage, patiently hiding behind blockers and causing defenders to lose their sightlines ... runs with an instinctive feel for lane timing/development ... quick backfield feet to avoid the trash and alter his run track ... his lower-body agility comes from 12 years of playing soccer ... routinely jumps out of low tackle attempts ... doesn’t allow big plays to go unrealized (four plays of 60-plus yards in 2022) ... nice job on wheel routes and was often targeted 10-plus yards downfield (at his best on “Fresno” option routes) ... holds Kansas State records for career catches (116) and receiving yards (1,280) by a running back ... mastered ball security technique to minimize potential fumbles (only two career fumbles) ... top-notch intangibles (earned captain status in 2022) and grew up around the game as the son of a coach and scout ... smaller player, but durable and played in every game the last three seasons, including 30 straight starts ... joined Darren Sproles and Tyler Lockett as the only Kansas State players to surpass 5,000 career all-purpose yards.

WEAKNESSES: Size will always be an issue and limit his on-field role (sub-180-pound running backs are scarce in the NFL) ... marginal run power and can be grounded by arm tackles ... doesn’t have the body strength to be an inside pounder and more times than not, he goes backward rather than forward at contact ... quicker than fast, and can get caught trying to go reach the corner or get east-west ... his quarterback better be accurate because he is throwing to a small target with a limited catch radius (67-inch wingspan) ... squares and competes as a pass blocker, but more of a one-pop guy and gives up too many pressures ... marginal kick/punt return experience and doesn’t offer much value on special teams if he can’t return punts.

SUMMARY: A three-year starter at Kansas State, Vaughn was the featured weapon in offensive coordinator Collin Klein’s scheme as the coaches used creative ways (jet sweeps, slot, etc.) to get the ball in his hands. The FBS leader in all-purpose yards (1,936) in 2022, he leaves Manhattan as one of the best players in school history, finishing No. 2 in all-time rushing yards (3,604) behind only Darren Sproles. Vaughn has been the same height since his freshman year of high school and has a keen understanding of how to hide behind blockers and use his low center of gravity to his advantage. He might not have elite, top-end speed, but he rarely runs in a straight line, always drifting and creating difficult angles for tacklers. Overall, Vaughn’s size limitations show up in all phases (running, receiving, blocking) and will diminish his NFL role, but he maximizes every ounce of his talent with the playmaking sparks that will occasionally create a wildfire. He projects best as a rotational satellite back in the NFL who will be at his best in space.

GRADE: 4th-5th Round

16. CHRIS RODRIGUEZ JR. | Kentucky 5115 | 217 lbs. | 5SR McDonough, Ga. (Ola) 9/26/2000 (age 22.59) #24

BACKGROUND: Christopher “Chris” Rodriguez Jr., who has two sisters, was born in Riverdale, Ga., (southern suburb of Atlanta) and grew up playing multiple sports, including baseball, basketball and football (his first position was center in youth football). He enrolled at Ola High School, where he was a three-sport letterman. After seeing varsity action in three games as a freshman, Rodriguez had a breakout sophomore season with 1,401 rushing yards and 15 touchdowns. As a junior, he recorded 1,660 rushing yards and 26 touchdowns, leading Ola to the program’s first state playoff appearance in 2016. Rodriguez posted his best production as a senior with 1,669 rushing yards and 25 touchdowns, averaging 7.2 yards per carry and taking home All-County, All-Region and All-State honors. He also played on defense as a safety. Rodriguez lettered in basketball and track at Ola, setting personal bests in the 100 meters (11.31), 110-meter hurdles (20.24) and shot put (40 feet 2.75 inches).

A three-star recruit, Rodriguez was the No. 64 running back in the 2018 recruiting class and the No. 114 recruit in Georgia. Very active in high school sports year-round, he didn't go to many camps to boost his name on the recruiting trail. He was hoping to receive an offer from in-state Georgia, but the Bulldogs only signed one back in that class, and they landed the No. 1 ranked running back recruit (Zamir White). Rodriguez did hear from several other SEC schools, including offers from Kentucky, Mississippi State and Ole Miss. Prior to his senior year, he signed with the Wildcats, who were looking for a running back with a similar style to take over for Benny Snell Jr. Rodriguez, who is younger for his class because he skipped a grade in elementary school, graduated with his degree in community leadership and development (May 2022), becoming the first in his family to graduate college. His mother (Stephanie Thornton) battled lupus and unexpectedly passed away in January 2023 at age 42. Rodriguez opted out of Kentucky's 2022 bowl game and accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl.

STRENGTHS: Built like a linebacker with his big-boned, broad frame ... gets rolling downhill with the body strength and momentum that makes him tough to bring down (wears No. 24 jersey because of Marshawn Lynch) ... tackle attempts above the waist are a waste ... routinely takes defensive backs for a ride once he clears the first wave ... physical at the line of scrimmage with the inside vision to follow his blocks ... shows the patience to allow the lane to widen, but also the agile footwork to work through narrow holes ... fumbles decreased from six in 2021 to only one in 2022 ... durable runner and able to handle a large workload ... owns the body composition and toughness to step up in the hole and stone rushers ... two-year team captain ... dependable production when on the field, averaging 6.2 yards per carry in his career ... responsible for 35 total touchdowns, which is the third-most in school history (behind Benny Snell and Randall Cobb).

WEAKNESSES: Runs tall and gives tacklers a big target ... average burst runner and occasionally guilty of making an extra backfield move instead of immediately getting downhill ... often caught when racing to the perimeter and won't out-run NFL pursuit ... his footwork on 90-degree cuts is more clunky than sharp ... not elusive in the open field ... inconsistent reading and reacting to blitzers in pass pro ... struggles to uncover in his routes, even simple screens ... only 30 career targets (three drops) over five seasons ... lackluster experience on special teams coverages (141 career snaps over five years) ... served a four-game suspension as a senior after he was arrested and charged with driving under the influence and careless driving (May 2022).

SUMMARY: A two-year starter at Kentucky, Rodriguez was the lead back in former offensive coordinator Rich Scarangelo's pro-style scheme. Over the last two seasons, he averaged 108.7 rushing yards per game and finished his career No. 3 on the school's all-time rushing list with 3,644 rushing yards (also set the school record with 20 career 100-yard rushing games). Though he gets himself in trouble when he tries to go east-west, Rodriguez does a great job keeping his momentum north-south to consistently drag defenders and fall forward for extra yards. He runs like a locomotive off the tracks but has trouble gearing back up after slowing his feet, and he lacks breakaway speed (only 15 of his 400 carries the past two seasons went for 20-plus yards). Overall, Rodriguez is a role-specific runner and unproven as a blocker/pass-catcher, but he is a bruising ball carrier with outstanding vision and toughness. He projects as a change-of-pace power back who gets better as the game goes on.

GRADE: 5th Round

17. SEAN TUCKER | Syracuse 5092 | 207 lbs. | 3JR Owings Mills, Md. (Calvert Hall) 10/25/2001 (age 21.51) #34

BACKGROUND: Sean Tucker, who is the youngest of two boys, was born and raised in Owings Mills (20 miles northwest of Baltimore), and he started playing football at the little league level. At age 11 he played for the Columbia Ravens in the Mid-Maryland League, initially as a running back before also learning defensive back. In eighth grade Tucker was recruited to play for the Hamilton Tigers, where he was teammates with several future FBS athletes like Clemson's Bryan Bresee. He joined the team as a slot receiver and defensive back before moving to running back because of injuries on the team. Tucker was initially set to enroll at St. Frances Academy (Baltimore), but he was recruited to attend Calvert Hall College High, a Catholic school with an up-and-coming football program. After playing on the JV squad as a freshman defensive back and running back, Tucker was called up to varsity as a sophomore and moved to running back full time. As a junior, he rushed for 1,556 yards and 14 touchdowns in 12 games, averaging 7.2 yards per carry and earning All-Conference honors. As a senior, Tucker finished with 1,204 rushing yards and 14 touchdowns to earn first team All-Metro and All-Region honors. He was also a standout in track as a sprinter (indoor and outdoor), winning the conference indoor title in the 55 meters in back-to-back years. He finished high school with personal bests in the 55 meters indoor (6.41), 60 meters indoor (6.88), 100 meters outdoor (10.85) and 200 meters outdoor (21.65).

A three-star recruit out, Tucker was the No. 58 running back in the 2020 recruiting class and the No. 27 recruit in Maryland (No. 3 running back in the state behind MarShawn Lloyd and Blake Corum). Before he was ranked by the recruiting services, Syracuse showed considerable interest and gave Tucker his first scholarship offer the first month into his junior season. He also picked up offers from Rutgers and Wisconsin, but he was already locked in with Syracuse at that point. Tucker elected to opt out of the 2022 bowl game, skip his senior season and enter the 2023 NFL Draft.

PRO DAY	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	(no workout – medicals)

STRENGTHS: Compactly built athlete with a track background ... hits the hole with one-cut burst ... above-average patience and run tempo to follow blocks at the line of scrimmage ... instinctive between the tackles thanks to his block anticipation and lateral footwork ... has enough speed to reverse course and sprint through the back door ... fumbled only three times in his career (once in each of his three seasons) ... catches the ball well on wheel routes and swing screens (first player in school history with 100-plus rushing yards and 100-plus receiving yards in the same game) ... flashes impressive acceleration after the catch to muddy pursuit angles ... rushed for 100-plus yards 17 times, which is second-most in school history ... finished his career No. 3 on Syracuse's all-time rushing list.

WEAKNESSES: Shows one-cut skills but is inconsistent when stringing moves together ... lackluster make-you-miss skills at the second level ... displays slight body stiffness and requires a moment to gather his feet when making 90-degree cuts ... very average run balance, and his feet tend to lose life at contact ... ability to create yards after contact suffers when he doesn't play with consistent pad level ... makes too much contact with his own blockers at the line of scrimmage without wide run lanes ... very predictable route runner, and he doesn't consistently snap his breaks, giving defenders a chance to drive on the catch window ... focus can be disrupted when his eyes wander before securing the football (10 drops in his career) ... flashes the talent to be a capable pass blocker but needs more reps (most of his 2022 tapes had one or fewer snaps in pass protection) ... was unable to work out prior to the NFL Draft and the medical feedback will be paramount to his draft grade.

SUMMARY: A three-year starter at Syracuse, Tucker was the featured running back in former offensive coordinator Robert Anae's zone-based scheme. He put himself on the NFL radar with a Syracuse-record 1,496 rushing yards in 2021, joining Jim Brown, Ernie Davis and Floyd Little as the only Orange running backs to earn All-American recognition. Tucker displays the patience and instincts for inside/outside zone and is able to quickly clear holes with his block anticipation and north-south acceleration. However, he doesn't generate maximum power through his lower half, which tends to limit his yards after contact. Overall, Tucker isn't the most creative or elusive with the ball in his hands, but he has the vision and burst of an explosive one-cut runner and adds value in the passing game. If healthy, he projects best as a change-of-pace back in a zone-running scheme.

18. DENERIC PRINCE | Tulsa

5116 | 216 lbs. | 5SR

Manvel, Texas (Manvel)

#8

BACKGROUND: Deneric (Dah-nair-ick) Prince, who is one of three children, started playing football at age 3. He enrolled at Manvel High School and moved up to varsity full time as a junior and led the team to 13 wins, posting 69 carries for 417 yards (6.0 average) and eight touchdowns as part of a backfield committee. As a senior, he earned second team All-District honors and led Manvel in rushing with 105 carries for 863 yards (8.2 average) and 10 touchdowns. Prince helped Manvel to a 14-1 record with the only loss coming in the 2017 5A state championship game (a 53-49 shootout with Manvel stopped at the 1 yard line to end the game). He combined for 27 catches for 264 yards and two touchdowns over his final two seasons. Prince also ran track at Manvel and was several gold medals as part of the school's relay teams.

A three-star recruit, Prince was the No. 69 running back in the 2018 recruiting class and the No. 171 recruit in Texas. After his junior season, he received several FCS (Abilene Christian, Alcorn State, Southern) and FBS (Louisville, Purdue, SMU, UCLA) offers. After attending a Texas A&M recruiting camp in June 2017, the Aggies reached out with an offer a few days later, and Prince accepted a few days after that. He signed with Texas A&M on signing day and was the second-lowest-ranked recruit in the Aggies' class (only signee below him was a kicker). Prince was part of the same Texas A&M recruiting class as his Manvel teammate Brian Johnson and fellow 2023 NFL Draft prospect Tyree Wilson. Entering his second season in College Station, Prince found himself buried on the depth chart and entered the transfer portal in September 2019. Along with Johnson, the high school teammates transferred to Tulsa and enrolled in January 2020. Prince accepted his invitation to the 2023 East-West Shrine Bowl.

STRENGTHS: Strong bone structure with an athletic build ... picks up his knees and drives through contact ... runs with straight-line burst and long, strong strides to pick up chunks in a hurry ... offers big-play potential and has little trouble pulling away from linebackers ... runs with an attitude and sets the tone physically ... athletic gifts and ability to absorb and resist contact help him break tackles in the open-field ... drags defenders when he keeps his momentum going forward ... caught the ball when it was thrown to him ... averaged more than 5.0 yards per carry each season in school ... has plenty of tread left on the tires after touching the ball only 333 times during five seasons in college.

WEAKNESSES: Upright, narrow-based runner ... too reactive and needs to better anticipate and trust what he sees ... very inconsistent with his pacing with his gear shift often stuck in overdrive ... high pad level, and hints of tightness encumber his lateral cuts ... willing to stick his nose in as a pass blocker, but his posture and technique often let him down (his 2022 tape shows a player nowhere near ready for blocking duties in the NFL) ... didn't drop the ball, but saw only 21 career targets and is inexperienced as a pass catcher ... scarcely used on special teams ... briefly left the team for family reasons and missed the first four games of the 2022 season before he was academically eligible.

SUMMARY: A one-year starter at Tulsa, Prince was a committee back in former head coach Philip Montgomery's up-tempo, spread attack. He was a feast-or-famine performer as a senior: Hhe was one of only five FBS players with multiple 200-yard rushing games (220 yards and 231 yards) but averaged only 46.3 yards in the other six games in 2022. Prince is inconsistent in space to press and set up his blocks, but he accelerates well to be an inside banger and break tackles. His struggles in pass protection, and unproven qualities as a pass catcher hurt his chances to see the field early in the NFL. Overall, Prince turned heads with his impressive athletic profile at the combine, especially for his size, but he must develop a better feel for tempo to unleash his speed and burst. He has rosterable talent for an NFL team willing to bet on his development potential.

GRADE: 5th-6th Round

19. KEATON MITCHELL | East Carolina 5077 | 179 lbs. | 3JR McDonough, Ga. (Eagles Landing) 1/17/2002 (age 21.28) #2

BACKGROUND: Keaton Mitchell, who is the youngest of three children, was born and raised outside of Atlanta and a multi-sport standout throughout his childhood, especially football and track. He attended Eagles Landing Christian Academy and helped the football program to a 54-2 record during his four varsity seasons, including four consecutive Class-A Private Championships. After rushing for 368 yards as a freshman, Mitchell recorded 94 carries for 979 yards (10.4 average) and 20 touchdowns as a sophomore. He became the full-time starter as a junior and accounted for 2,509 rushing yards on 213 carries (11.8 average) and 49 total touchdowns, which was the second-highest touchdown total in state history. As a senior, Mitchell rushed for 1,838 yards and 39 touchdowns on 192 carries (9.6 average) and accounted for 2,672 all-purpose yards, earning Class A Region Player of the Year honors. He also lettered in track (sprints and relays) and placed top five at the 2018 state championships in the 100 meters. Mitchell had career-bests in the 60 meters (7.20), 100 meters (10.99) and 200 meters (22.42).

A three-year recruit, Mitchell was the No. 23 all-purpose back in the 2020 recruiting class and the No. 172 recruit in Georgia. He picked up his first FBS from East Carolina during his junior season. Mitchell later picked up offers from Power 5 programs like Nebraska and West Virginia, but he developed a connection at ECU and committed during his senior year. His father (Anthony) played safety at Tuskegee and went unselected in the 1999 NFL Draft but carved out an eight-year NFL career (1999-2006). He is best remembered with the Ravens for returning a blocked field goal 90 yards for a touchdown in a playoff win against the Titans, which advanced Baltimore to the AFC Championship Game (Baltimore went on to win the Super Bowl). His mother (Kandice) was part of the gold medal 4x100 meter relay team for the USA Junior World National Team and was on a track scholarship at Texas. She always had a passion for football and played linebacker for the Atlanta Phoenix in the Women's National Football Conference and served as the linebacker coach at Henry County High School. Keaton's older brother (Kobi) was a defensive back and ran track at Tuskegee (2019-21). His older sister (Kayla Pritchett) ran track and cross country at the Academy of Art (2013-14) before transferring to UCF (2015-17). Mitchell elected to skip his senior season and enter the 2023 NFL Draft.

PRO DAY	5080	186	30 1/2	9 1/4	74	-	-	-	-	-	4.36	7.40	13 (stood on Combine runs and jumps)

STRENGTHS: Electric start/stop burst and foot quickness (1.50 10-yard split at the Combine) ... eyes and lower body stay in sync, allowing him to make sharp 90-degree cuts in a blink ... can shimmy defenders in the hole ... runs low and hard, allowing him to spin out of weak tackle attempts ... uses his smaller size to stay patient behind blockers before hitting the turbo button ... has enough long speed to out-pace pursuit (track background and bloodlines) ... productive in the passing game with quick hands ... doesn't put the ball on the ground (zero fumbles in 2022) ... his rushing numbers increased each season, including rushing yards per game (only UAB's DeWayne McBride had a higher yard-per-carry average in the FBS in 2022).

WEAKNESSES: Wants to bounce everything outside and avoids inside contact like the plague ... small-framed with marginal bulk and build for the position ... average run strength and struggles to create power through his hips ... meets resistance at contact and will stray away from muddy holes ... displays some stiffness in his change of direction movements ... needs to improve his focus as a pass catcher to secure the ball before running (four drops in 2022) ... will only be able to do so much in pass protection as a blocker ... doesn't have an extensive background on special teams or as a returner ... missed one and a half games because of a hip pointer as a junior (September 2022)

SUMMARY: A two-year starter at East Carolina, Mitchell was the featured back in offensive coordinator Donnie Kirkpatrick's zone-based scheme. He was consistently productive when on the field and had a career year in 2022, ranking No. 2 in the FBS in yards per carry (7.2) and No. 10 in rushing yards per game (121.0). Though obviously undersized, Mitchell is an elusive scatback with the start/stop athleticism to force conflict in space for would-be tacklers (led the FBS with 54 carries of 10-plus yards in 2022). He is bounce happy, and all of his runs feel like a race to the outside corner as he seeks space to operate, whether that was the design or not. Overall, Mitchell isn't built to run between the tackles and wants to stay on the outside, but he has natural run skill with the shifty and nifty foot quickness to create chunk gains. He is a potential change-of-pace back who will help his NFL chances if he develops a role on special teams.

GRADE: 5th-6th Round

20. EVAN HULL | Northwestern 5101 | 209 lbs. | 4JR Maple Grove, Minn. (Maple Grove) 10/26/2000 (age 22.50) #26

BACKGROUND: Evan Hull grew up in the northwest Minneapolis suburb of Maple Grove, where he developed a passion for football at the youth level. He started wrestling and running track in the seventh grade to supplement his training for football (also an avid piano player). Hull enrolled at Maple Grove High School, where he played primarily on the JV squad as a freshman and sophomore while seeing some varsity snaps. He became the starting varsity running back as a junior and set the single-season school record with 2,177 rushing and 19 touchdowns, earning first team All-State honors. As a senior captain, Hull rushed for 1,915 yards and 19 touchdowns and set the single-game school record with 398 rushing yards. He earned first team All-Metro, All-Conference and All-State honors in 2018 and finished his career with a Maple Grove-record 4,140 rushing yards. Hull also lettered all four years in wrestling and track (senior captain in all three sports). He placed second at the 2019 state championships in the 100 meters (10.84) and third in the 200 meters (22.02). Hull's personal best in the 100-meters is 10.72.

A three-star recruit out of high school, Hull was the No. 82 running back in the 2019 recruiting class and the No. 6 recruit in Minnesota. He received mostly FCS-level offers from the Missouri Valley Conference (North Dakota State, North Dakota, Northern Iowa, South Dakota State) and the Ivy League (Cornell, Dartmouth, Pennsylvania, Princeton and Yale). He picked up a Kansas State offer after head coach Chris Klieman left North Dakota State for the Wildcats, but Hull stayed patient hoping for a Big Ten offer. After Northwestern missed on a few other running back targets, it extended an offer to Hull a few weeks before signing day, and he committed the next day. He is engaged to his high school sweetheart (Tiennee Roose), who is the sister of Jermaine Johnson (New York Jets), with a wedding date of July 7, 2023. Hull elected to skip his senior season and enter the 2023 NFL Draft. He accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl.

STRENGTHS: Compactly built and keeps his pads square to the line of scrimmage ... runs low to the ground to absorb hits and maintain his balance ... above-average long speed for the position ... collects his feet well to maneuver through gaps ... above-average patience as a runner to maximize each carry ... strong in the screen game and catches the ball cleanly (only five drops on 116 career targets) ... transitions efficiently from pass catcher to runner ... added kick return duties in 2022, averaging 20.1 yards per return (9/181/0) ... gritty, relentless worker (they had to force him to sleep more), and his coaches call him the “Energizer bunny” because he never gives less than 100 percent at every practice or workout (head coach Pat Fitzgerald: “He’s always had a first guy to show up, last guy to leave mentality.”).

WEAKNESSES: Runs light for a 215-pound back and too easily slowed by arm tackles ... runs with functional pacing and speed but lacks explosiveness ... average elusive qualities and doesn’t consistently make the first man miss ... explosive runs were hard to find on his tape (ranked 98th in the FBS in 2022 with only 21 carries of 10-plus yards) ... his 4.1 yards per carry in 2022 ranked 124th in the FBS ... ball security has room for improvement (four fumbles over the past two seasons) ... below-average anchor, awareness and nuance in pass protection ... had more missed tackles than tackles in his limited experience on special teams coverage.

SUMMARY: A two-year starter at Northwestern, Hull was a multidimensional back in offensive coordinator Mike Bajakian’s run-based scheme, which was one of the least efficient passing offenses in the FBS in 2022 (10 touchdowns, 17 interceptions). One of the few bright spots on a one-win team in 2022, he was the only running back in college football with 50-plus catches and finished No. 3 in the Big Ten in all-purpose yards per game (136.7). With his driven attitude and balance, Hull does a great job keeping his feet underneath him to sustain runs even when he appears bottled up. Though he is a trustworthy receiver, his struggles as a blocker will follow him at the next level and hurt his chances of being a true third-down back. Overall, Hull is a straight-line athlete and struggles to create on his own, but he has a first-round mindset with the run patience and pass-catching skills to stick in the NFL. He can make an NFL roster for a team looking for a speedy No. 3 back who is reliable catching the ball out of the backfield.

GRADE: 6th Round

21. HUNTER LUEPKE | North Dakota State 6012 | 230 lbs. | 5SR Spencer, Wis. (Spencer) 2/28/2000 (age 23.16) #44

BACKGROUND: Hunter Luepke (LIP-kee), who is the oldest of three children, grew up in Spencer and attended Spencer/Columbus Catholic School, where he was a four-sport standout. He was a four-year starter on the football team, starring at running back, defensive end, linebacker and kick returner. As a sophomore, Luepke was named the conference offensive player of the year with 1,249 rushing yards and 24 touchdowns, leading Spencer to the Division-5 state championship game (lost to Amherst). He was named a captain as a junior and rushed for 1,057 yards and 20 total touchdowns. As a senior captain, Luepke rushed for 1,303 yards and 33 total touchdowns, again earning conference offensive player of the year honors. He finished his prep career with 5,770 all-purpose yards (4,452 rushing) and 95 total touchdowns (82 rushing scores). On defense, Luepke totaled 171 tackles and 10.0 sacks in his career, earning first team All-Region as a junior linebacker. He was a four-time conference champion wrestler and qualified for states three times, becoming the school’s first state champion wrestler in 2017 at 195 pounds (also captured the 2018 title at 220 pounds, finishing his senior year with a 49-0 record). He was a three-time all-conference center fielder on the baseball team and also ran track, winning a conference championship in the 100 meters (11.62).

A two-star recruit, Luepke was the No. 8 fullback in the 2018 recruiting class and the No. 26 recruit in Wisconsin. He received interest from Wisconsin and several other Division I programs, but he was ready to put the recruiting process behind him and committed to FCS-level North Dakota State prior to his senior year. Luepke married his high school sweetheart (Sadie) in May 2022 (they met in second grade). He accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl but was unable to participate because of his shoulder injury.

STRENGTHS: Thick, stocky athlete, but not stiff ... impressive body control and fluidity as a pass catcher to reach back and make smooth adjustments ... tracks the ball well to slow his route and frame the football ... coordinated footwork in between the tackles ... gets rolling with his pads forward and a perpetual head of steam ... only one fumble the past three seasons ... high-character player who earned multiple Academic All-District and Honor Roll honors while at North Dakota State (3.42 GPA while majoring in finance) ... was a regular on kickoff return coverage with the skill set to expand his special teams résumé at the next level ... offers alignment versatility in the backfield/wing or in the slot/outside.

WEAKNESSES: Lackluster lateral agility and burst ... resets his eyes quickly when the designed run lane is closed, but his feet aren’t as quick to respond, leading to choppy steps ... more of a banger than make-you-miss runner in the hole ... physical into contact, but not a true hammer ... guilty of concentration drops downfield (three in 2022) ... doesn’t back down from his blocking responsibilities but needs to improve his hand use for better sustain ... battled several injuries, including a season-ending left shoulder injury (November 2022), which required surgery (also missed the Senior Bowl and combine); missed two games as a junior because of a hamstring injury (October 2021); missed one game as a redshirt freshman with an ankle injury (December 2019).

SUMMARY: A three-year starter at North Dakota State, Luepke was part of a running back committee in offensive coordinator Tyler Roehl’s run-heavy, gap power scheme. His impressive career yards per carry (6.1) and yards per reception (17.6) numbers reflect his impact at the FCS level (accounted for 180 total yards against Arizona in 2022, the only FBS defense he faced in college). An all-conference performer in four sports in high school (baseball, football, track and wrestling), Luepke is one of the best pass-catching fullback prospects in recent memory thanks to his body control as a route runner, ball tracker and finisher. His running and blocking won’t be his calling cards in the NFL, but he is serviceable in both areas. Overall, Luepke was a college running back who projects best as a hybrid fullback with H-back pass-catching traits. He needs to find an NFL offense willing to utilize his skill set but can help his chances by starring on special teams coverages.

GRADE: 6th-7th Round

22. MOHAMED IBRAHIM | Minnesota 5076 | 203 lbs. | 6SR Baltimore, Md. (Good Counsel) 9/8/1999 (age 23.64) #24

BACKGROUND: Mohamed Ibrahim (I-bruh-hem), who has two younger sisters, was born and raised in Baltimore. He attended Our Lady of Good Counsel High School in Olney, Md., where he was a three-year varsity starter and played with defensive lineman Josh Paschal (second round by the Detroit Lions in the 2022 NFL Draft out of Kentucky). After rushing for 1,167 yards and 19 touchdowns as a sophomore, Ibrahim had his most productive season as a junior with 1,450 rushing yards on 258 carries and 17 touchdowns. Playing through a broken thumb as a senior, he rushed for 1,314 yards on 206 carries (6.4 average) and 15 touchdowns in 10 games, adding 14 catches for 115 yards.

A three-star recruit, Ibrahim was the No. 62 running back in the 2017 recruiting class and the No. 19 recruit in Maryland. He was the fourth-highest recruit from Good Counsel’s 2017 class behind Paschal, LB Ayinde Eley (Maryland) and DL Naasir Watkins (Kentucky). Ibrahim received his first scholarship offers (Iowa and Temple) after his breakout sophomore season. He considered joining Paschal and Watkins at Kentucky but developed a close connection with P.J. Fleck and committed to Minnesota. Ibrahim took advantage of the NCAA extra year of eligibility because of COVID rules and returned to the Gophers for a sixth season in 2022. He graduated with his degree in electrical engineering. Ibrahim accepted his invitation to the 2023 East-West Shrine Bowl.

PRO DAY	5077	205	28 5/8	9	70 1/8	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	(position drills only – choice)

STRENGTHS: Compactly built and doesn’t play timid ... runs with timing, patience and vision, showing a savvy feel for block development ... creates forward force with his pad level and run power (rarely see him go backwards at contact) ... balanced ball carrier to bounce off defenders ... defensive backs better bring their big boy pants when they meet him in the open field ... enough foot quickness to jump-cut pursuit and reroute his path ... shows functional receiving skills despite only 26 career targets ... only four fumbles on 889 career offensive touches ... often plays hurt and toughs out injuries (played his senior year of high school with a broken thumb) ... highly productive college career and had a streak of 19 consecutive games with 100-plus rushing yards, setting school records for 100-yard games (24) and 200-yard games (5) ... led the nation in rushing touchdowns (20) in 2022, which was more than 60 FBS teams ... ranked second in the FBS in rushing yards per game (138.8) in 2022 ... first Gopher since Laurence Maroney to surpass 1,000 rushing yards in three different seasons.

WEAKNESSES: Runs quick but not explosive ... plodder when racing to the corner and lacks breakaway speed (only two of his 320 rush attempts in 2022 went longer than 35 yards) ... requires a moment to plant and redirect, limiting his elusiveness in small spaces ... inconsistent stringing moves together and needs to better set up defenders in the open field ... little-used screen target in college with a small catch radius ... inconsistent blocking execution and needs to clean up his timing and angles in pass pro ... saw a lot of offensive touches (889) in college and was one of only three FBS players with 320-plus rush attempts in 2022 ... older prospect who will turn 24 as an NFL rookie ... tough as nails, but his body durability is a different story ... concerning injury history, including a ruptured left Achilles (September 2021), which required season-ending surgery; missed one game as a super senior with an ankle injury (October 2022).

SUMMARY: A four-year starter at Minnesota, Ibrahim was the bell-cow back in offensive coordinator Kirk Ciarrocca’s balanced (gap/zone) run scheme. At a program known for productive running backs, he climbed to the top of the Gophers’ record books with the most rushing yards in a single-game (263), single-season (1,665) and career (4,668), also setting the rushing touchdown records for a single game (4), single-season (20) and career (53). Ibrahim stays behind his square, low pads, and his run balance eliminates gimmies for would-be tacklers, forcing defenders to wrap and finish him to the ground. He senses when the sea is about to part but doesn’t have the fluid hips or run-away gear to escape high-level pursuit. Overall, Ibrahim doesn’t have desired elusiveness or explosion as an NFL runner, but teams looking for a physical, no-nonsense presence in the run game will appreciate his decisiveness, vision and power. He will need the right fit to secure a backup role on an NFL depth chart.

GRADE: 7th Round

23. TRAVIS DYE | USC 5100 | 201 lbs. | 5SR Norco, Calif. (Norco) 8/24/1999 (age 23.68) #26

BACKGROUND: Travis Dye, who is the second-youngest of six children, grew up in Corona, Calif., (east of Los Angeles) in a football family. His first go-to sport was hockey before he starred as a running back at the youth level. The family moved to Norco, where he attended Norco High School and was a three-year varsity letterman. After rushing for 844 yards and nine touchdowns as a sophomore, Dye had a breakout junior season with 1,878 rushing yards on 259 carries (7.3 average) and 15 touchdowns, adding 29 receptions for 465 yards and six touchdowns. As a senior, he was named the League Offensive Player of the Year with 2,383 rushing yards on 255 carries (9.3 average) and 34 touchdowns. Dye finished his prep career with 5,105 rushing yards and 58 touchdowns, which rank No. 2 on the school’s all-time rushing list behind only Toby Gerhart, who holds the California state record. Dye also lettered in lacrosse at Norco.

A three-star recruit, Dye was the No. 50 running back in the 2018 recruiting class and the No. 100 recruit in California. He received recruiting interest from schools like Michigan and Texas but ultimately received only two offers: New Mexico State and Oregon. With only two options, Dye made the no-brainer choice to join his older brother with the Ducks, enrolling early in January 2018. After four seasons in Eugene and a coaching change after the 2021 season, he decided to transfer to USC for his fifth and final season to be closer to home. He proposed to his high school girlfriend (Erin) in December 2021, and they were married in Las Vegas the following summer. They are expecting their first child (a boy) in June 2023. His dad (Mark) played college football at San Jose State (1988-89) after several seasons of professional baseball in the Houston Astros’ organization (1981-85). His mother (Danna) is a competitive soccer player and served as the athletic trainer at Corona Centennial High School. Travis has four older brothers, all of whom played college football, and one younger sister (Jamie). His older brother (Tony) was a safety at UCLA (2008-11) and went unselected in the 2012 NFL Draft, playing two seasons for the Cincinnati Bengals (he also played hockey for Team USA in the Junior Olympics). His older brother (Jordan) played wide receiver at NAIA-level Sterling College (2015-17). His older brother (Thierry Nguema) was a defensive back at Texas Tech (2012-16). His older brother (Troy) played linebacker at Oregon (2016-19) and was picked in the fourth round (No. 132 overall) of the 2020 NFL Draft by the Minnesota Vikings. Travis graduated with his degree from Oregon (June 2020) and worked on his master’s degree in gerontology at USC.

STRENGTHS: Instinctive at the line of scrimmage and runs with balance to keep his feet underneath him ... trusts his eyes and patiently follows his blocks on inside power and traps ... presses well to the outside before cutting it upfield with his quickness ... body control helps him weave through traffic ... gritty in goal-line situations (ran for a touchdown in 16 of his final 19 games in college) ... capable screen target ... competitive by nature (“older brother” theory) and described as the “heart and soul” of the team (quickly endeared himself to the USC locker room as one of the team leaders) ... has return experience, averaging 19.1 yards per kickoff return (16/305/0) ... his pass blocking looked night-and-day improved as a senior compared to his junior tape.

WEAKNESSES: Undersized for the position (NFL scout: “Even smaller in person than I expected.”) ... doesn’t generate consistent force from his lower body ... makes sharp cuts, but burst is average ... top-end speed is OK, but NFL linebackers will be able to cut off his angles before he can find an outside track ... shorter arms ding his catch radius ... ball security needs to be monitored with 10 career fumbles ... college career was cut short by a fractured left ankle (November 2022), which sidelined him for most of the pre-draft process.

SUMMARY: A one-year starter at USC, Dye transferred in and was a natural fit in head coach Lincoln Riley’s balanced scheme. After five seasons in Eugene, he became just the fifth player in Oregon history to reach 3,000 career rushing yards and continued his production for the Trojans, finishing his college career with a 6.0 yards per carry average. Dye has the vision and short-area quickness to hit holes when they are presented, driving his legs with the attitude of a much bigger runner. He isn’t dominant as a pass catcher or blocker, but he is capable, and those functional skills should translate to the pro game. Overall, Dye is undersized, and broken tackles will be tougher to find vs. NFL boxes, but he reads his blocks and makes the right cuts to find consistent yardage. He can be useful on third downs, which boosts his chances of finding a role in the NFL.

24. SARODORICK THOMPSON JR. | Texas Tech 5114 | 207 lbs. | SSR Irving, Texas (Ranchview) 10/1/1999 (age 23.57) #4

BACKGROUND: SaRodorick (Sah-rod-rick) Thompson Jr., who has a younger sister, grew up in Irving (northwest suburb of Dallas) where he started playing football at the youth level and continued playing at Barbara Bush Middle School. He attended Carrollton Ranchview High School and was a three-year letterman on both sides of the ball (running back on offense and linebacker and safety on defense). Thompson debuted on varsity as a sophomore and posted 543 rushing yards on 58 attempts (9.4 average) and three touchdowns. He became the starting running back as a junior and earned District Offensive MVP honors with 1,150 rushing yards (6.6 average), 216 receiving yards and 16 total touchdowns (12 rushing, four receiving). As a senior, Thompson again was named District MVP with 1,370 rushing yards on 164 carries (8.4 average) and 20 touchdowns, adding a pair of receiving scores. He also lettered in basketball and track and set personal-bests in the 100 meters (11.20), 200 meters (22.61), high jump (5 feet 4 inches) and long jump (21-0.5).

A three-star recruit, Thompson was the No. 112 running back in the 2018 recruiting class and the No. 261 recruit in Texas. He received multiple FCS-level offers (Stephen F. Austin, McNeese State, Illinois State) until Fresno State became his first FBS offer prior to his junior year. Thompson was set to decide between Bowling Green, UTEP and SMU until a week before signing day when Texas Tech showed interest. He received an offer from Kliff Kingsbury after his visit, and Thompson signed with the Red Raiders a few days later. Thompson accepted his invitation to the NFLPA Collegiate Bowl and also was a late call-up to the 2023 Senior Bowl.

STRENGTHS: Patient runner with a strong feel for cutback timing ... settles his feet for controlled plant-and-go movements to daylight ... able to drop his hips and move laterally to toy with linebackers ... has a frame to comfortably carry 205 pounds or 220 pounds ... skillfully dishes a stiff-arm and steps out of diving tackle attempts ... coaches say he has come a “long way” with his steadiness as a pass catcher ... has a nose for the end zone (40 career rushing touchdowns) ... three-time team captain and very well-liked in the locker room ... production doesn’t jump off the page but it was consistent (finished his career No. 8 on the school’s all-time rushing yards list).

WEAKNESSES: Doesn’t have a home run gear (only one carry of 25-plus yards in 2022) ... more quick than sudden in his cuts with limited juice around the corner ... too patient at times and needs to be more aggressive with his decision-making ... not a hammer or pile-mover ... more of a screen receiver than true route runner, and his pass blocking is best described as inconsistent ... limited special teams résumé ... underwent surgery on his shoulder (April 2021) and missed the first two games of the season; missed time late in his senior season (November 2022) with a sprained ankle ... arrested on a warrant for reckless driving (September 2020), a misdemeanor charge from racing a fellow teammate on the highway.

SUMMARY: A four-year starter at Texas Tech, Thompson was a committee back in offensive coordinator Zach Kittley’s version of his spread, Air-Raid attack. After rushing for 765 yards as a redshirt freshman, he didn’t reach 700 rushing yards the next three seasons, but he consistently found the end zone as just the third player in Texas Tech history to reach 40 career touchdown runs. Thompson patiently reads and sets up blockers with the footwork to maneuver through narrow gaps. Although he doesn’t have push-the-pile power, he runs with purposeful toughness (he just needs to stay healthy). Overall, Thompson doesn’t have the explosive traits that will easily set him apart in the NFL, but he is savvy one-cut runner thanks to his press, sort and drive skills. His development on third downs and special teams will be key factors for him to make a 53-man roster.

25. CAMERUN PEOPLES | Appalachian State 6013 | 217 lbs. | 5SR Lineville, Ala. (Clay Central) 9/14/1999 (age 23.62) #6

BACKGROUND: Camerun “Cam” Peoples grew up in a small, rural town in eastern Alabama and played baseball, basketball and football at the youth level. He attended Clay Central High School, where he continued to play basketball and football (played baseball through his freshman year, starring at center field and shortstop). After playing a reserve wide receiver role on varsity as a freshman, Peoples became the starting running back as a sophomore, although he missed half of that season with an ankle injury. As a senior he finished with 230 carries for 1,672 yards (7.3 average) and 21 touchdowns, adding a punt return touchdown and kick return touchdown. Peoples, who also played on defense as a cornerback, finished the 2017 season with 2,082 all-purpose yards and was named second team All-State. He also lettered in basketball at Clay.

A two-star recruit, Peoples was the No. 229 running back in the 2018 recruiting class and the No. 148 recruit in Alabama. Growing up in a family of Crimson Tide fans, his dream school was always Alabama, but he went widely overlooked by SEC programs. His first offer was Georgia State followed by Illinois, which was his only Power 5 offer. Peoples also received an offer from Troy, Tulane and UAB, but he connected with the atmosphere at Appalachian State and signed with former head coach Scott Satterfield. He was the 24th-ranked recruit (out of 25) in App State’s 2018 class. Peoples accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl.

STRENGTHS: King-sized runner who tries to model his game after Derrick Henry ... pounding runner who looks to punish tacklers ... bounces off contact thanks to his size and run strength (added 30 pounds since high school) ... able to stick his foot in in the ground for quick lateral movements to adjust his run path ... accelerates cleanly in the open field with his long strides ... has the frame, length and attitude to develop into a functional pass blocker ... his fumbles decreased from two in 2021 to zero in 2022 ... voted a team captain, and his coaches say he never shies away from competition ... was a regular visitor to the end zone with 31 rushing touchdowns over the past three seasons.

WEAKNESSES: Upright runner and doesn’t stay behind his pads ... presents a large target for tacklers and takes his share of hits ... inconsistent patience with a bad habit of slamming into his own blockers ... will have a tough time creating yardage for himself between the tackles against NFL defenses ... hard hands and doesn’t have the tape of a natural pass catcher ... his processing must improve in pass pro ... was part of a committee in college (had only three games with 15-plus carries in 2022) ... his college résumé is severely lacking in the special teams department ... questionable durability and missed at least one game each of the past four seasons, including an ACL tear in his right knee (September 2019); also played through bilateral hip strains during Senior Bowl week (February 2023).

SUMMARY: A part-time starter at Appalachian State, Peoples was part of a running back rotation in offensive coordinator Frank Ponce’s run-heavy scheme. He leaves Boone as the school’s all-time leader in yards per carry (6.2) and finished top 10 in school history in both rushing yards (2,830) and rushing touchdowns (33). More hard-charging than graceful, Peoples is a big, physical target to tackle, which is both a positive and negative. He saw only 16 receiving targets in five years in college, and his production dropped each of the past three years because of injuries. Overall, Peoples offers value as a one-cut, north-south runner on early downs, but bigger ball carriers with limited elusiveness and scarce experience as a receiver or special teamer are a dime a dozen at the next level. Staying healthy and finding the right situation will be imperative to him sticking on an NFL roster.

26. LEW NICHOLS III | Central Michigan 5100 | 220 lbs. | 4JR Detroit, Mich. (Cass Technical) 8/16/2001 (age 21.70) #7

BACKGROUND: Arthur “Lew” Nichols III grew up playing football and naturally gravitated toward running back. He started his prep career at Southfield High School for the Arts and Technology and had a breakout sophomore season with 1,328 rushing yards on 153 carries (8.7 average) and eight touchdowns. In January 2017, he transferred to Cass Technical High School in midtown Detroit, where he shared the backfield duties for his final two seasons. As a senior, Nichols led Cass Tech to an 11-2 record and earned All-State and All-Detroit honors, posting 1,078 rushing yards on 84 carries (12.8 average) and 23 touchdowns. He also lettered in track as a freshman at Southfield.

A three-star recruit, Nichols was the No. 74 running back in the 2018 recruiting class and the No. 28 recruit in Michigan. Entering his sophomore season, he picked up a few Mid-American Conference offers (Akron and Central Michigan). After he transferred to Cass Tech, Nichols added a few offers from SEC programs (Kentucky, Missouri). After his junior season, he announced a final four of Cincinnati, Minnesota, Pittsburgh and Purdue. However, Nichols committed to Central Michigan a few months later. Despite a coaching change in November 2018, Nichols signed with the Chippewas a few weeks after Jim McElwain was hired as head coach. The top three highest-ranked recruits in Central Michigan’s 2019 recruiting class were teammates at Cass Tech: Nichols, Kyrion McKinnie-Harper and Ormondell Dingle. Nichols graduated with his bachelor’s degree (March 2023). He elected to skip his senior season and enter the 2023 NFL Draft.

STRENGTHS: Fills out his uniform well and built like an NFL back ... patient, coordinated footwork at the line of scrimmage ... able to read, press and make sound decisions on zone runs ... squares his pads and runs with physicality and strength to force his way through narrow holes ... not shy breaking out a stiff-arm ... has the mentality of a workhorse back (averaged 29.3 offensive touches during his 2021 season) ... soft hands to secure throws away from his frame ... led CMU in rushing each of the past three seasons ... his 1,848 rushing yards in 2021 were the second-most in a single-season in school history.

WEAKNESSES: Runs big, but inconsistent pad level makes himself too much of a target for tacklers ... not a sudden ball carrier with limited wiggle in confined spaces ... average acceleration through the hole and doesn’t have breakaway speed ... can run with power or finesse but tends to be inconsistent when choosing which avenue to use ... willing in pass protection, but his technique and execution are below average ... too many focus drops on his tape (five in 2022) ... missed chunks of his final season because of a toe injury (October 2022), sitting out three full games and parts of others.

SUMMARY: A two-year starter at Central Michigan, Nichols was the bell-cow back in offensive coordinator Paul Petrino’s multiple run scheme. He earned MAC Offensive Player of the Year honors in 2021 with an FBS-best 2,186 all-purpose yards and 1,848 rushing yards, but his rushing yards per game dropped from 142.2 to only 68.4 in 2022 as he battled injury. With his blend of quickness and power, Nichols can be a tackle breaker and won’t need gaping holes to reach the second level. But he can be methodical at times as he follows his blocks and needs to better anticipate openings before they present themselves. Overall, Nichols is a productive, determined runner with solid feel between the tackles, but his next-level potential will be capped by a lack of creativity with the ball in his hands and inconsistent passing-down skills. His workhorse approach could get him on the field in the right situation.

27. JORDAN MIMS | Fresno State 5104 | 206 lbs. | 6SR East Palo Alto, Calif. (Menlo-Atherton) 6/16/1999 (age 23.86) #7

BACKGROUND: Jordan Mims, who is one of three boys, grew up in San Francisco and started playing football at age 7 for the Pop Warner San Francisco Bombers. In the third grade, his family moved to the Menlo Park area, and he played for the East Palo Alto Greyhounds. Mims attended Menlo Atherton High School and played on the JV squad until he moved up to varsity midway through his sophomore season. As a senior, he led Menlo Atherton to a 12-3 record and the 2016 league title, earning league Offensive Player of the Year honors. Mims finished his final season with 2,388 rushing yards and 29 touchdowns, adding 17 receptions for 275 yards and two touchdowns. He was also an accomplished track athlete in high school and participated in the Junior Olympics. Mims has personal bests in the 100 meters (11.58), 200 meters (22.45), 300 meters (36.59), 400 -meters (49.24) and long jump (18 feet 1.5 inches).

A three-star recruit, Mims was the No. 115 running back in the 2017 recruiting class and the No. 213 recruit in California. He received mostly FCS-level offers from programs like Eastern Washington and Sacramento State, but after his senior year, Fresno State reached out with a full-ride offer. He took a visit and committed to the Bulldogs two weeks before signing day. Mims took advantage of the extra year of eligibility thanks to COVID rules and returned to school for his sixth season in 2022. He graduated with his degree in mass communication and journalism, advertising. Mims accepted his invitation to the 2023 East-West Shrine Bowl.

STRENGTHS: Cuts against the grain to patch together athletic moves on outside zone or misdirection ... gliding speed in the open field to hit chunk plays ... patient jump-cutter to read and sidestep pursuit in space or at the line of scrimmage ... runs with bend and balance to battle back against potential tacklers ... prideful runner and keeps his momentum going forward to breeze through arm tackles ... protects the rock like his life depends on it (zero fumbles the past four seasons) ... leaks out and catches the ball well (zero drops in 2022) ... quickly transitions into a ball carrier at the catch point for maximum run-after-catch damage ... was a scoring machine in 2022 and tied with Bijan Robinson and Blake Corum for fifth-most rushing touchdowns (18).

WEAKNESSES: Average-framed runner with a narrow run style ... his footwork can become deliberate when gearing down ... more quick than sudden ... average anticipation and will need to play a half-tick faster to stay ahead of NFL pursuit ... doesn't always press the line to the satisfaction of the play design ... runs tough, but his strength will meet quick resistance vs. NFL fronts ... shows promise as a pass-blocker, but still needs work with his punch timing and anchor to tie up rushers (see 2022 Oregon State tape) ... will be a 24-year-old NFL rookie ... was sidelined more than 18 months after undergoing ankle surgery towards the end of his sophomore season (November 2018) and then required a bone graft procedure and another season-ending surgery (August 2019).

SUMMARY: A one-year starter at Fresno State, Mims became the featured back as a super senior in head coach Jeff Tedford's zone-based scheme. After multiple ankle surgeries dropped him down the depth chart, he had a career year in 2022 with 1,370 rushing yards, finishing his time at Fresno State No. 4 all-time in rushing yards (3,288) and No. 2 in total touchdowns (45). A run-to-daylight runner, Mims feels the opening and finds cutback lanes to leverage pursuit with his lower body quickness. Though he forces defenders to earn their tackles, he might find broken tackles tougher to come by in the NFL. Overall, Mims has only average burst to be a true one-cut runner, but he sees the field well and runs with shifty feet to string moves together as he picks through the defense. He has third-down potential in the NFL.

SUMMARY: Ronnie Brown grew up outside of Baltimore and played running back and defensive back at Sparrows Point High. He transferred to Dundalk High for his senior season and earned All-State honors with more than 1,500 yards rushing. A no-star recruit, he didn't receive many looks from FBS programs and signed with Shepherd in Division II. He shared the backfield duties as a junior and had a breakout senior season, ranking No. 3 in the NCAA (all-divisions) with 199.9 all-purpose yards per game. Brown is a quick-footed ball carrier with lateral agility and vision to pick his way through traffic at the line. He is thin-boned and lacks the run strength or build desired for inside work. With soft hands and speed, he is a weapon as a returner and in space as a pass target (14.3 yards per catch). Overall, there might be a new "Ronnie Brown" at running back in the NFL, thanks to the Shepherd product's play speed and pass-catching traits. Some scouts view him as a wide receiver.

SUMMARY: Tiyon Evans prepped at Hartsville High, where he combined for more than 2,000 rushing yards his sophomore and junior seasons. He moved to quarterback as a senior and surpassed the 1,000-yard mark as both a passer and rusher. Evans was forced to go the junior college route because of academics. A four-star juco recruit, he signed with Tennessee, but lasted less than a year before entering the transfer portal. He spent the 2022 season at Louisville and battled an ankle injury that also plagued him in 2021. Evans has one-step burst to reach the second level before linebackers can get a bead on his angles. He has quick-read vision to make decisive cuts but needs to introduce more patience into his run diet. His ball security (three fumbles in 2022) and pass-blocking are holes in his game. Overall, Evans has the size, quickness and contact balance that gives him a shot in the NFL, but he will need to prove he can be reliable in all facets to secure a roster spot.

SUMMARY: Derek Parish grew up outside of Houston and attended Pearland High, where he was a standout pass rusher, earning All-District honors as a senior with 12.0 sacks. A three-star recruit, he was recruited to Houston as a linebacker before moving to edge rusher, where he spent the majority of his college career. He was on pace for a record-setting senior year before a torn bicep injury. But he returned in time for the East-West Shrine Bowl, where he transitioned to fullback (played only eight offensive snaps in his six college seasons). His tape is a balanced mix of unrelenting play speed and urgency. He has a muscular frame and caught the ball well during Shrine practices but is understandably raw as a route runner and blocker. Overall, Parish has a limited body of work on offense, but he is passionate about football with elite competitive toughness, which will make it extremely difficult for a coaching staff to cut him. He has the makeup of a special teams ace.

SUMMARY: Xazavian (x-ZAVE-ee-un) Valladay, who has four younger sisters, grew up south of Chicago. He attended Brother Rice High School, a small Catholic school, and led the team in rushing his final two years. A two-star recruit, Valladay committed to Wyoming (his only FBS offer) and led the team in rushing three consecutive seasons. He entered the transfer portal and spent his sixth college season at Arizona State, finishing second in the Pac-12 in rushing yards and first in rushing scores. A tall, lean runner, Valladay showed patience and vision in the Sun Devils' zone scheme to press, find the crease and burst to daylight. His run balance is ordinary, but he is very shifty in space, both as a ball carrier and pass target looking to uncover. His receiving skills are solid, but he fights the ball at times. Overall, Valladay lacks creativity between the tackles with questionable passing-down value, but he keeps his feet alive, especially out in space, and his production speaks for itself.

SUMMARY: Tavion Thomas had a tough upbringing in Dayton and attended Dunbar High, where he combined for 2,670 rushing yards during his final two seasons. A three-star recruit, he had offers from Alabama, Ohio State and others, but academic issues forced him to Cincinnati. Thomas butted heads with the coaches and went the junior-college route for the 2020 season. He was sent home and was temporarily homeless back in Dayton, living out of his car with his one-year-old son. He found a home at Utah and led the team in rushing in both 2021 and 2022. A smooth, good-sized athlete, Thomas is a chore to bring down and consistently falls forward with his body strength. But his spotty vision and patience lead him into his own blockers at the line, and his ball security and pass-catching are suspect. Overall, Thomas needs to answer accountability questions with NFL teams, but he is a big-bodied runner with contact balance, power and pass-blocking skills.

SUMMARY: Hassan Hall was a standout football and track athlete at Maynard Jackson High, where he placed second at states in the 100 meters (10.63 seconds) as a senior. He played both ways with 728 rushing yards, 98 tackles and three interceptions. A three-star recruit, he committed to Louisville (over Syracuse) but struggled to earn a regular role in the Cardinals’ backfield. He transferred back home for his fifth year and led Georgia Tech in rushing in 2022. Hall averaged 23.5 yards per kick return (110 attempts, 2,581 yards, two touchdowns) in his career. (He didn’t return punts but looked great fielding punts at his pro day). He is a strong-striding athlete with the field speed to destroy pursuit angles. His vision tends to run hot and cold, leading to indecision, but his agility helps him create on the go. Overall, Hall doesn’t have the statistical resume to get you excited, but his home-run speed gives him a chance to earn a roster spot as a returner and reserve.

SUMMARY: Emari (ee-MAR-ee) Demercado (dee-mer-KAH-doe) was born and raised in Inglewood. He started his prep career at Carson High before transferring to Downey, where he rushed for nearly 1,000 yards as a senior. With just two FBS offers (Army and Navy), he enrolled at Saddleback College for one season to boost his recruitment. He signed with TCU, where he was buried on the depth chart. When Kendre Miller was injured in the playoff semifinal, though, Demercado stepped up with 150 rushing yards, helping TCU advance to the title game (which was five minutes from his home in Inglewood). Demercado is a strong, well-built back with okay vision, although he needs to stay tighter with his run angles. He had only 378 touches in five years at TCU, so there is plenty of tread left on those tires. Overall, Demercado didn’t have a college career full of highlights, but he shined when it mattered. He is a run-to-daylight runner who knows how to maximize each touch.

1. JAXON SMITH-NJIGBA | Ohio State 6005 | 196 lbs. | 3JR Rockwall, Texas (Rockwall) 2/14/2002 (age 21.20) #11

BACKGROUND: Jaxon Smith-Njigba (En-JIG-buh), who has an older brother, was born in Nacogdoches, Texas, and grew up in Rockwall, a northeast suburb of the Dallas-Fort Worth Metroplex. He started training with his father (Maada), who is a fireman and paramedic in Dallas, when he was eight years old and naturally gravitated toward sports, especially football. With his older brother at quarterback, Smith-Njigba always lined up at receiver and started playing at the pee wee level. He enrolled at Rockwall High School, where he played on varsity all four seasons, the last three as a starter. Smith-Njigba announced himself as a major recruit as a sophomore with 81 receptions for 1,299 yards and nine touchdowns. As a junior, he led the Dallas area in receiving with 97 catches for 1,828 yards and 20 touchdowns. Despite missing two games due to injury, Smith-Njigba saved the best for his senior season with 109 catches for 2,161 yards (sixth-most in Texas state history) and 34 touchdowns (third-most in Texas state history). Playing in the highest level of Texas high school football, he led Rockwall to the Class 6A state semifinals and was named the 6A State Player of the Year and Texas Gatorade Player of the Year. Smith-Njigba had a legendary prep career, finishing with 82 touchdowns and 5,414 receiving yards (third-most career receiving yards in Texas state history). He also lettered in basketball and track at Rockwall.

A five-star recruit, Smith-Njigba was the No. 5 wide receiver in the 2020 recruiting class (behind Julian Fleming, Kayshon Boutte, Demond Demas and Rakim Jarrett) and the No. 5 recruit in Texas. He started to pick up offers during his sophomore year from programs like SMU, Colorado and Memphis. Ohio State was one of the first major programs to offer Smith-Njigba a scholarship, and he committed after visiting Columbus in November of his junior season. Other major programs like Notre Dame, Oklahoma and Texas A&M (his favorite school growing up) entered the picture, but he had his mind made up about the Buckeyes. His father played defensive end and linebacker at FCS-level Stephen F. Austin (1998-2001). Jaxon’s older brother (Canaan) was taken in the fourth round of the 2017 MLB Draft (out of high school) by the New York Yankees. After four years as an outfielder in the Yankees’ system, Canaan was traded to the Pittsburgh Pirates in January 2021 and made his MLB debut in June 2022, hitting a double for his first major-league hit. Jaxon’s paternal grandparents are from the West African country Sierra Leone and immigrated to the United States in the 1970s. Jaxon used the last name “Smith” through middle school before adding “Njigba” as a high school freshman to honor his late grandfather, who graduated with his master’s degree from Michigan State in 1979. After missing most of the 2022 season, Smith-Njigba elected to skip his senior season and enter the 2023 NFL Draft.

STRENGTHS: Skilled route runner with fluid stemwork ... understands how to use pacing, body language and gear shift to manipulate defensive leverage (Ohio State QB CJ Stroud: “Jaxon is the best route runner I’ve ever played with in my life.”) ... shows a feel for angles/spacing as both a ball carrier and route runner ... very natural as an athlete with the short-area agility to release or uncover (his 6.57 three-cone and 3.93 short shuttle was No. 1 among all participants at the combine) ... always working back to the football with strong hands to win through contact ... great job locating the football, regardless of a five-yard hitch or tracking vertical patterns ... excellent stride-catcher for run-after-catch opportunities ... sets up cuts for slippery moves as a ball carrier ... comfortable working the middle of the field ... averaged 6.5 yards on punt returns (11/71/0) ... his coaches rave about his competitive nature (Brian Hartline: “I think his desire to win on every rep is something that carries him a long way.”) ... highly productive sophomore season and set the school records for single-season catches (95) and receiving yards (1,606) and single-game catches (15) and receiving yards (347).

WEAKNESSES: Speed is closer to average than above-average ... lacks a finishing gear in open space, and pursuit can chase him down from behind ... more quick than sudden with his moves (his 1.65 10-yard split is a below average number) ... his balance can be disrupted mid-route by physical defenders ... blocking lacks grit and requires technique work ... worked almost exclusively out of the slot in college ... has only one season of production on his résumé ... missed almost all of his junior season because of a nagging left hamstring injury (September 2022); also missed two games as a high school senior with a right shoulder injury (August 2019).

SUMMARY: A two-year starter at Ohio State, Smith-Njigba was the slot receiver in head coach Ryan Day’s multiple spread offense and made a living inside (88.3 percent of his snaps the last two seasons came in the slot). Although 2022 was basically a lost year for him because of his hamstring injury, he had a prolific 2021 season with the Big Ten single-season record for receiving yards (1,606) and a memorable Rose Bowl performance with an NCAA bowl-record 347 receiving yards. Although he played in a favorable offensive situation in Columbus, including alongside first-round receivers Garrett Wilson and Chris Olave, Smith-Njigba is a crisp, controlled route runner with the hand strength to focus and snatch the football. Although he doesn’t have the speed to run away from coverage, he skillfully throttles his speeds and uses different sink/body techniques to leverage defensive backs out of position and create pockets of separation. Overall, Smith-Njigba isn’t an elite size/speed athlete and won’t be an ideal fit for every role, but he is a crafty route runner with smooth short-area quickness and tracking talent to be a sure-handed target. He projects as an early NFL starter who is at his best in the slot.

GRADE: 1st Round (No. 18 overall)

2. JORDAN ADDISON | USC 5111 | 173 lbs. | 3JR Frederick, Md. (Tuscarora) 1/27/2002 (age 21.25) #3

BACKGROUND: Jordan Addison, who has six brothers and three sisters, grew up north of Washington D.C., and started playing football at age 5 in the Montgomery Village league. He played multiple positions throughout youth football, leading the Chiefs to a championship as a read-option quarterback. Addison attended Tuscarora High School in Frederick, where he started all four seasons on varsity. He played wide receiver and defensive back throughout high school before adding quarterback duties his junior and senior seasons. As a senior, Addison finished with 25 catches for 544 yards and eight touchdowns, averaging 21.8 yards per catch. He was a standout track athlete at Tuscarora (sprints, relays and jumps) and won the 2019 3A state championship in the long jump (22 feet 2.5 inches). Addison also set personal-bests in the 55 meters (6.65), 100 meters (10.85), 200 meters (22.56), 300 meters (38.85) and high jump (5-8).

A four-star recruit out of high school, Addison was the No. 10 athlete in the 2020 recruiting class and the No. 12 recruit in Maryland. During his junior year, his first offer came from his home state Maryland followed soon after by schools like East Carolina, South Carolina, Virginia and Wake Forest. With his mother’s side of the family from South Bend, he had his eyes on Notre Dame. He finally received an offer from the Irish, but they recruited him as a cornerback, which was a dealbreaker for him. Addison’s final three was Maryland, Notre Dame and Pitt, and he committed to the Panthers and wide receivers coach Chris Beatty, who previously recruited him when he was at Maryland (Beatty is now in the NFL as the wide receivers coach for the Los Angeles Chargers). Addison graduated high school early and enrolled in January 2020. After two productive seasons at Pitt, Addison elected to enter the transfer portal after several offensive coaching changes and quarterback Kenny Pickett leaving for the NFL. He considered offers from Alabama and Texas before announcing his transfer to USC. Addison reportedly made more than $1.2 million through NIL deals after his move to the Trojans. His older brother (Michael Blackman-Herbert) played safety (2016-20) at Division II Shepherd (W.Va.). Addison elected to skip his final season of eligibility and enter the 2023 NFL Draft.

PRO DAY	5111	170	31 1/2	8 3/4	75 1/8	-	-	-	-	-	4.19	7.05	- (stood on Combine runs, jumps)

STRENGTHS: Twiched-up athlete with outstanding route-running quickness ... displays crisp footwork in his route transitions, which makes him a tough cover on outs/digs ... creates spacing with his knack for finding the corner’s blind spot ... his immediate acceleration forces defensive backs to retreat early and commit their hips ... has vertical skills to get overtop coverage ... his short-area quickness and loose hips make him a slippery target for tacklers ... showed improved ball skills and focus each season ... offers punt return experience, averaging 12.2 yards per return (18/219/0) ... has a quiet, easygoing personality and described as “detailed” and “smart” by his college coaches ... above-average scoring production, catching a touchdown pass every 7.5 receptions in college ... the only three-year player in the draft class with 3,000-plus career receiving yards.

WEAKNESSES: Undersized with a slim frame and slight build ... below-average power and body strength ... bigger defensive backs will be able to disrupt his release or route timing when they lock on ... competitive and slippery after the catch but didn’t break many tackles (only six forced missed tackles in 2022) ... guilty of relying on his body to finish catches ... can win vertically, but most of his career targets (57.8 percent) came within 10 yards of the line of scrimmage ... played more outside snaps in 2022 but was primarily a slot receiver over his career (60.1 percent of his receiving snaps came inside) ... missed three games as a junior because of a nagging left ankle injury (October 2022).

SUMMARY: A one-year starter at USC, Addison was an inside/outside receiver in head coach Lincoln Riley’s version of the Air Raid offense. Leading the nation in receiving as a sophomore, he became the third Biletnikoff Award winner in Pitt history, joining Antonio Bryant (2000) and Larry Fitzgerald (2003), and continued his strong play after transferring to the Trojans. Addison skillfully marries his play speed, controlled suddenness and detailed focus as a route runner to create spacing and run-after-catch opportunities. He had double-digit drops each of his first two seasons at Pitt but showed much improved ball skills in 2022 (his drop rate decreased from 14.3 percent as a freshman to 9.9 percent as a sophomore to only 3.3 percent as a junior). Overall, Addison’s lack of ideal size and play strength are legitimate concerns, but he is a loose athlete with crafty routes and vertical speed to work all three levels. Projecting best in the slot, he has NFL starting talent from day one.

3. JALIN HYATT | Tennessee 6001 | 176 lbs. | 3JR Irmo, S.C. (Dutch Fork) 9/25/2001 (age 21.59) #11

BACKGROUND: Jalin Hyatt, who is the oldest of two boys, grew up in Irmo, just outside of Columbia, and started playing flag football at age 5 at the YMCA. He played basketball and youth level football (wide receiver and quarterback) throughout middle school and was also a ball boy for Dutch Fork High School from third grade through sixth grade. Hyatt enrolled at Dutch Fork and moved up to varsity as a sophomore wide receiver, posting 43 catches for 947 yards and 10 touchdowns in 2017. As a junior, he helped Dutch Fork to an undefeated 13-0 season and the 2018 state championship. Hyatt finished his junior season with 71 receptions for 1,316 yards and 21 touchdowns, earning second team All-State honors. As a senior, he again led Dutch Fork to the state championship (fourth in a row for the program) and recorded three touchdowns in the title game, including the game-winner in overtime. With 66 catches for 1,361 yards and 26 touchdowns in 2019, Hyatt earned first team All-State and was a finalist for South Carolina’s Mr. Football. He finished his three-year varsity career with 180 catches for 3,624 receiving yards and 57 touchdowns. Hyatt also participated in strength competitions in high school and was an All-American in track (sprints and relays) as a junior, setting personal bests in the 100 meters (10.46) and 200 meters (21.14).

A four-star recruit, Hyatt was the No. 33 wide receiver in the 2020 recruiting class and the No. 3 recruit in South Carolina. He started to receive scholarships as a sophomore, but at only 155 pounds as a high school senior, his size was a concern for several programs. Despite growing up in the shadows of the South Carolina campus, he never received an offer from the Gamecocks. He was also overlooked by Clemson, the other heavyweight program in the state. Hyatt initially committed to Virginia Tech shortly after his junior season but reopened his recruitment the summer before his senior year once his offer sheet started to expand. He considered offers from Miami (Fla.), Michigan, Penn State and others before committing to Tennessee. His father (Jamie) was a professional cyclist. His mother (Enevelyn) was an all-state sprinter in high school. Jalin signed an NIL deal with Hyatt Hotels, including a credit for each of his teammates for family members to attend the Orange Bowl. His younger brother (Devin) was a three-star wide receiver recruit out of IMG Academy and signed with Arizona as part of the 2023 recruiting class. Hyatt elected to opt out of the 2022 Orange Bowl and skip his senior season to enter the 2023 NFL Draft.

PRO DAY	6003	184	32 1/2	9	78	-	-	-	-	-	4.33	7.06	- (stood on Combine runs and jumps)

STRENGTHS: Elite straight-line speed to consistently run by defenders and win vertically ... has access to a pull-away gear both before and after the catch ... his 2022 film is well-stocked with explosive plays, mostly on vertical slot routes (20 catches of 20-plus yards, seven receptions of 50-plus yards) ... closes cushion in a blink and understands leverage ... displays premium trust in his hands to attack the ball before it gets to his body ... tracks the ball naturally and runs underneath it (his 58.3 percent success rate on targets 20-plus yards ranked No. 1 in the FBS in 2022) ... can climb the ladder to take the ball out of the air ... has worked hard to improve his play strength ... has developed into a functional blocker and continues to improve in this area ... football training has been a priority for him since childhood, and he can take hard coaching ... overcame adversity from his first two seasons and made substantial improvements with his confidence ... had a “wow” final season and set the school records for touchdown catches in a game (five vs. Alabama) and in a season (15).

WEAKNESSES: Underdeveloped route runner who was asked to play a specific role in college with heavy doses of quick throws and linear patterns ... has some tightness in his hips and must improve his ability to sink at the top of routes ... little jam experience and faces a learning curve vs. NFL press coverage ... slender build and doesn't have the frame to get too much bigger ... speedy but not shifty as a ball carrier ... should be able to translate his speed to special teams, but has marginal experience on coverages ... was basically a slot only in the Tennessee offense ... missed some playing time after a concussion (September 2021) ... only one season of substantial production.

SUMMARY: A one-year starter at Tennessee, Hyatt was primarily an inside wide receiver in head coach Josh Heupel's up-tempo, spread offense (89 percent of his snaps came in the slot). After two “development” years in Knoxville, he had a prolific junior season with a school-record 15 touchdowns, becoming the first Volunteers receiver to win the Biletnikoff Award and just the 13th unanimous All-American in Tennessee history (first since Eric Berry). Hyatt saw a lot of free releases and didn't run an NFL route tree, but he consistently stretches the field vertically, and cornerbacks struggle to match his vertical burst. Along with his elite acceleration, he has an uncanny ability to track and adjust to the deep ball, flashing a “go-and-get-it” gear – he led the FBS in receptions of 30-plus yards (15), 40-plus yards (11), 50-plus yards (seven) and 60-plus yards (five). Overall, Hyatt isn't a well-rounded receiver and won't become one overnight, but he is exceptional in two key areas (easy speed and confident ball skills), and his potential for an explosive play at any moment changes the way defenses prepare. In the right role, he can be a productive home-run hitter for an NFL offense.

4.

ZAY FLOWERS | Boston College

5092 | 182 lbs. | 4SR

Fort Lauderdale, Fla. (University)

BACKGROUND: Xavien “Zay” Flowers, who is the 11th of 14 children (10 boys, 4 girls), was raised primarily by his father (Willie) after his mother (Jackie Walden) passed away from a head injury in 2005 when Flowers was five years old. He grew up in Fort Lauderdale and started playing football with his older brothers at age 4. Flowers attended University School, where he played all four years of varsity football. An undersized running back, wide receiver and defensive back, he spent his freshman season as a reserve off the bench followed by 36 catches as a sophomore. Paired with Kenny McIntosh (Georgia), Flowers had his best season as a junior with 48 receptions for 631 yards and 10 touchdowns. As a senior, he finished with 38 catches for 652 yards and eight touchdowns, adding a rushing touchdown and a pair of interceptions (one returned for a score). Flowers and McIntosh helped University to back-to-back Class 4A state semifinal appearances in 2017 and 2018. He also lettered in basketball at University.

A three-star recruit, Flowers was the No. 139 wide receiver in the 2018 recruiting class and the No. 165 recruit in Florida. He collected almost 30 scholarship offers from FBS programs, including multiple ACC (NC State, North Carolina, Pitt), Big Ten (Maryland, Nebraska, Purdue) and SEC (Kentucky, South Carolina) offers. Flowers was drawn to Boston College's offer because of the education and originally signed as a defensive back but moved to wide receiver when he arrived on campus. He received multiple six-figure NIL deals to transfer after his junior year but decided to stay at Boston College for his senior season to become the first in his family to graduate college. Zay's older brother (Martin) was tragically shot and killed in Sanford, N.C. (November 2017). Flowers wears No. 4 jersey because he is the fourth-youngest of 14 children. He accepted his invitation to the 2023 East-West Shrine Bowl.

PRO DAY	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	(no shuttle, 3-cone, bench press – choice) (position drills only – choice)

STRENGTHS: Sudden short-area athlete to quickly get in/out of route breaks ... releases quickly and paces his routes to attack the leverage of defenders or find their blind spot ... smooth accelerator to stack receivers vertically ... better downfield and over-the-shoulder tracking skills than expected ... accustomed to rescuing errant throws off his shoe tops ... quickly finds his balance as a RAC weapon with the change-of-direction skills to give tacklers the slip ... seasoned open-field instincts and shows a great feel for where the sticks are ... exudes confidence and positivity (NFL scout: “Competes his ass off, but always smiling. BC coaches say he is the type of guy everyone wants to be around.”) ... never gave less than top effort despite quarterback and team struggles (head coach Jeff Hafley: “He’s on a three-win team, and he’s out there blocking and fighting with tears in his eyes at the end of the game ... why he’s one of the best guys I’ve had the chance to coach.”) ... ranked top 10 in FBS in receiving scores in 2022 (accounted for 57.1 percent of the team's receiving touchdown production) ... didn't miss a game in his four seasons in college ... set the school records for career catches (200), receiving yards (3,056) and touchdown catches (29).

WEAKNESSES: Undersized with a short stature and smallish build ... among the smallest wingspans in this receiver draft class, which hurts his catch radius ... NFL size and strength could give him trouble mid-route and at the catch point ... relies too much on his body to finish catches and must cut down on the focus drops ... fumbled twice as a senior ... has elusive traits after the catch, but I expected more missed tackles on his tape ... very little special teams experience (added punt return duties in 2022 but had only seven returns for 43 yards).

SUMMARY: A three-year starter at Boston College, Flowers was an inside/outside receiver in offensive coordinator John McNulty's offense and was often schemed across the formation with motions (jets, orbits, etc.) and tight splits so he could attack space. He was presented with several lucrative NIL offers to transfer as a senior but stayed loyal to the program and had a record-breaking 2022 season, becoming Boston College's all-time leading receiver. Flowers, who should be the first BC receiver drafted since 1987, is fluid in and out of his breaks with playmaking potential after the catch. He is more of a glider than sprinter and won't dust NFL corners with pure speed, but he does a great job utilizing gear change to tie defenders in knots with his quickness. Overall, Flowers is undersized and doesn't have an ideal skill set for outside work, but he is a savvy and sudden competitor with the play speed and route pacing to create space. He projects as an early NFL starter who is at his best in the slot.

5. QUENTIN JOHNSTON | TCU 6026 | 208 lbs. | 3JR Temple, Texas (Temple) 9/6/2001 (age 21.64) #1

BACKGROUND: Quentin Johnston was born and raised in Temple (65 miles north of Austin) and grew up in a military family. His mother (Sherry) and father (Carl) are both Army veterans (Sherry served during Operation Desert Storm/Desert Shield, and Carl was in Kuwait in 1995). Johnston started playing football at the pee-wee level and quickly developed a reputation as one of the top up-and-coming athletes in the area. A three-sport star at Temple High School, Johnston saw starting reps as a sophomore wide receiver. He hit a growth spurt and emerged as one of the top pass-catchers in the state as a junior with 54 catches for 1,015 yards and 13 touchdowns, earning All-Region honors. He caught passes from quarterback Jared Wiley, who signed with Texas before transferring to TCU as a tight end and reuniting with Johnston. As a senior, Johnston led Temple to a 9-3 record and 2019 district championships, finishing the season with 41 catches for 778 yards and eight touchdowns. He also lettered in basketball (averaged 13.3 points and 6.8 rebounds per game as a senior) and track (jumps and relays) at Temple. He finished third at the 2019 5A state championships in the high jump (6 feet 8 inches). His personal bests: high jump (6-10), long jump (22-6.75) and triple jump (42-5.75).

A four-star recruit, Johnston was the No. 14 wide receiver in the 2020 recruiting class and the No. 9 recruit in Texas (No. 2 wide receiver in the state). He ranked as the No. 71 overall recruit nationally. Johnston received his first offer, from Duke, in September 2018 followed by Virginia Tech, Tulsa and Houston. High-level offers (TCU, Texas, Oklahoma) soon followed, and he committed to the Longhorns at the start of his senior season. However, Horned Frogs former head coach Gary Patterson and wide receivers coach Malcolm Kelly continued to recruit him. Close to early signing day, Johnston flipped from Texas to TCU (his connection with Kelly was a driving factor). He was the second-highest ranked recruit in TCU's 2020 class behind Zach Evans. After Patterson was fired following the 2021 season, Johnston considered entering the transfer portal with his eyes on Oklahoma, but new head coach Sonny Dykes retained Kelly as an assistant and developed a connection with Johnston's family. He elected to skip his senior season and enter the 2023 NFL Draft.

STRENGTHS: Athletic strider with outstanding size/speed/strength blend ... foot quickness to defeat the jam and create initial spacing ... quickly in-and-out of his breaks (he loves running curls) ... gives himself room along the sideline and leverages coverage to create a vertical runway ... hits a burst at the top of routes to create a stride or two of separation, making him a tough cover on posts ... run instincts are immediate at the catch, allowing him to consistently find yards after the catch ... runs with urgency, balance and a knack for eluding tackles ... has a pull-away gear once he can stretch out his long strides ... finds the football and wins with his leaping and high-pointing skills ... fluid, well-timed body adjustments to track over his shoulder or rescue throws behind him ... reserved and humble and competes with a quiet confidence ... voted one of four team captains for the 2022 season, and NFL scouts use words like "genuine" and "unselfish" to describe him ... improved production each season with experience both outside and in the slot.

WEAKNESSES: Focus drops are all over his tape ... has a bad habit of allowing the ball into his body or looking to run before securing ... ran a streamlined route tree and lacks stem polish/footwork ... inconsistent sink-and-burst out of breaks due to hip tightness ... doesn't consistently play up to his size or physicality ... below-average success rate in contested situations ... needs to know when to become the defender and make sure no one catches the ball if needed ... suffered a sprained right ankle as a junior (October 2022), missing one game and battling through the pain in several others (he called it a "pain tolerance thing"); missed three games with a hyperextended knee (October 2021).

SUMMARY: A three-year starter at TCU, Johnston was the X wide receiver in former offensive coordinator Garrett Riley's RPO-based offense (played the Z receiver position in 2021). He led the team in receiving yards each of his three seasons in Fort Worth and was a big-play creator before and after the catch (No. 2 in the FBS with 8.9 YAC per reception in 2022). A big man with small-man burst, Johnston accelerates well to stack, track and separate deep or create plays after the catch with his elusiveness, strength and instincts. His length and body control help him make impressive grabs away from his body, but he struggled with contested windows on tape and had more drops than touchdown catches in 2022. Overall, Johnston requires polish with his route-running and ball-finishing skills, but he offers legitimate big-play potential with his size-speed athleticism and catch radius. He has NFL-starting traits with upside as he continues to develop.

6. JOSH DOWNS | North Carolina 5086 | 171 lbs. | 3JR Suwanee, Ga. (North Gwinnett) 8/12/2001 (age 21.71) #11

BACKGROUND: Joshua "Josh" Downs, who is the middle child of three, was born and raised northwest of Atlanta and grew up in a football family. He also played basketball, baseball, soccer and track, but football was his focus since he was six years old. Through elementary and middle school, Downs was often coached by his father and played youth football for Peachtree Ridge. He enrolled at North Gwinnett High School (teammates with Green Bay Packers running back Tyler Goodson), where he was called up to varsity as a freshman. As a sophomore, Downs helped lead the program to 14 wins and the 7A state championship in 2017 with 63 receptions for 1,019 yards and nine touchdowns. He again led North Gwinnett to the playoffs as a junior and finished the 2018 season with 37 catches for 624 yards and nine touchdowns. Downs enjoyed his most productive season as a senior with 83 catches for 1,290 yards and 14 touchdowns, adding a passing touchdown (game-winner). He earned first team All-State and All-County honors and helped lead the team to a 12-2 record. Downs finished his prep career with 187 catches for 3,019 yards and 32 touchdowns. He also lettered one year in basketball and two years in track, finishing third at the 2018 7A state championships in the triple jump (46 feet 7.5 inches) and fourth in the long jump (22-5.5).

A four-star recruit, Downs was the No. 17 wide receiver in the 2000 recruiting class and the No. 13 recruit in Georgia. Although his home state Georgia never offered, he attracted several high-profile scholarship offers, including from Michigan, Ohio State, Penn State and Tennessee. Because of his father, he grew up an NC State fan and was likely headed there until his uncle (current Lions CBs coach Dre Bly) was hired by North Carolina head coach Mack Brown to be the Tar Heels’ cornerbacks coach. Downs gave North Carolina a longer look and decided to commit after his second visit to Chapel Hill, enrolling early in January 2020. Downs’ father (Gary) played running back at NC State and was picked in the third round (No. 95 overall) of the 1994 NFL Draft, playing seven seasons in the NFL for the New York Giants (1994, 1996), Denver Broncos (1995) and Atlanta Falcons (1997-2000). Gary coached for several years at the high school level (2003-14) and is currently the running backs coach and recruiting coordinator at FCS-level East Tennessee State (hired in 2015). His older sister (Kameron) played soccer at Kennesaw State (2017-21). His younger brother (Caleb) was a five-star safety recruit in the 2023 class and signed with Alabama. His uncle (Bly) played cornerback at North Carolina and was a second-round pick (No. 41 overall) in the 1999 NFL Draft, playing 12 seasons in the NFL. Downs opted out of the 2022 bowl game and skipped his senior season to enter the 2023 NFL Draft.

STRENGTHS: Dynamic athlete with above-average agility ... masterful at controlling his acceleration to tease defensive backs ... shifty route runner with the footwork to shake coverage early or at the break point ... instinctive and finds the blind spots of defenders ... does a great job finding holes in the defense, especially on scramble plays ... has a larger catch radius than most his size and consistently pulls down throws ... drop rate declined each season, and he accounted for only three drops on 116 targets in 2022 ... surprisingly efficient with crowded catch points ... averaged 10.4 yards per punt return (21/282/0) ... his dedicated work ethic was instilled in him by his father, who was raised in a military family, played in the NFL and is a longtime coach ... became just the fourth player in ACC history with 100-plus catches in a single season and is one of only three players with 200-plus receptions in North Carolina history.

WEAKNESSES: Very undersized and won’t get much bigger ... didn’t see much press coverage in college, and free releases won’t be as common in the NFL ... I expected more YAC and forced missed tackles on his film ... has room to tighten up his routes (tends to drift, taking too many steps at times, etc.) ... has shown improved focus, but his drops are usually a result of his eyes prematurely peeking upfield ... doesn’t have the body to shield defenders from the catch point, and his average play strength shows in traffic ... lack of size/length limits his effectiveness as a blocker ... most likely a slot-only NFL player (almost 90 percent of his career snaps in college came in the slot) ... missed two games as a junior because of a minor lower body injury (September 2022).

SUMMARY: A two-year starter at North Carolina, Downs was primarily a slot receiver in former offensive coordinator Phil Longo’s version of the Air Raid scheme. One of the most prolific receivers in school history, he set the single-season records for catches and receiving yards in 2021 and leaves Chapel Hill No. 3 in career receptions (202) and No. 5 in receiving yards (2,483). With his athleticism and route-running prowess, Downs looks like a predator playing with his prey, patiently throttling his speed with a clear understanding of how to get open and move the sticks. He is obviously undersized, but he has the catch radius of a bigger player, and his competitive chip comes from always being a little smaller on the football field. Overall, Downs’ lack of size will face more resistance versus physical NFL coverage, but he is a tough cover in the slot one-on-one thanks to his gear changes and shifty route running. He projects as a three-level slot weapon for an NFL offense and adds punt return value.

7. TYLER SCOTT | Cincinnati

5097 | 177 lbs. | 3JR

Norton, Ohio (Norton)

#21

BACKGROUND: Tyler Scott, who has an older brother, was born in Akron before his family moved to Norton (just outside of Akron) when he was six years old. He started playing flag football at age 5 and also starred in basketball and track at a young age, sprinting in the Junior Olympics. He ran AAU track for the West Akron squad and was teammates with fellow Bearcats receiver Tre Tucker. Scott enrolled at Norton High School where he was a four-year varsity letterman and played multiple positions, mostly running back and defensive back. Injuries derailed his first two high school seasons, limiting him to six games as a freshman and only three games as a sophomore. In Norton’s run-focused offense, Scott had his breakout as a junior with 1,337 rushing yards and 24 offensive touchdowns (23 rushing, one receiving), earning second team All-State and first team All-District honors. He also had three kickoff return touchdowns of 91, 93 and 100 yards. As a senior, he rushed for 1,337 yards and 21 touchdowns, again earning All-State and All-District honors. Scott also tallied seven interceptions on defense. He was a standout shooting guard on the Norton basketball team and prolific in track. Scott set the program outdoor records in the 100 meters (10.68) and 200 meters (21.66). At the 2020 indoor state championships, he placed second in the 60 meters (6.77) and 200 meters (21.39) — both times ranked top-10 nationally.

A three-star recruit, Scott was the No. 67 athlete in the 2020 recruiting class and the No. 41 recruit in Ohio. His first offer was from Rutgers after his breakout junior season, followed by Cincinnati and Toledo. Scott added offers from Iowa State, Michigan State, Nebraska and Syracuse. He narrowed his choice to Cincinnati and Indiana before signing with head coach Luke Fickell and the Bearcats. A running back most of his life, Scott was recruited as an athlete but moved to wide receiver during his first season at Cincinnati, which was his first full-time season at the position. He opted out of the 2022 bowl game and skipped his senior season to enter the 2023 NFL Draft.

STRENGTHS: Boasts sprinting speed with three-level talent ... creates vertical push with the stem acceleration to loosen coverage ... gear change and short-area agility allow him to sell double moves or separate on comebacks and digs ... route break footwork got better with every game ... tracks the ball naturally over his shoulder while at full speed to be a true deep target (eight catches of 30-plus yards in 2022) ... above-average hand-eye coordination as a pass catcher and able to climb the ladder ... can see his running back background after the catch, out-angling pursuit or spinning out of tackle attempts ... was a regular on special teams, including as a gunner on punt coverage (200 snaps and six tackles over the past two seasons) ... missed only one game because of injury in his three seasons at Cincinnati ... his average touchdown catch in college was 44.6 yards.

WEAKNESSES: Doesn't have ideal size, build or length ... could use additional play strength ... needs to match the physicality of cornerbacks, and NFL press coverage will be a learning experience for him ... sometimes he secures catches through contact, other times he doesn't ... mediocre catch radius hurts ability to make late adjustments and rescue throws behind him ... limited as an outside blocker ... missed one game as a junior because of a right ankle injury (October 2022); missed almost all of his freshman and sophomore years in high school because of injuries.

SUMMARY: A two-year starter at Cincinnati, Scott was the X wide receiver (wide side of the field) in former offensive coordinator Gino Guidugli's spread RPO offense. A high school option running back (he had "maybe 10 catches" in high school), he has been a quick study at his new position and led the Bearcats in receiving in 2022. Ranked top 10 nationally in track in high school, Scott's explosive speed and sprint training have translated well to the vertical passing game and allow him to catch cornerbacks off balance with speed cuts or nuanced hesitation mid-route (all 14 of his career touchdowns went for 20-plus yards, averaging 44.6 yards per touchdown grab). Though he has promising ball skills, he doesn't have desired size or play strength for the position, which limits his catch radius at times. Overall, Scott is a work in progress in a few coachable areas, but high-end speed and short-area suddenness allow him to consistently create his own separation. He adds immediate value as a gunner on special teams and has Tyler Lockett upside as a starting NFL receiver.

GRADE: 2nd Round (No. 48 overall)

8. CEDRIC TILLMAN | Tennessee 6033 | 213 lbs. | 5SR Las Vegas, Nev. (Bishop Gorman) 4/19/2000 (age 23.02) #4

BACKGROUND: Cedric Tillman, who is the middle child of three children, grew up in the Las Vegas suburbs and started playing flag football at age 6. He played in the Nevada Youth League and fell in love with football, following in the footsteps of his father and older brother. He attended football powerhouse Bishop Gorman High School, where he was teammates with top recruits like tight end Brevin Jordan (Miami), wide receiver Jalen Nailor (Michigan State), defensive tackle Haskell Garrett (Ohio State) and quarterback Dorian Thompson-Robinson (UCLA). After waiting his turn as a freshman and sophomore, Tillman recorded eight catches for 73 yards and two touchdowns as a junior as Bishop Gorman completed an undefeated 15-0 season. Catching passes from Thompson-Robinson, Tillman had a breakout senior season with 37 receptions for 774 yards and seven touchdowns, earning second team All-State honors and helping Bishop Gorman to the 2017 state championship. Tillman joined the track team as a senior and was a member of the 4x200 relay team (1:27.19) and participated in the long jump (20 feet 8 inches), high jump (5-10) and triple jump (43-1.25).

A three-star recruit, Tillman was the No. 246 wide receiver in the 2018 recruiting class and the No. 11 recruit in Nevada. Despite playing at a program known for producing high-level recruits, he went overlooked by college teams. Tillman initially received offers from Hawaii and UNLV, although neither made him a top priority. His talent was noticed by former USC head coach Clay Helton, who didn't have a spot for him in the Trojans' 2018 recruiting class, but he tipped off his brother, Tyson Helton, who was then the offensive coordinator at Tennessee. When the Volunteers had a spot open late, they offered Tillman a scholarship days before national signing day. Tillman was ranked as the 19th-best recruit (out of 22 players) in the 2018 Tennessee class. His father (Cedric) caught passes from Steve McNair at Alcorn State (1988-91) and was picked in the 11th round (No. 305 overall) of the 1992 NFL Draft by the Denver Broncos. He went on to play four seasons in the league. His older brother (Jamir) was a wide receiver at Navy (2013-16) and considered an NFL prospect but was unable to play professionally because of his military commitment (Cedric wears No. 4 jersey because that was his brother's number). His younger sister (Janai) is a rising junior volleyball player at College of Southern Nevada. Tillman graduated with his degree in communication studies (December 2021). He opted out of the 2022 bowl game and declined his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl.

STRENGTHS: Big, sturdy athlete with above-average length ... uses his frame to shield and secure catches ... strong, well-timed hands (only five career drops) ... has the body control to make adjustments downfield and the catch radius to attack throws away from his body ... physical demeanor vs. press and won't get bullied off his route path ... runs with the build-up acceleration to get on top of cornerbacks vertically ... tracks the deep ball well (16 receptions of 25-plus yards over the past two seasons) ... can make the first man miss on screens ... has the body and play strength to knock back and beat up corners as a blocker ... caught a touchdown in nine of his final 13 games at Tennessee.

WEAKNESSES: Inefficient at the top of routes and must tighten up his footwork/body movements ... has work-back instincts underneath, but his sink-and-react is predictable ... ran a rudimentary route tree in the Tennessee offense and must develop a more detailed approach to it ... tends to lose his speed downfield and lacks a top gear ... not elusive and averaged only 2.9 YAC per reception in 2022 ... his success rate in contested situations tends to be hit or miss ... only lined up on the right side of the formation ... missed four games as a senior because of a left ankle injury (September 2022), which required tighrope surgery; also missed an additional two games (to rest his ankle).

SUMMARY: A two-year starter at Tennessee, Tillman was an outside receiver in head coach Josh Heupel's up-tempo, spread offense, lining up exclusively on the right side of the formation. After a breakout junior season, his senior year was marred by an ankle injury, but he still finished top-10 all-time in Tennessee history in touchdown catches (17) and holds the school record for consecutive games (seven) with a touchdown grab. Tillman has above-average hands with the catching range and body type to be effective on slants/stops/comebacks or when tracking downfield. He can open his stride and maintain his acceleration through the stem but lacks the short-area quickness or detailed urgency to easily create separation. Overall, Tillman might be limited to a linear route tree, but he is a big target with the acceleration, play strength and ball skills to exploit perimeter matchups. He has NFL starting traits as an X and should develop into a solid No. 2/3.

GRADE: 2nd-3rd Round (No. 57 overall)

9. MARVIN MIMS JR. | Oklahoma 5107 | 183 lbs. | 3JR Frisco, Texas (Lone Star) 3/19/2002 (age 21.11) #17

BACKGROUND: Marvin Mims Jr. grew up north of Dallas in Frisco (his family is originally from the Baton Rouge area). Coached by his father (Marvin Mims Sr.), he started playing youth football in elementary school and led the Frisco Packers to an undefeated season and the little league championship. Mims focused more on basketball throughout middle school and played on the same AAU team as Jaxon Smith-Njigba. For high school, he attended Legacy Christian Academy as a freshman and recorded 36 receptions for 523 yards and four touchdowns, also playing cornerback on defense. Mims transferred to Lone Star High School for his final three seasons and was named Offensive Newcomer of the Year in 2017 with 54 catches for 1,175 yards and 12 touchdowns. He was named 5A Offensive MVP as a junior with 59 receptions for 1,158 yards and 14 touchdowns. Mims had a record-setting senior year and led Lone Star to a 14-1 record, falling in the 2019 state semifinals to Denton Ryan (led by Drew Sanders). With 114 catches and 31 touchdowns, Mims set the state record for receiving yards in a season (2,626) and finished his career with 5,485 receiving yards, which is No. 1 in Texas history and No. 8 all-time nationally. Mims was named Mr. Football in Texas and a USA Today All-American. He also lettered in basketball (averaged 14.7 points per game as a sophomore) before giving up the sport to focus on football.

A four-star recruit, Mims was the No. 29 wide receiver in the 2020 recruiting class and the No. 26 recruit in Texas (No. 4 wide receiver in the state, behind Smith-Njigba and Quentin Johnston). The recruiting floodgates opened in early 2018 when he received 16 FBS offers in the months after his sophomore season, including from Ohio State, Texas A&M and Wisconsin. After his junior year, schools like Notre Dame, Oklahoma and Stanford joined the mix. Mims verbally committed to Stanford in August 2019, but he let schools, specifically Oklahoma, that he was keeping his options open. He decommitted from Stanford in November 2019 and flipped to the Sooners. Mims elected to skip the 2022 bowl game and his senior season to enter the 2023 NFL Draft.

PRO DAY	5107	182	31 1/2	8 3/4	74 3/4	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	(stood on Combine testing)

STRENGTHS: Eats up ground quickly with his smooth, straight-line strides ... flashes a vertical burst on tape to consistently win on runway routes ... maintains his route speed while tracking the football ... catches well over his shoulder and displays the adjustment timing to finish grabs downfield ... one of only four draftable pass-catchers in the 2023 draft class to average better than 19.5 yards per catch in his college career (seven receptions of 40-plus yards in 2022) ... puts the ball away quickly after the catch to squeeze out a few more yards (70.4 percent first-down rate in 2022) ... low-key and reserved personality but highly competitive on the field ... productive punt returner, averaging 11.8 yards per return (33/391/0) ... aligned outside and in the slot.

WEAKNESSES: Thinly-built frame and a smaller target for quarterbacks ... marginal body power limits tackle-breaking opportunities ... not very physical and early route contact drowns his rhythm and forces the quarterback to look elsewhere ... limited play strength also shows with crowded catch points, and 50-50 balls are exactly that (a coinflip) ... average fluidity in lower body is evident on intermediate routes ... capable of spectacular catches but will also drop some easy ones (see 2022 West Virginia tape) ... muffed a pair of punts on the 2021 tape.

SUMMARY: A two-year starter at Oklahoma, Mims was an outside receiver (left of the formation) in offensive coordinator Jeff Lebby's up-tempo scheme, also seeing time in the slot. He led the Sooners in receiving all three seasons and posted career bests in 2022 as the only FBS receiver with at least 45 catches to average more than 20.0 yards per reception. Mims is a straight-line burner (best on crossers, drags and go routes) with quality tracking and adjustment skills. However, he has underwhelming size and strength, and a more diverse NFL offense will ask more of him than what he did college. Overall, Mims must prove himself vs. press-man coverage and expand his route-running inventory with improved stem balance/footwork, but his bread and butter will always be his field-stretching speed and finishing skills. He will add an explosive element to an NFL offense as a rotational rookie receiver and punt returner.

10. JAYDEN REED | Michigan State 5107 | 187 lbs. | 5SR Naperville, Ill. (Central) 4/28/2000 (age 23.00) #1

BACKGROUND: Jayden Reed, who is one of four children, grew up in Chicago's West Side and started playing football when he was 10 years old at the Pop Warner level in Oak Park (also played on a traveling basketball team). When he was in junior high, his family moved to Plainfield in the Chicago suburbs, where he played for the Naperville Chargers and became teammates with quarterback Payton Thorne. They both attended Metea Valley High School and became teammates again for the varsity football team. Reed was used as more of a defensive back than wide receiver, and he finished his junior season with 23 catches for 403 yards and four touchdowns in 2016. Looking for a better football program, Thorne, who was one year behind Reed, transferred to Naperville Central, and Reed decided to join him with hopes of more offensive exposure in his senior season. The move paid off as he finished the 2017 season with 1,179 receiving yards and 18 touchdowns as Thorne and Reed led Naperville to a 9-3 season, including two playoff wins. Reed earned first team All-State honors and was named the team MVP.

A three-star recruit, Reed was the No. 261 wide receiver in the 2018 recruiting class and the No. 46 recruit in Illinois. After his father (Sabian) died of kidney and heart failure during Jayden's sophomore year in high school (September 2015), Reed's academics suffered, which caused him to be overlooked as a recruit by major programs. He received three scholarship offers and committed to Western Michigan over Miami (Ohio) and Toledo. After a freshman All-American season in 2018, Reed entered the transfer portal with the hopes of landing at a Power 5 program. Thorne had recently signed with Michigan State, and Reed decided to rejoin his former teammate in East Lansing (they both redshirted in 2019). He graduated with his degree in communications (December 2021). Reed accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl.

PRO DAY	-	191	29 1/4	9	72 5/8	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	13	(stood on Combine height and testing)

STRENGTHS: Above-average speed on vertical patterns and as a returner ... uses subtle hesitation to lull corners and create stride separation ... cornerbacks have a tough time matching his foot quickness at the top of routes and his acceleration out of breaks ... impressive hand strength at the catch point ... surprisingly effective finisher on contested balls ... maintains his focus through contact and when adjusting to throws away from his frame ... feisty perimeter blocker who frustrates defenders ... averaged 14.9 yards per punt return with three career touchdowns (39/581/3) ... also returned kicks, averaging 17.5 yards (48/841/0) ... served as a team captain in five games in 2022 ... caught a pass in all 31 games he played for the Spartans ... one of only eight players in Michigan State history to reach 18 career touchdown grabs.

WEAKNESSES: Unimpressive body type with slender build and limited length ... will struggle to escape the jam once press corners get their hands on him ... needs to develop his hand technique in his releases and at the top of routes ... occasionally negates his foot quickness with excessive steps off the line or mid-route ... broken tackles were scarce on his senior tape ... drops too many easy ones ... accounted for three fumbles on the 2022 Penn State tape ... his senior year was marred by multiple injuries, including a foot injury in preseason camp (August 2022), left hip issue (September 2022), and he missed one game after he collided with the team bench and required stitches for the deep laceration in his back.

SUMMARY: A three-year starter at Michigan State, Reed was a perimeter receiver in offensive coordinator Jay Johnson’s offense. Although his senior year fell short of expectations because of injuries and the Spartans’ offensive struggles, he accounted for 46 explosive plays (20-plus yards) over the past two seasons and became just the third player in school history with multiple punt return touchdowns in the same season. Reed has outstanding foot quickness and skillfully throttles his route speed to separate from coverage. Despite dropping too many easy ones, his focus is heightened on contested windows, and he shows a knack for timing his leaps and snatching the football off the helmets of defensive backs. Overall, Reed will have a tougher time overcoming his slight size vs. NFL defensive backs, but his speed, route tempo and downfield ball skills are the ingredients of a potential NFL playmaker. With a few technical tweaks to his game, he has NFL starting ability (slot and outside) and adds value as a return man.

GRADE: 3rd Round (No. 80 overall)

11. RASHEE RICE | SMU 6005 | 204 lbs. | 4SR North Richland Hills, Texas (Richland) 4/22/2000 (age 23.01) #11

BACKGROUND: Rashee (ruh-SHEE) Rice was born in Philadelphia and grew up in the Fort Worth area after his family moved to North Texas. At age 6, his father put him in football pads because Rice kept jumping off his bike, and that is when he started playing football (Rice: “I used to race my shadow in the street.”). Rice also played basketball and ran track prior to high school. He attended Richland High School and had a breakthrough sophomore season with 28 catches for 550 yards and 10 touchdowns. As a junior, Rice announced himself as one of the top wide receiver recruits in the area as he led Richland to an 11-3 record and the quarterfinals in the state playoffs for the first time in school history. He finished his junior season with 72 receptions for 1,386 yards and 19 touchdowns, earning first team All-District honors. As a senior, Rice recorded 51 catches for 841 yards and five touchdowns, earning second team All-District honors. He also lettered in basketball and track, setting personal bests in the 200 meters (23.26) and triple jump (40 feet 11 inches).

A three-star recruit, Rice was the No. 102 wide receiver in the 2019 recruiting class and the No. 108 recruit in Texas. His recruitment started to soar during his productive junior campaign, receiving his first offer from SMU. Rice received 27 offers in total (not his hometown TCU), including Power 5 programs like Arizona State, Illinois, Kansas, Minnesota, Missouri, Nebraska, Northwestern, Texas Tech, Virginia and Washington State. But he connected with the SMU coaching staff and head coach Sonny Dykes’ vision and decided to stay close to home. Rice accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl.

PRO DAY	6006	205	32 7/8	9 1/4	77	-	-	-	-	-	4.23	7.02	-	(stood on Combine runs, jumps)

STRENGTHS: Outstanding body control, hand-eye coordination and arm length to consistently win at the catch point ... explosive leaping skills and play strength as a high-pointer ... has enough speed to stack and threaten downfield patterns ... loves selling the vertical track and working slant routes to get underneath corners ... does a great job mixing his speeds and snapping his routes ... works back to the football and sits down in open zones ... evades and doesn’t allow the jam to slow his route ... tracks the ball well over his shoulder ... catches the ball with YAC in mind ... blocks with the same aggressiveness that he attacks the football ... voted a senior captain ... highly productive senior year and finished one of only three FBS receivers to reach 1,300 receiving yards in 2022 ... finished his college career top five in school history in TD catches (25), receiving yards (3,111) and receptions (233).

WEAKNESSES: Doesn't have elite top-end speed before or after the catch ... routes are quick but lack suddenness in and out of breaks ... needs to keep his routes sharpened and is guilty of shorting his patterns when searching for separation ... prone to focus drops ... contact balance looks great on one play and lackluster the next ... responsible for three fumbles in 2022 ... NFL scouts say that the interview process will be paramount to his final draft grade (NFL scout: "He grew up quite a bit the last year but needs to stay on that path.") ... doesn't offer any return value on special teams ... played through a turf toe during the 2022 season.

SUMMARY: A three-year starter at SMU, Rice moved from the slot to the perimeter as a senior in head coach Rhett Lashlee's power-spread offense. At a program that has produced a long list of quality receivers, he had the most prolific season school history in 2022, breaking Emmanuel Sanders' receiving yards record and ranking No. 1 in the FBS with 112.9 receiving yards per game. With his ability to frame his catches, Rice times his leaps and wins jumps balls, leading the FBS with 18 catches of 20-plus air yards downfield in 2022. Though he makes tough catches look easy, he is also guilty of dropping some easy ones and will fre lance at will. Overall, Rice must prove he has NFL-level consistency (in all areas) to compensate for his average speed, but he is a ball winner with natural instincts after the catch. He can be a quality contributor early in his NFL career.

GRADE: 3rd Round (No. 82 overall)

12. JONATHAN MINGO | Ole Miss 6016 | 220 lbs. | 4SR Brandon, Miss. (Brandon) 4/20/2001 (age 22.02) #1

BACKGROUND: Jonathan Mingo, who has an older half-brother, was born and raised in Brandon, about 15 miles east of Jackson. He played baseball and soccer throughout his childhood and started playing football in middle school. Mingo attended Brandon High School, where he was a three-year letterman at wide receiver. After posting 23 catches for 266 yards and three touchdowns as a sophomore, he developed a strong bond with new starting quarterback Will Rogers (they remain close friends to this day), who went on to star at Mississippi State. Mingo finished the 2017 season with 53 receptions for 775 yards and six touchdowns. As a senior, Mingo had his best season and helped Brandon to a 13-2 record and the 2018 6A championship game (lost to Oak Grove). He finished his final year with 77 catches for 1,451 yards and 14 touchdowns, earning first team All-State honors. Mingo finished his prep career with 2,492 receiving yards and 23 touchdowns. He also played on defense as a safety and lettered in baseball at Brandon.

A four-star recruit, Mingo was the No. 32 wide receiver in the 2019 recruiting class and the No. 12 recruit in Mississippi (No. 2 receiver in the state). He picked up offers from Arkansas, Auburn, Notre Dame and Oregon, but in the end, the self-proclaimed "Mama's boy" decided to stay close to home and commit to Ole Miss over Georgia. Mingo was the third-highest ranked recruit in the Rebels' 2019 recruiting class (behind RB Jerrion Ealy and WR Dannis Jackson). His father (John) played football at Jackson State. Mingo accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl.

STRENGTHS: Well-built athlete with body strength and large mitts ... uses his frame to keep defenders from the catch point on slants or when working back to the football ... has a smooth stride to gain a step mid-route ... not sudden in his route breaks but uses coordinated sink to sustain momentum ... tracks the ball well with steady body control (will use his strong hands to make one-handed grabs when needed) ... not just a possession target and won't go to the ground easily after the catch ... put explosive plays on tape (10 catches of 30-plus yards and two 70-plus-yard catches in 2022) ... humble, egoless player who "never complains about catches or playing time," according to head coach Lane Kiffin ... came back from injury to start every game and set career bests as a senior.

WEAKNESSES: Lacks noticeable twitch out of his breaks and faces a lot of contested windows ... more of a build-up speed athlete and can be slowed early by press coverage ... ran a basic route tree in college and still maturing ... allows the football into his body at times (led to an interception on 2022 Auburn tape) ... half-hearted blocker on some reps and overzealous on others (flagged for three holding calls on 2022 tapes studied) ... marginal special teams experience ... suffered a stress fracture in his left foot (September 2021) and required surgery, missing seven games as a junior (required a second surgery in April 2022 because the injury hadn't correctly healed).

SUMMARY: A four-year starter at Ole Miss, Mingo lined up across the formation in head coach Lane Kiffin's offense with 61.3 percent of his targets coming between the numbers (slants, in-breakers etc.). He joined Jalin Hyatt as the only two SEC receivers with 50-plus catches and 16.5-plus yards per reception in 2022 (he broke Elijah Moore's single-game receiving record with a 247-yard performance vs. Vanderbilt). A smooth, physical presence with strong hands, Mingo is a balanced athlete in his releases, routes and at the catch point. He is a long-strider who needs a beat to build up his speed and must fine-tune areas of his game, including his efficiency at the top of the stem. Overall, Mingo has only average deception and separation quickness, but with his size, pacing and competitive ball skills, he has the body control and upside that has the attention of NFL teams. He has starting potential in the right situation.

13. TREY PALMER | Nebraska 6002 | 192 lbs. | 4SR Kentwood, La. (Kentwood) 4/2/2001 (age 22.07) #3

BACKGROUND: Raymontre "Trey" Palmer, who has three brothers, grew up in the small town of Kentwood (2,000 population) in northern Louisiana with his mother (Raymonda Callahan). He developed an early passion for baseball and football, playing throughout youth leagues and travel ball. Palmer attended Kentwood High School (only 30 in his graduating class) where he played both ways (wide receiver and free safety). He saw varsity action as a freshman and helped Kentwood to the 2015 Class 1A state championship, including a 29-yard touchdown catch in the title game. As a junior, Palmer posted 41 receptions for 917 yards and 13 touchdowns. As a senior, he led Kentwood to the 2018 1A state championship, finishing his final season with 39 catches for 1,008 yards (25.8) and nine touchdowns to earn All-State honors. Palmer finished his prep career with 195 tackles and six interceptions on defense. He also earned All-State honors in baseball and track (sprints and relays). He captured the 200-meter state title four consecutive years, including a time of 21.11 as a senior, which broke a 34-year-old Class 1A state record. Palmer also won the 2019 state championship in the 100 meters (10.42).

A four-star recruit, Palmer was the No. 18 wide receiver in the 2019 recruiting class and the No. 6 recruit in Louisiana. He picked up several high-profile offers, including Georgia, Michigan and Texas before narrowing down his list to Alabama, Arizona State, Florida, LSU and Mississippi State. Palmer strongly considered the Sun Devils, but he developed a “father figure” relationship with former LSU assistant Mickey Joseph as a freshman in high school. Palmer signed with the in-state Tigers and also joined the track team. After three seasons in Baton Rouge, Palmer wanted a “fresh start” and entered the transfer portal in December 2021. The move coincided with Joseph leaving LSU to join the Nebraska coaching staff (his alma mater) as the passing game coordinator and assistant head coach. Palmer committed to the Cornhuskers in January 2022, and Joseph was later elevated to interim head coach in September 2022 after Scott Frost was fired. Palmer has two young sons, who live in Louisiana. His uncle (Demetrius Hookfin) played cornerback at LSU (1999-2002) and led the SEC with 22 passes defended as a senior. Palmer accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl.

STRENGTHS: With track background, it is hard to out-throw his deep speed (4.33 time was the fastest 40-yard dash among wide receivers at the combine, and his 1.81 was the second-fastest “flying 20” among all players) ... gliding acceleration makes everyone else on the field appear half-speed (10 catches of 30-plus yards in 2022) ... uses head/foot jabs and speed variances to catch defenders leaning at the top of routes ... the threat of his vertical skills (or sweeps and reverses) will draw coverage and create voids ... elusive instincts to attack the leverage of defensive backs ... jets and change-of-direction quickness help him avoid tacklers in quick game ... big-play potential as a returner, averaging 8.3 yards per punt return (27/224/1) and 25.3 yards per kick return (18/456/1) — one of only eight players in LSU history to return both a kickoff and punt for a touchdown (his kick return touchdown was the first in Tiger Stadium since 1981) ... only the second player in Nebraska history to surpass 1,000 receiving yards in a season.

WEAKNESSES: Relies too much on his body to finish catches ... had more drops (18) in his career than touchdown receptions (12) ... has lean muscle on his narrow body with average play strength ... can be fazed and lose focus in traffic with a below-average success rate finishing in contested windows ... vulnerable vs. physical press and can be muscled off his route path ... development as a craftsman with his routes is a work in progress ... struggled to carve out a full-time receiving role at LSU and had only one season of high-level receiving production in college.

SUMMARY: A one-year starter at Nebraska, Palmer was primarily a slot receiver in former offensive coordinator Mark Whipple’s shotgun, pro-style scheme, also seeing time on the outside. After three years at LSU, he had a record-breaking senior season at Nebraska and set school records for receiving yards in both a season and game (accounted for 40 more catches and 572 yards more than the second-leading receiver on the Huskers in 2022). One of the fastest players in the draft class, Palmer has Ted Ginn-like vertical burst (led the FBS with three catches of 70-plus yards in 2022) and catches defenders napping with the acceleration out of his breaks. Though a confident competitor, his concentration can be disrupted by physical defenders in press or on his hip. Overall, Palmer needs more route polish and consistency through contact to be useful on a down-to-down basis, but he is an inside/outside field stretcher with speed that defenses must respect. He projects as an NFL rookie return man and WR4/5 who can move up the depth chart over time.

GRADE: 3rd-4th Round (No. 95 overall)

14.

A.T. PERRY | Wake Forest

6034 | 198 lbs. | SSR

Lake Worth, Fla. (Park Vista)

BACKGROUND: Atorian “A.T.” Perry, who is the oldest of seven children, grew up in a military family with both of his parents in the Navy. He was born in Florida, but his family often relocated, including six years in South Carolina before returning to Florida. Perry grew up playing basketball and football (flag and tackle), and he attended Park Vista Community High School on the Atlantic coast (an hour north of Miami). He was a four-year varsity starter, playing all three ways as a wide receiver, defensive back and punter. As a junior, Perry helped Park Vista to an undefeated regular season and league title, earning honorable mention All-Area honors. He was named the team’s MVP as a senior captain and finished with 40 receptions for 798 yards and 10 touchdowns, earning All-Conference, All-County and All-Area honors in 2016. Perry also earned All-County honors in basketball and lettered in track (jumps and relays), winning the 2016 Palm Beach County Championship in the long jump (21 feet 4 inches) and placing fourth (22-5) at the State Championship.

A three-star recruit, Perry was the No. 205 wide receiver in the 2018 recruiting class and the No. 228 recruit in Florida. He received a handful of FBS offers, including Appalachian State, Central Michigan, Coastal Carolina and Toledo, and he initially committed to UAB. However, Wake Forest (led by recruiter Kevin Higgins) saw him as a senior and became his first offer from a Power 5 program. Perry flipped to the Demon Deacons and stayed committed despite late interest from Georgia after it had a scholarship spot come open. His mother (Chasity Prescott) was an All-American sprinter and state champion in high school before attending Arizona State on a track scholarship. Perry accepted his invitation to the 2023 East-West Shrine Bowl.

STRENGTHS: Outstanding height and arm length ... agile-footed route runner who could teach a master class on pacing ... runs routes to proper depth with efficient footwork to snap comebacks/stop routes ... has a knack for finding the void in zone coverage ... effectively uses his body and pterodactyl wingspan on vertical patterns ... tracks the ball well ... strong hands through contact with the hand-eye concentration to pull in erratic throws ... flashes some fluidity after the catch to shake a tackle here or there ... only one penalty as a senior (false start) ... double-digit touchdown grabs each of the past two seasons — his 28 receiving touchdowns are a school record and tied him with Calvin Johnson for seventh-most in ACC history.

WEAKNESSES: Decent build-up speed but wish he had more of a finishing gear ... lean-framed with marginal play strength ... can be muscled off his route path, allowing corners to maintain their phase ... leggy out of his breaks, especially on double moves ... has a bad habit of tipping his route at the break point, helping corners drive on throws ... not an elusive ball carrier (averaged only 2.2 YAC per catch in 2022) ... feels ghosts and has a bad habit of unnecessarily leaping for the ball, especially along the sideline ... his drops were usually a result of his eyes being late to locate and the ball getting on him too quickly ... below-average sustain strength and want-to as a blocker ... doesn't offer special teams value.

SUMMARY: A three-year starter at Wake Forest, Perry was the X wide receiver in head coach Dave Clawson's slow-mesh vertical offense, lining up on the outside on 91.2 percent of his snaps. He was Sam Hartman's go-to target the past two seasons and became just the third player in school history to reach 2,500 receiving yards in a career. A thinly built, long-limbed receiver, Perry lacks ideal play strength, which will be more noticeable versus NFL press, but he is a smooth strider and shouldn't have any trouble expanding his route tree. He has above-average body control to snap out of his routes or adjust to the football on fades, outs etc. Overall, Perry doesn't have elite speed, and I worry about his ability to make plays through contact at the next level, but he is a polished route runner with above-average tempo and ball skills to consistently give his quarterback a target. He offers outside starting potential in the NFL.

15. NATHANIEL DELL | Houston 5083 | 165 lbs. | SSR Daytona Beach, Fla. (Mainland) 10/29/1999 (age 23.49) #1

BACKGROUND: Nathaniel "Tank" Dell, who is one of three children, was born and raised in Daytona Beach and started playing football at age 6. He received the nickname "Tank" by his mother because of his large head as a baby (his teammates and coaches call him "Tank"). Dell attended Mainland High School and lettered all four years as a wide receiver. As a junior, he led the team in all-purpose yards and posted 56 receptions for 1,078 yards and 11 touchdowns, earning honorable mention All-State honors. As a senior, Dell earned second team All-Area honors and finished with 46 catches for 925 yards and 8 touchdowns. He also lettered in track and set personal bests in the high jump (5 feet 10 inches), long jump (21-11) and 400 meters (57.99).

A two-star recruit, Dell was the No. 421 wide receiver in the 2018 recruiting class and the No. 422 recruit in Florida. He went widely overlooked as a recruit until he attended a 7-on-7 camp the summer prior to his senior year and received an offer from FIU. Dell committed to Butch Davis prior to his senior year, but FIU stopped communicating and rescinded the scholarship offer. His only other option was to join high school teammate Brian Jenkins Jr. at FCS-level Alabama A&M. Dell played in only four games in 2018 because of injury and made a "business decision" to bet on himself by going the junior college route with his eyes on jumping to an FBS program. He enrolled at Independence (Kan.) Community College, where he led the team in receiving in 2019. Dell was considered a three-star junior college recruit and the No. 19 juco WR in the 2020 recruiting class. He planned to commit to South Florida and return to his home state, but the coaches told him to hold off because they were waiting on a few other potential signees. Instead, Dell committed to Houston over Akron, Central Michigan and Old Dominion. Dell accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl but decided to pull out (choice) after two practices.

PRO DAY	5083	164	30 1/2	8 3/4	72 1/2	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	(stood on Combine testing)

STRENGTHS: Moves with sudden quickness ... closes cushion in a flash and creates vertical separation with his top-end speed ... flashes an extra gear when tracking the football downfield (five catches of 40-plus yards in 2022) ... fluid body control to get in-out of his breaks ... his ability to brake and balance in the open field makes him a nightmare for pursuit ... effective in the screen game and on crossers thanks to his YAC athleticism ... can score from anywhere on the field and caught a touchdown in 10 different games in 2022 (most in the FBS) ... became the team's featured punt returner in 2022, averaging 16.0 yards per return (10/160/1) with one return touchdown (also had two additional punt return touchdowns called back due to penalties) ... also returned kicks as an underclassman ... voted a team captain as a senior ... highly productive junior and senior seasons, leading the FBS in receiving yards per game (101.0) and receiving touchdowns (29) over the last two seasons.

WEAKNESSES: Slight, small-framed athlete ... falls below the height/weight/strength thresholds for most NFL teams ... underpowered, and it looks like one hit will break him ... needs to refine his releases and not allow corners to jam him off the line ... wasn't asked to run the most complex route tree in college ... average length and overall catch radius ... fumbled three times in 2022 ... most of his snaps (67.0 percent) came from the slot as a senior ... stayed relatively healthy at Houston, but missed seven games in 2018 at Alabama A&M because of a hip pointer.

SUMMARY: A three-year starter at Houston, Dell was an inside/outside receiver in Dana Holgorsen's version of the Air Raid offense and added punt return duties as a senior. After leading the FBS in receiving yards (1,398) and touchdown grabs (17) in 2022, he leaves as one of the most prolific receivers in school history, finishing his career No. 3 in touchdowns catches (32), No. 4 in receptions (222) and No. 6 in receiving yards (3,155). A finely tuned athlete, Dell has blur speed along with the twitchy ease of movement and controlled burst to create separation in one-on-one matchups. Although he is a smallish target and lacks tackle-breaking strength, he can run circles around defenders and plays with the competitive urgency of a much bigger player. Overall, Dell's diminutive size and below-average strength won't be a fit for everyone, but he has quick hands and elite start-stop acceleration to create chunk plays short, intermediate and deep. He projects as a dynamic No. 3 or 4 wide receiver for an NFL offense while also handling punt return duties.

16. XAVIER HUTCHINSON | Iowa State 6017 | 203 lbs. | 5SR Jacksonville, Fla. (Bartram Trail) 6/1/2000 (age 22.91) #8

BACKGROUND: Xavier Hutchinson was born in St. Augustine, Fla., to parents who both served in the Navy. He was a multi-sport athlete growing up but always gravitated toward basketball and AAU. Hutchinson attended Bartram Trail High School in St. Johns, where he starred in basketball and football, catching passes from highly recruited quarterback Joey Gatewood, who later committed to Auburn. After seeing minimal action on varsity as a freshman and sophomore, he recorded 28 catches for 267 yards and one touchdown as a junior, adding a rushing touchdown. As a senior, Hutchinson earned third team All-State and first team All-District honors, leading Bartram Trail to the 2017 Class 7A state championship game. He finished his senior season with 74 receptions for 1,004 yards and 11 touchdowns. Hutchinson was also a three-year letterman in basketball and averaged 13.4 points, 4.9 rebounds and 2.8 assists per game as a senior, leading Bartram Trail to a 20-win season in 2017-18.

Hutchinson wasn't ranked by the recruiting services and received marginal interest from football programs because of academic issues, and he thought of himself as a basketball player first and football player second. After his productive senior season, he saw his future on the football field and enrolled at Blinn College in Brenham, Texas. Hutchinson missed the first five games in 2017 and managed only 15 catches that first season, but it was enough to earn an offer from Iowa State in June 2018. He had a breakout sophomore season with 47 catches for 652 yards and five touchdowns in 2018. A three-star junior college recruit, Hutchinson picked up several Power 5 offers, including Nebraska, Illinois, Oklahoma, TCU and Utah. However, Iowa State and head coach Matt Campbell had the edge because they were early to identify his talent, and Hutchinson signed with the Cyclones' 2020 recruiting class. His father (Trent), who was a chef in the Navy, ran track at Georgia Southern. His mother (Denise) played basketball at Wisconsin. Hutchinson took advantage of the extra year of eligibility because of COVID rules and returned for a fifth season in 2022. He graduated with his degree in criminal justice. Hutchinson accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl.

PRO DAY	6022	204	30 7/8	9	75	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	13 (position drills and bench press only)

STRENGTHS: Solid height/weight/speed athlete ... on-field movements showcase his foot quickness and smooth gait ... body control comes very naturally to him ... plays unfazed by traffic and displays strength through contact to finish catches to the ground ... physical presence and doesn't allow cornerbacks to muscle him off his route path ... efficient as a grab-and-go receiver, turning slants into big gains ... looks comfortable securing catches outside of his frame ... not shifty but can make receivers miss ... effective stalk and wall-off blocker ... caught at least one pass in all 37 games the past three years ... set the Iowa State reception records for a single season (107) and career (254) ... no FBS player had more catches over the past three seasons.

WEAKNESSES: Built well for the position but doesn't consistently use his size ... linear athlete who doesn't rely on sink or snap in his route breaks ... will struggle to elude NFL press and man-to-man coverage ... needs to be more subtle and skilled with his hand fighting to separate at the top of routes ... hands are more average than above-average ... very low touchdown rate, scoring once every 16.9 catches for the Cyclones ... offers nothing on special teams coverages (only 13 career special teams snaps in college) ... underwent surgery after a piece of bone in his left thumb became detached (November 2021).

SUMMARY: A three-year starter at Iowa State, Hutchinson was the X wide receiver in former offensive coordinator Tom Manning's offense. The FBS leader in catches per game (8.9) in 2022, he set the Big 12 record for most receptions (254) by a three-year player, passing Justin Blackmon (252). The Cyclones' leading receiver each of his three seasons in Ames, Hutchinson is a physical, quick-footed mover with NFL-worthy body control and catch instincts. Though his tape shows both toughness and urgency, he lacks separation burst in his releases and at the stem, and it will be tougher for him to shake tight man coverage in the NFL. Overall, Hutchinson is an average-twitch athlete and doesn't have a truly distinguishing trait, but his competitive mindset and well-rounded game will be appealing to an NFL team looking for a rotational possession target. He has the potential to be an eventual No. 2 in the NFL with additional polish.

GRADE: 3rd-4th Round

17. MICHAEL WILSON | Stanford 6017 | 213 lbs. | 5SR Simi Valley, Calif. (Chaminade) 2/23/2000 (age 23.18) #4

BACKGROUND: Michael Wilson, who is one of four children, grew up in Simi Valley (40 miles west of Los Angeles) and started playing football in elementary school. He played for the Simi Valley Patriots in middle school and helped his Santa Clarita team win the L.A. City championship. Wilson enrolled at West Hills Chaminade High School, a private Catholic school, where he was a prolific basketball and football player. He became a starting wide receiver as a sophomore and posted 36 catches for 463 yards and four touchdowns. As a junior, Wilson had his most productive season with 70 receptions for 1,280 yards and 12 touchdowns, earning first team All-State and All-League honors. He helped Chaminade to the 2017 conference title as a senior and accounted for 56 receptions for 1,157 yards and 12 touchdowns. Wilson was named Conference MVP as a senior and finished his prep career as the school's all-time leading receiver (2,900 yards). He was the starting point guard on the basketball team and was twice named the Chaminade Male Athlete of the Year.

A four-star recruit, Wilson was the No. 42 wide receiver in the 2018 recruiting class and the No. 30 recruit in California. The summer before his junior season, Washington reached out with his first scholarship offer, followed by Washington State, Notre Dame and several others. However, Stanford was always Wilson's "dream school," and he committed to the Cardinal when the coaches offered him in March 2017. The day after he was named the Conference MVP as a senior, he found out that he was accepted into Stanford. He was the second-highest ranked recruit in head coach David Shaw's 2018 class. His girlfriend (Sophia Smith) played soccer at Stanford (2018-19) and is currently a member of the United States national team and Portland Thorns FC, earning the NWSL 2022 MVP award. Wilson's uncle (Craighton McFarlane) played football at Prairie View A&M. His cousin (Craighton Rafael McFarlane) ran track at Sacramento State. His aunt (Maureen Jacobson) played soccer for the New Zealand World Cup team in 1991. Wilson graduated with his degree in Management Science & Engineering (December 2021) and earned his master's degree in communication. He accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl.

STRENGTHS: Already owns a developed NFL physique ... establishes initial leverage with jab steps or hand swipes to defeat press ... instinctive route stems with the foot quickness to get in and out of his cuts ... is always reading, processing and adjusting to coverages, and preparation habits are an integral part of his game ... has the build-up speed to challenge defenses in the deep third ... graceful mid-air and makes controlled adjustments on the football ... built for success in contested catch situations ... consummate teammate and team captain with elite football character ... embraces blocking responsibilities ... experienced on punt return coverages as a jammer and returner (6.9 yards per return).

WEAKNESSES: More controlled than sudden with his route feet ... pedestrian long speed and struggles to shed corners on his hip ... NFL length and press will be a new challenge that may disrupt his release ... runs tough and physical but not elusive after the catch ... doesn't motor away from pursuit ... occasionally allows the ball into his body, especially downfield ... logged more drops (12) than touchdown catches (11) in his career ... durability is a major question mark: suffered a Jones fracture in his foot (December 2020) and underwent season-ending surgery; suffered the same injury two days after he was cleared (Summer 2021) and required another surgery and extensive rehab, missing the first eight games of 2021 (missed a total of 11 months); suffered a season-ending injury as a senior (October 2022).

SUMMARY: A four-year starter at Stanford, Wilson lined up across the formation in former offensive coordinator Tavita Pritchard's pro-style scheme. When on the field, he was a productive possession threat, and he reminded evaluators of his talent with a dominant week at the Senior Bowl. However, over the past three seasons, Wilson has missed more games because of injury (16) than he played (14), and durability is an obvious question mark. He credits his character development to overcoming the adversity of missing time from the injuries. Overall, Wilson has uneven career production because of his injury history, but the more tape you watch, the more you appreciate his package of size, intelligence and competitive athleticism to challenge coverage. As long as he stays healthy, his skills on offense and special teams will keep him on an NFL roster.

GRADE: 4th Round

18. KAYSHON BOUTTE | LSU

5112 | 195 lbs. | 3JR

New Iberia, La. (Westgate)

BACKGROUND: Kayshon (Kay-shawn) Boutte (BOO-tee), who is the oldest of five, was born and raised in New Iberia (75 miles southwest of Baton Rouge) and started playing football and running track at age 7. He attended Westgate High School, where he saw the field as a varsity receiver as a freshman. Boutte caught 44 passes for 674 yards and 13 total touchdowns (eight receiving, five rushing) as a junior. He had his best season as a senior with 47 catches for 1,005 yards (21.4 average) and 15 touchdowns, adding 71 carries for 874 rushing yards and 12 scores on the ground. Boutte also had three return touchdowns (two kickoffs, one punt) and led Westgate to a 10-4 record and the 2019 state playoff quarterfinals. He was named the District MVP as a senior and earned Under Armour All-American honors. Boutte also ran track at Westgate and finished third at the 2019 indoor state championships in the 60 meters (6.90) and 400 meters (50.87). He set several school records with personal bests in the 100 meters (10.97), 200 meters (21.25) and 110-meter hurdles (15.47).

A five-star recruit, Boutte was the No. 2 wide receiver in the 2020 recruiting class (behind Ohio State's Julian Fleming) and the No. 1 recruit in Louisiana. He was the No. 24 overall recruit nationally. Boutte was courted by several SEC programs, including Alabama, Arkansas, Ole Miss and Tennessee. But he was a Tigers fan growing up, and his heart strings led him to Baton Rouge for college. His girlfriend gave birth to their son (Kylan) on September 22, 2022 (Boutte was excused from that weekend's game vs. New Mexico). He initially announced that he would return to school for his senior season, but after an off-field incident put his status with the team in jeopardy, he decided to opt out of the 2022 bowl game and enter the 2023 NFL Draft.

PRO DAY	5112	197	31 3/8	9 3/4	77 3/8	-	-	-	-	-	-	7.14	- (position drills and 3-cone only – choice)

STRENGTHS: Average-sized athlete, but his pliable body movements help him as a route runner and ball carrier ... accelerates really well in the drive phase to challenge defensive backs ... flashes the route instincts to sit down or create pockets of separation ... not shy using physicality mid-routes and doesn't let defenders bounce him from his path ... at his best after the catch thanks to his body strength to run through arm tackles and his vision to complicate pursuit angles ... able to expand his catch radius and sky for the ball ... shows the athletic adjustment skills to contort his body and comfortably snatch away from his frame ... was on pace for a record-setting sophomore year (led the FBS with nine touchdown grabs in the first six games) before his ankle injury ... his performance against Ole Miss as a freshman (14/308/3) is something NFL scouts still talk about.

WEAKNESSES: Doesn't run every route with the same purpose ... has a bad habit of leaning as a route runner, tipping his break path ... doesn't like the noise over the middle ... the ball gets on top of him quickly, enters his body and ends up on the ground ... needs to improve his batting average in contested catch situations ... not a proven deep target (only 11 of his college catches came on throws 20-plus yards downfield) ... will engage as a blocker but can be tossed and struggles to sustain ... limited special teams experience ... missed most of the sophomore season because of a broken right ankle (October 2021), which required a second surgery in the offseason when the ankle didn't heal correctly ... encountered focus issues and immature moments throughout his tenure at LSU and was publicly called out by Brian Kelly to get him back on track ... didn't leave LSU on the best terms, and his character will be deeply scrutinized by NFL teams.

SUMMARY: A three-year starter at LSU, Boutte worked primarily out of the slot in offensive coordinator Mike Denbrock’s scheme (he played for three different offensive coordinators in his three college seasons). Of all the talented wide receivers who have gone through the LSU program, none reached 100 career receptions faster than Boutte, who wore the No. 7 jersey in 2022 as the team’s most dynamic playmaker from Louisiana. With his athletic ball skills, Boutte can make erratic quarterbacks look better than they are, and he offers legitimate big-play ability thanks to his RAC skills (contact balance, body strength, acceleration). However, his game is marred by inconsistencies — focus drops, nonchalant routes and too many indicators that tip off defensive backs. Overall, Boutte is a confounding evaluation because he shows the athletic talent to be an NFL weapon, but his effort level doesn’t always match his ability, and most scouts view him as a slot-only prospect. Though he has NFL starting skills, the unpredictable nature of his game complicates his pro projection.

GRADE: 4th Round

19. DONTAYVION WICKS | Virginia 6013 | 206 lbs. | 4SR Plaquemine, La. (Plaquemine) 6/16/2001 (age 21.86) #3

BACKGROUND: Dontayvion Wicks grew up south of Baton Rouge and developed a love for basketball throughout his childhood. He attended Plaquemine High School and played JV basketball as a freshman with his eyes on playing the sport in college. As a sophomore, Wicks was coaxed to the football field by his quarterback half-brother (Trey LeBlanc) and saw immediate varsity reps as a wide receiver. As a junior, he helped Plaquemine to an 8-3 record and the 2017 district championship with 12 receptions for 212 yards. Wicks, who also saw snaps at quarterback, earned All-District honors as a senior wideout and led the program to another eight-win season. He also lettered in basketball two seasons as a shooting guard for Plaquemine High.

A three-star recruit, Wicks was the No. 88 wide receiver in the 2019 recruiting class and the No. 24 recruit in Louisiana. The idea of playing college football became a reality during his junior season when he picked up several lower-level offers like Northwestern State, Nicholls State, Prairie View A&M and Southeastern. As a senior, several FBS-level programs showed more interest, including Virginia, which reached out toward the end of the season and offered in December 2018. Virginia was his only Power 5 scholarship offer. After visiting Charlottesville, Wicks committed to Cavaliers head coach Bronco Mendenhall. He accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl (voted the American team’s practice player-of-the-week).

PRO DAY	6016	205	33	10	80	4.57	2.63	1.63	36 1/2	-	4.20	6.91	- (no bench press – choice)

STRENGTHS: Fantastic frame with above-average length and wingspan ... displays the lateral burst and foot quickness to shake/split defenders vs. press or at the top of routes ... build-up speed on vertical patterns ... above-average catching range and flashes ball-winning traits ... makes athletic adjustments to the football, and his acrobatic grabs are expected ... needs to be more consistent with it, but will use gear change in his routes to tease corners ... plays with the body control to swipe away press for early stacks ... has the start-stop balance to make defenders miss after the catch ... explosive plays are all over his 2021 tape.

WEAKNESSES: Struggled to adjust to the new offense in 2022 and saw his production freefall ... drops have been a perpetual issue, especially throughout his senior season ... prone to body catches and streaky focus ... long, upright strider in the drive phase and break point ... spends too much time attached to coverage and must learn how to be more consistent with his route tempo ... concentration drops with crowded catch points ... poor ball security after the catch (three fumbles over the past two seasons) ... saw some snaps as a protector on punt coverage but needs to expand his special teams résumé ... missed two games as a senior because of a bone bruise (October 2022) and suffered a Lisfranc injury in his right foot (August 2020), which sidelined him for the entire 2020 season.

SUMMARY: A two-year starter at Virginia, Wicks was the X receiver in head coach Tony Elliott’s pro-style spread offense. He put his name on the early-round NFL Draft radar as a junior with a school-record 1,203 receiving yards, including 27 plays of 20-plus yards. But his senior year was the opposite in terms of production as he struggled to match his junior year success while learning the new offense under Elliott. Wicks’ basketball background shows on the football field with his athletic movements, body length and ability to elevate and out-rebound the football. However, the concentration drops are a glaring issue, and he must buckle down on the finer points of the position to maximize his talent. Overall, Wicks’ evaluation is complicated because of the night-and-day difference between his 2021 and 2022 performances, but the raw talent is there for him to continue ascending as he polishes his game. His development potential will understandably capture the interest from NFL teams in the top four rounds.

20. PARKER WASHINGTON | Penn State 5096 | 204 lbs. | 3JR Sugar Land, Texas (Travis) 3/21/2002 (age 21.10) #3

BACKGROUND: Christopher Parker Washington, who has an older sister, grew up southwest of Houston and started playing football at the youth level, where he was often coached by his father (Christopher). He enrolled at William B. Travis High School in Richmond where he lettered in football all four years as a running back and wide receiver. Washington had his most productive season as a junior with 75 receptions for 1,486 yards and 21 total touchdowns (18 receiving, three rushing). As a senior captain, he led Travis to a 10-1 season and the 2019 district championship with 49 catches for 829 yards and 14 touchdowns, earning first team All-District and All-State honors. Washington also lettered in basketball and track.

A four-star recruit, Washington was the No. 45 wide receiver in the 2020 recruiting class and the No. 40 recruit in Texas (behind Quentin Johnston and Jaxon Smith-Njigba). As a sophomore, he received his first Power 5 offer from Indiana. As a junior, Washington added offers from Kentucky, Penn State, Nebraska and Wisconsin. The summer before his senior season, he committed to head coach James Franklin and the Nittany Lions. His older sister (Ashton) worked for the XFL (2019), Illinois (2020), Texas Tech (2021) and is now the player personnel coordinator for the Chicago Bears. His father (Chris) played college football for Mississippi State and Air Force in the early 1990s. His cousin (Joshua Dobbs) was a fourth-round pick (No. 135 overall) in the 2017 NFL Draft out of Tennessee and has played six seasons of quarterback in the NFL. His cousin (Tyler Tolbert) played baseball at UAB and was picked in the 13th round (No. 379 overall) in the 2019 MLB Draft by the Kansas City Royals. His cousin (Stephen Dobbs) played baseball at UAB. Washington elected to opt out of the 2022 bowl game and skip his senior season of eligibility to enter the 2023 NFL Draft.

STRENGTHS: Compactly built with outstanding play strength ... fearlessly attacks routes and the catch point, even when it leads him into contact ... reliable finisher in a crowd ... exceptional body adjustments to pull in throws ... sharp footwork to create snap at the top of routes ... sits down in zones with quick pluck and transition skills ... looks like a running back after the catch, running low, tough and balanced to consistently get more yards than he should (averaged 6.3 YAC per reception) ... played at a high level vs. top competition (two of his three career 100-yard receiving games came against Ohio State) ... became the featured punt returner as a junior, averaging 6.1 yards per return (20/122/0) ... NFL scouts say he is “intrinsically driven” with a “competitive spirit.”

WEAKNESSES: Below-average height and length for the position ... long speed and route burst are average by NFL standards (no verified athletic testing on him due to his injury) ... productive underneath and in the intermediate part of the field, but averaged only 13.2 yards per reception with just four of his 2022 catches coming on deep passes (20-plus yards) ... his touchdown production declined each season, and he was an afterthought once Penn State reached the red zone ... mainly worked the slot and unproven on the outside ... missed the final three games of his junior season with a left ankle injury (November 2022), which also sidelined him for most of the draft process.

SUMMARY: A three-year starter at Penn State, Washington was an inside receiver in offensive coordinator Mike Yurcich’s RPO-based scheme, with 87.5 percent of his career snaps coming in the slot. After being the Robin to Jahan Dotson’s Batman his first two seasons, he became the team’s No. 1 receiver in 2022 and led the team in receiving (before his season-ending injury). Washington’s competitiveness is really impressive as both a pass catcher (physical to the football and sustains through traffic) and ball carrier (above-average play strength and balance after the catch). He saw a high dosage of bubbles and quick-hitting targets in the Penn State offense and isn’t a proven commodity as a downfield receiver (only 7.5 percent of his catches came on throws of 20-plus yards). Overall, Washington has subpar length and only average speed at the position, but his agile footwork, instinctive ball skills and competitive toughness help him create opportunities. He is best in the slot and projects as a Golden Tate-like target.

GRADE: 4th-5th Round

21. CHARLIE JONES | Purdue 5113 | 175 lbs. | 6SR Deerfield, Ill. (Deerfield) 10/29/1998 (age 24.49) #15

BACKGROUND: Charlie Jones, who is one of six children, grew up in the Chicago suburbs and played multiple sports throughout his childhood, primarily baseball and football. He attended Deerfield High School, where he was a three-year varsity starter. Primarily an offensive player, Jones moved to defensive back as a sophomore to get on the field. As a junior, he was a three-way starter at wide receiver, cornerback and return man and earned All-Conference honors. In Deerfield’s triple-option offense, Jones didn’t see a high volume of targets, but he averaged 21 yards per catch in 2015 and scored 12 touchdowns four different ways (four rushing, three receiving, three interception returns, two kick returns). As a senior, he again earned All-Conference honors and was named the 2016 team MVP despite missing time due to injuries.

A two-star recruit, Jones was the No. 442 wide receiver in the 2017 recruiting class and the No. 86 recruit in Illinois. He grew up with dreams of playing at Notre Dame but had a tough time getting noticed by bigger schools despite attending numerous football camps. His first offer was from Wyoming followed by North Dakota State, Northern Illinois, Bowling Green and several other MAC schools. Jones ultimately committed to Buffalo, where he redshirted in 2017 and played a reserve role in 2018 (he played with Minnesota Vikings wide receiver KJ Osborn there). Hoping to play closer to home, Jones entered the transfer portal and transferred to Iowa as a walk-on. After sitting out the 2019 season, Jones became the Hawkeyes’ punt returner in 2020 and was put on scholarship. He was named the Big Ten Special Teams Player of the Year in 2021 but finished fifth on the team in receptions. Looking for a bigger role on offense for his sixth and final college season, Jones entered the transfer portal again in May 2022 and quickly signed with Purdue, reuniting with childhood friend Aidan O’Connell (Jones and O’Connell played on the same baseball and football youth-level teams). His older brother (Matt Jr.) was diagnosed with cancer when he was in high school. Jones opted out of the 2022 bowl game and accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl.

STRENGTHS: Explosive driving off the line with the “see-ya” speed to stretch the field vertically ... sharp route runner, and stems defensive backs with one-step quickness ... shows a second-gear to climb over coverage when tracking downfield (four catches of 50-plus yards in 2022) ... strong hands and comfortably secures throws away from his body (only three drops on 154 targets in 2022) ... finds voids in the defense and sits down ... innately motivated and bet on himself multiple times until he found the right fit with Purdue ... puts his head down and works, and that preparation shows on game day ... extensive return experience in his career: averaged 8.1 yards per punt return (77/620/1) with a 54-yard return touchdown; averaged 21.3 yards per kick return (47/1,002/1) with a 100-yard return touchdown ... one of only two FBS receivers in 2022 to rank top five in the country in receptions, receiving yards and receiving touchdowns.

WEAKNESSES: Light, slight frame with questionable play strength ... can get bumped off balance in press and at the top of routes ... eyes and body lean will give indicators to coverage when working on the outside ... needs to better square his numbers to protect the catch point ... inconsistent finishing skills through high-trafficked areas ... shows tightness through hips and won’t consistently shake single tacklers in space ... limited YAC skills because of his inability to break tackles won’t threaten NFL defenses ... medical reports will be important because of past injuries with his hip; underwent shoulder surgery to repair a tear after the 2018 season.

SUMMARY: A one-year starter at Purdue, Jones joined the Boilermakers in June 2022 and immediately became the top target in former head coach Jeff Brohm’s spread scheme, lining up primarily on the outside. After years of attempting to break through on offense, Jones announced himself as a legitimate NFL prospect in his final season, leading the FBS in receptions (110) and setting a Purdue record for single-season receiving yards (1,361). With his one-step acceleration, Jones quickly eats cushion and shows supreme confidence in his focus and hands. Though he flashes a vertical burst, he isn’t a tackle breaker and lacks elusive qualities before and after the catch. Overall, Jones doesn’t have the twitch or play strength to easily uncover outside the numbers, but his crafty speed and ball skills will help find him a role in the NFL. He also has the skills to readily factor in the return game.

GRADE: 4th-5th Round

22. ANDREI IOSIVAS | Princeton 6031 | 205 lbs. | SSR Honolulu, Hawaii (Punahou) 10/15/1999 (age 23.53) #9

BACKGROUND: Andrei Iosivas (Yo-SHE-vas), who has a younger brother, grew up in Honolulu and developed his love for football at age 5 playing flag football. He is a first-generation U.S. citizen and attended Punahou School, a private school in Honolulu (the alma mater of Barack Obama), where he was a three-year varsity letterman at wide receiver. As a senior captain, Iosivas led Punahou to the 2017 playoffs and recorded 20 receptions for 424 yards and five touchdowns in seven games. He earned first team All-Conference honors and was named the MVP of the Honor Bowl (six catches for 189 yards and three touchdowns). Iosivas also lettered in basketball, but his most accomplished sport was track and field, where he was coached by his uncle (Tom Hintnaus), a world-champion and Olympic track athlete. Iosivas made the varsity track team as a freshman and set numerous school records. As a senior, he led Punahou to a state title and won five gold medals at the 2018 state championships: 100 meters (10.85), 200 meters (21.67, which is a state record), long jump (23 feet 3 inches), 4x100-meter relay (42.18) and 4x400-meter relay (3:19.74). Iosivas set personal bests in the 100 meters (10.71), 200 meters (21.66), 400 meters (50.06), and long jump (24-1).

Iosivas wasn’t nationally ranked by recruiting services and went overlooked because of limited high school production and geography. Prior to his senior year, he attended a Stanford recruiting camp and started to gain momentum as a recruit. Iosivas ultimately received only two offers and committed to Princeton over Dartmouth. He also joined the track team at Princeton where he earned first team All-Ivy honors three times and was a first team All-American in the heptathlon, which is an indoor seven-event competition consisting of the 60 meters, long jump, shot put, high jump, 60-meter hurdles, pole vault and 1,000 meters. Iosivas finished fourth at the 2022 NCAA Indoor Championships in the heptathlon, including an NCAA meet record in the 60 meters (6.71). Iosivas is the son of Mihai and Evelyn Iosivas. He accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl.

STRENGTHS: Accomplished track athlete with elite long speed that translates to the football field (his combine numbers didn’t disappoint) ... does a nice job using hesitation or double moves to help him win vertically ... tracks the ball well and frames his hands at the catch point ... shows terrific upper body control to high-point and make mid-air adjustments ... able to create late separation with subtle push-offs ... effective on swing passes or crossers designed to give him a runway ... flashes strength in his hands to make fingertip grabs away from his frame ... named a senior captain ... impressively managed a full academic workload in the Ivy League as well as full-time training for two different sports ... finished top 10 in the FCS in receiving yards per game (94.3) in 2022.

WEAKNESSES: More speedy than sudden ... average short-area quickness and struggles to consistently sink and separate at the top of routes ... inconsistent route pacing and underdeveloped working underneath ... below-average play strength ... hears footsteps over the middle, which disrupts his focus ... braces for contact instead of lowering his pads and looking to break through (NFL scout: “I’m just not sold that he is tough enough at our level.”) ... gets pushed around and as a perimeter blocker ... guilty of relying on his body to finish catches at times ... missed the 2022 NCAA outdoor track championships because of foot surgery (spring 2022) ... never faced FBS competition in college, with mixed results during Senior Bowl week.

SUMMARY: A two-year starter at Princeton, Iosivas was an outside wide receiver in offensive coordinator Mike Willis’ scheme, lining up primarily to the left of the formation. A multi-sport athlete in college, he had an impressive 2022 calendar year as an All-American and Ivy League MVP in track (set the league record in the heptathlon) followed by leading the Ivy League in receiving as a senior and earning All-American status on the football field. Iosivas is an impressive linear athlete with the leaping and adjustment skills to make catches over defensive backs. Training year-round for two sports his entire life, he has interesting upside once he can focus his body and mind as a football-only athlete. Overall, Iosivas has the long speed and body control worth developing, but he is currently limited and requires a patient coaching staff while he adds branches to his route tree and learns how to be a more complete receiver. Though he is a project for an NFL team, he can add a vertical element for an offense while he develops at the bottom of the wide receiver depth chart.

GRADE: 5th Round

23. ELIJAH HIGGINS | Stanford6030 | 235 lbs. | 4SRAustin, Texas (Bowie)10/27/2000 (age 22.50)#6

BACKGROUND: Elijah Higgins, who is the oldest of three children, was born in Florida but also grew up in Ohio and Texas as his family moved around because of his father’s job in the Air Force (aircraft maintenance and senior recruitment). Higgins played multiple sports growing up and was a standout baseball player, but his focus shifted to football in high school. At Bowie High School in southwest Austin, Higgins became a starting wide receiver on varsity as a sophomore and posted 40 receptions for 628 yards and nine touchdowns. As a junior, he earned first team All-District honors with 26 catches for 425 yards and six touchdowns. Higgins missed most his senior season because of a left wrist injury but still finished as a 2018 Under Armour All-American. He also lettered in basketball and track at Bowie, posting career bests in the long jump (21 feet 8 inches), triple jump (44-5.75) and shot put (45-5.75).

A four-star recruit, Higgins was the No. 14 wide receiver in the 2019 recruiting class and the No. 14 recruit in Texas. He was considered a consensus top-100 recruit, coming in at No. 85 nationally. Higgins’ offer sheet started to fill up after his sophomore season, receiving full rides from SMU, Rice, Houston and Baylor. Several other programs entered the picture after his junior season, and he cut down his final choice to Arkansas, Auburn, Florida, Ohio State, Ole Miss, Stanford and Texas. Prior to signing day, Higgins committed to Stanford over Florida and Texas, becoming the highest-ranked recruit in David Shaw’s 2019 class. His father (George) played football at South Florida in 1999. His mother (Karon) played college basketball at the junior college level and with the Puerto Rican national team. His younger brother (Kaleb) played with Elijah at Bowie before the family moved to Folsom, Calif., (near Elijah at Stanford) and transferred to Folsom High School. Kaleb was a three-star cornerback recruit and played the past two seasons at Cal. Elijah’s younger sister (Bailey) is a highly recruited volleyball player in the 2024 class. Higgins accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl.

PRO DAY	6025	239	32 3/8	10 1/2	78 1/4

STRENGTHS: Good-sized target with a moldable, yet NFL-ready body ... moves with fluid big man athleticism to sink and snap his routes ... has the speed to create mismatches vs. safeties or linebackers ... controls his body well to decelerate without taking exaggerated steps ... dissects coverage on the go to find spacing ... large hands and appears to track the ball well, even when required to twist his frame to make off-centered catches ... able to spear back-shoulder throws ... powerful strider with excellent balance with the ball in his hands ... showed better-than-expected YAC skills with the ability to make the first man miss ... competitive blocker to engage and stay sticky in the run game.

WEAKNESSES: Has some position confusion with traits of both a tight end and a receiver ... tracking focus can be too easily disrupted by physical coverage and looming hits ... catches the ball well but posted a dismal 6-to-10 touchdown-to-drop ratio in 40 career games in college ... only one touchdown in the red zone in 2022 ... needs to sharpen his routes instead of rounding his turns ... didn’t often create vertical separation on film ... fumbled twice as a senior and needs to take better care of the football ... missed most of his senior season in high school because of an offseason left wrist injury (August 2018)

SUMMARY: A two-year starter at Stanford, Higgins was the Y wide receiver in former offensive coordinator Tavita Pritchard’s pro-style scheme, operating primarily out of the slot. He was the most targeted player by Tanner McKee over the past two seasons and led the team in receiving as a junior and senior. Higgins has the start-stop quickness to open quickly underneath while also flashing the long speed to be a catch-and-go threat or work the deep area of the field. However, he needs to fine-tune his route running and play mistake-free football to see consistent playing time in the NFL. Overall, Higgins doesn’t always play up to his size and lacks the résumé of a playmaker, but he is an intriguing height/weight/speed athlete with the talent to be a matchup problem from different areas of the field. He can be a hybrid “move” tight end or “big” slot in the NFL, depending on scheme.

GRADE: 5th Round

24. TRE TUCKER | Cincinnati5085 | 182 lbs. | 4SRAkron, Ohio (CV Christian)3/8/2001 (age 22.14)#1

BACKGROUND: Tre’Monie “Tre” Tucker, who is the youngest of 12 children, grew up in the Akron area of northeast Ohio, where he was primarily a running back throughout youth league football. He also ran AAU track growing up and was nationally ranked with numerous top-five finishes as part of the West Akron team (teammates with future Cincinnati receiver teammate Tyler Scott). For junior high and high school, Tucker transferred from the Copley-Fairlawn School District to Cuyahoga Valley Christian Academy, a private school north of Akron. The coaches moved him to wide receiver and returner as a freshman, and he posted 215 receiving yards in his first season. After posting 1,074 all-purpose yards as a sophomore, Tucker had 672 rushing yards, 637 receiving yards and 26 total touchdowns. With the offense designed around him (wildcat, jet sweeps, etc.), Tucker had his most productive season as a senior captain with 1,389 rushing yards, 599 receiving yards and 31 total touchdowns, earning first team All-State and Conference Player of the Year honors. He was also a defensive back and combined for nine interceptions in his final two seasons. Tucker finished his career with 2,417 rushing yards, 1,922 receiving yards and a school-record 68 total touchdowns (44 rushing, 16 receiving, five kick returns, two punt returns and one interception return). After CVCA combined for only one win his first two years, the school totaled 15 wins over his junior and senior seasons, including a playoff appearance in 2018 (program’s first since 2009). Tucker was also an accomplished track athlete at CVCA with eight state championships (six outdoor, two indoor). As a senior, he won Division II state titles in the 100 meters (10.67), 200 meters (21.66) and long jump (23 feet 3.5 inches). During his high school career, he set personal bests in the 60 meters (6.80), 100 meters (10.41), 200 meters (21.32) and 400 meters (52.70).

A three-star recruit, Tucker was the No. 159 wide receiver in the 2019 recruiting class and the No. 59 recruit in Ohio. He received interest from several SEC and Big Ten programs to run track, but his passion was football. Although he didn’t receive any Power 5 offers, Tucker had several FBS options with offers from Ball State, Bowling Green, Eastern Michigan, Kent State, Liberty, Temple and Toledo. However, he connected with head coach Luke Fickell and signed with the Bearcats when they offered. Tucker opted out of the 2022 bowl game and accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl.

STRENGTHS: Sonic the Hedgehog-like speed ... sudden footwork and decelerates well to drive defenders off the top of his route ... bursts out of his hop-steps for quick target opportunities ... stays balanced in his route movements and is willing to work the middle of the field ... productive kick returner in college (24.9 average) with a pair of touchdown returns (67/1,670/2) ... almost 500 career special teams snaps and also made an impact on coverages ... has worked hard to add quality weight on his frame (was less than 100 pounds when he started high school and was 150 pounds when he enrolled at Cincinnati) ... senior captain who played in 50 games during his four years.

WEAKNESSES: Smallish frame with restricted arm length ... small hands that show on film when he attempts to stab the ball away from him ... contested catch wins were far and few between ... more drops (10) than touchdown catches (eight) in his career ... little jam experience and forced to cheat his routes at times to avoid contact ... slot only in college and worked in the short area of the field (only four of his 52 catches in 2022 came on throws 20-plus yards in the air) ... fumbled twice in his career on offense ... only five career punt returns in college.

SUMMARY: A one-year starter at Cincinnati, Tucker worked exclusively out of the slot in former offensive coordinator Gino Guidugli's spread RPO offense. His offensive snaps and production improved each season with career highs as a senior captain. A balanced athlete, Tucker displays the slick speed to control his throttle and uncover underneath. His lack of size and length forces quarterbacks to be pinpoint, and he must improve his route nuance to avoid crowded catch points. Overall, Tucker has the play speed and toughness over the middle to win as a gadget/slot, but his small catch radius is a potential roadblock that might limit his NFL role. His special teams impact as a returner and on coverages (15 special teams tackles in college) could be his saving grace to sticking on an NFL roster.

GRADE: 5th Round

25. DEMARIO DOUGLAS | Liberty 5082 | 179 lbs. | 4JR Jacksonville, Fla. (Mandarin) 12/8/2000 (age 22.39) #3

BACKGROUND: Demario Douglas grew up in the Jacksonville area with his grandmother and was introduced to football at age 4. He started his prep career at Pedro Menendez High School in St. Augustine and played wide receiver and cornerback on varsity as a freshman and sophomore. Douglas transferred to Mandarin High School in Jacksonville for his final two years. As a junior, he recorded 26 receptions for 270 yards and six touchdowns. Douglas saved the best for his senior season and led Mandarin to an 11-4 record and the 2018 state championship, setting a title game record with four touchdown catches. He finished his senior year with 72 receptions for 1,382 yards (19.2 average) and 16 touchdowns. He also had three special teams touchdowns (two punt returns, one kick return) and eight interceptions (201 interception return yards, including one pick-six). Douglas also lettered in track at Mandarin and set personal bests in the high jump (5 feet 9 inches) and long jump (20-1.25).

Douglas was a late bloomer and went overlooked by Power 5 programs with his breakout season not coming until his senior year at Mandarin. He received his first offer as a sophomore (FCS-level Gardner-Webb) and added his first few FBS offers as a junior, including FAU and UAB. Liberty entered the picture during his senior year and he committed as an “athlete.” Douglas was part of the same recruiting class as cornerback Kei’Trel Clark and Auburn transfer quarterback Malik Willis. He graduated with his sports management degree (December 2022). Douglas elected to skip his senior year of eligibility and enter the 2023 NFL Draft. He accepted his invitation to the 2023 East-West Shrine Bowl.

PRO DAY	5083	180	30	9 1/8	72 1/8	-	-	-	-	-	4.44	7.05	12 (stood on Combine runs and jumps)

STRENGTHS: Plays with controlled burst and fluidity to create pockets of separation ... uses agile footwork and body rhythm for quick stems ... threatens the seam with his explosive acceleration ... catches the ball cleanly in space or from compromised positions ... nifty after the catch to glide away from defenders but also shows the toughness to drop his pads into contact ... productive punt returner with a 7.1 average and two career touchdown returns (54/383/2) ... added kick return duties in 2022, averaging 20.8 yards per return (14/291/0) ... described by an NFL scout as a “charismatic kid” who wants to be great ... combined for 14 catches for 269 yards (19.2 average) and three touchdowns against Arkansas and Wake Forest in 2022.

WEAKNESSES: Small-framed target with below-average length, build and growth potential ... has the athletic lower body to beat the jam but didn't face a ton of press in college ... doesn't lack for toughness, although long, physical defenders will knock him off his route path ... relies more on his elusive feet than refinement in his route running ... most of his drops came on throws of 20-plus yards downfield where his tracking let him down ... had multiple muffed punts each of the past three seasons (six total in his career) ... modest touchdown catch totals ... worked almost exclusively out of the slot in college.

SUMMARY: A two-year starter at Liberty, Douglas was the slot receiver in former head coach Hugh Freeze's zone-read offense. There was no doubt who was the go-to weapon in the Flames' offense in 2022 as no other receiver had more than 25 catches compared to Douglas' 79 grabs. A dynamic catch-and-go athlete, Douglas prioritizes the catch before showing off his competitive instincts and speed. He posted impressive testing numbers at the combine that match what he put on tape in college. Overall, Douglas' role at the next level will be limited by his lack of size, length and power, but his explosive urgency as a receiver and returner increases his chances of finding an NFL home.

GRADE: 5th-6th Round

26. RAKIM JARRETT | Maryland 5117 | 192 lbs. | 3JR Palmer Park, Md. (St. John's) 1/24/2001 (age 22.26) #1

BACKGROUND: Rakim (ROCK-kim) Jarrett grew up playing football and attended Washington Jesuit Academy Middle School. He chose to enroll at St. John's College High School, a Catholic school in Washington D.C., where he played wide receiver and defensive back on varsity as a freshman. After earning first team All-Conference honors as a sophomore, he recorded 763 receiving yards and 11 touchdowns as a junior in 2018. As a senior, Jarrett finished with 60 receptions for 950 yards and seven touchdowns and cleaned up on the awards circuit in 2019, including Washington D.C. Gatorade Player of the Year, All-Met Offensive Player of the Year and Under Armour All-American.

A five-star recruit, Jarrett was the No. 4 wide receiver in the 2020 recruiting class and the No. 1 recruit in Washington D.C. (ahead of Oklahoma tackle Anton Harrison and Penn State tackle Olu Fashanu). He started collecting FBS scholarship offers after his freshman season, and before his junior year he held scholarship offers from Alabama, Florida, Michigan, Ohio State, Penn State, Tennessee and several others. After visiting LSU in April 2019, Jarrett committed to Ed Orgeron but continued to take visits. He stayed committed to the Tigers up until the early signing day, when he surprised the recruiting world, including Terrapins head coach Mike Locksley, by flipping to nearby Maryland. Jarrett grew up rooting for the Terps and consulted with former Maryland and current Buffalo Bills' receiver Stefon Diggs and Denver Broncos receiver Jerry Jeudy, who played in Locksley's offense at Alabama. Jarrett was the highest-ranked recruit in Maryland's 2020 recruiting class and was the second-highest receiver to ever sign with the program (behind Diggs). He is on track to graduate this spring with his degree in criminology. Jarrett elected to skip the 2022 bowl game and his senior season to enter the 2023 NFL Draft.

STRENGTHS: One-step burst and speed looks different than most other athletes on the field ... saw a high volume of screens and quick-hitters to utilize his catch-and-go potential ... has the vertical speed to threaten defenses ... effective ball tracker (shallow and deep) to quickly snare throws away from his numbers ... rocked-up build and isn't allergic to the weight room ... courageous over the middle of the field and secures grabs through violent contact ... whether he is running routes or blocking his tail off, he gives the same total effort ... has kick return experience, averaging 17.7 yards per return (10/177/0) ... coaches say he wants to be great and is willing to put in the work.

WEAKNESSES: Average height/length ... must adopt a more disciplined approach to his route running to set up defenders and create his own separation ... needs to rely more on his pacing and tempo rather than raw speed to beat coverage ... shows the quickness to beat press, but his mechanics lack rhythm and lead to wasted movements ... average wiggle after the catch and needs an open lane to show off his speed ... eyes tend to wander before securing, leading to drops (his highest drop rate came in 2022) ... hasn't proven himself reliable as a contested catch winner ... disappointing production in his final season (only 45 percent of his catches in 2022 resulted in a first down or touchdown) ... missed the regular season finale as a junior with a hyperextended knee (November 2022).

SUMMARY: A three-year starter at Maryland, Jarrett was the H receiver in head coach Mike Locksley's spread offense, lining up almost exclusively in the slot. A DMV native, he could have played his college ball anywhere in the country but chose to stay home and follow in the footsteps of Stefon Diggs, whom he idolized growing up (also wore No. 1 like Diggs and former Terrapin D.J. Moore). Jarrett is a well-built athlete with one-step acceleration in his routes and when attacking upfield after the catch. The athletic tools are present, but his route tree lacks sophistication (relies too much on scheme to get open), and he hasn't proven himself as a dependable pass catcher with smaller windows. Overall, Jarrett has intriguing upside with his speed, burst and the natural talent with the ball in his hands, but his game currently feels incomplete, which will make it tough for him to distinguish himself vs. already-established NFL receivers. He is a developmental prospect who has yet to play his best football, and hopefully an NFL coaching staff is willing to be patient with him.

GRADE: 5th-6th Round

27. GRANT DUBOSE | Charlotte 6023 | 201 lbs. | 4SR Montgomery, Ala. (Park Crossing) 6/20/2001 (age 21.85) #14

BACKGROUND: Grant DuBose (Dew-BOZE), who is one of four children, grew up in Montgomery and played multiple sports throughout his childhood. DuBose enrolled at Park Crossing High School, where he was a four-year varsity wide receiver and caught passes from former Louisville quarterback Malik Cunningham as an underclassman (also teammates with Cincinnati Bengals cornerback Cam Taylor-Britt). As a junior, he helped Park Crossing to a 10-win season and the 2017 regional title, posting 21 catches for 389 yards and four touchdowns. DuBose earned first team All-Conference as a senior captain with a team-high 42 catches for 834 yards and five touchdowns, adding a passing touchdown and a punt return score. DuBose also lettered in baseball at Park Crossing.

DuBose wasn't ranked by online recruiting services and struggled to get looks from college programs. After three years on varsity, he didn't have any scholarship offers. However, DuBose had his most productive season as a senior, which helped get more eyes on his tape. Two weeks before 2019 signing day, he received an offer from Division II Miles College and signed with the program. After coming off the bench as a true freshman in 2019, DuBose elected to transfer after Miles College cancelled the 2020 season because of COVID. He returned to Montgomery and worked three part-time jobs, including Wal-Mart, as he looked for a new opportunity. After sitting out the 2020 season, DuBose had the opportunity to try out at Charlotte on the recommendation of his childhood friend James Foster, who was a backup quarterback at Charlotte after transferring from Texas A&M. After impressing the coaches during the tryout, DuBose joined the Charlotte program prior to the 2021 season. His older brother (Dean Jr.) played college baseball at Tuskegee. After the 2022 season, DuBose initially entered the transfer portal with plans to play college football somewhere else in 2023. But he said he woke up one morning and the "light bulb came on" to enter the 2023 NFL Draft. He accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl.

PRO DAY	6026	200	31 7/8	9 1/2	77 7/8	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	(stood on Combine testing)

STRENGTHS: Good-sized athlete with functional length ... disguises his route breaks before making strong angle cuts off his plant foot ... fluid mover as a route runner and at the catch point ... above-average body control to make smooth adjustments on the football ... battles back against physical coverage and exerts ownership over the catch point ... has some double catches but frames the ball naturally, making drops infrequent ... uses his contact balance and toughness to battle for extra yardage after the catch ... added punt return duties in 2022, averaging 8.4 yards per return (9/76/0) ... also collected tackles on punt coverage ... set the single-season school record for touchdown catches (nine) in 2022.

WEAKNESSES: Timed speed and play speed are both average at best ... doesn't have the route acceleration to easily get on top of coverage ... wasn't an explosive play creator in college (only one catch of more than 30 yards in 2022) ... needs to adopt more efficient techniques to elude the jam ... did a nice job with a basic route tree but will need to add branches in the NFL ... crowded catch points resulted in too many interceptions when he was targeted ... RAC skills were solid in college but will be non-threatening to NFL defenses ... minimal experience working out of the slot.

SUMMARY: A two-year starter at Charlotte, DuBose was a perimeter receiver in former offensive coordinator Mark Carney's balanced scheme. After his career was in limbo during the pandemic, he found a home in Charlotte and led the 49ers in receiving both of his seasons with the program (only the fourth player in school history to surpass 1,500 career receiving yards). DuBose owns a good-sized frame and plays even bigger with his natural ball skills and mid-air adjustments, regardless of the coverage. But even with hesitation routes or double moves, he will struggle to create early or vertical spacing against NFL-level cornerbacks. Overall, DuBose plays with the body fluidity and catch point talent that increase his chances of finding a permanent home in the NFL, although he has work to do to be considered more than just a jump-ball weapon or zone beater. He has rotational value as an NFL rookie.

28. PUKA NACUA | BYU 6015 | 201 lbs. | 4SR Provo, Utah (Orem) 5/29/2001 (age 21.91) #12

BACKGROUND: Makea "Puka" (Poo-kuh) Nacua (Nah-koo-uh), who is one of six children, was born and raised in Las Vegas and started playing pee wee football at age 5. When Puka was in seventh grade in 2012, his father (Lionel) passed away at age 45 after a lifelong battle with diabetes. Nacua's mother (Penina) moved the family to Provo, Utah, in 2013 to be closer to family. Nacua attended Orem High School, where he saw immediate varsity reps as a freshman wide receiver, posting 23 catches for 265 yards and two scores. As a sophomore, he registered 48 receptions for 977 yards and five touchdowns, earning honorable mention All-State honors. As a junior, Nacua led Orem to a 12-2 record and the 4A state championship, earning first team All-State honors with 87 catches for 1,692 yards and 24 touchdowns. As a senior, he set single-season school records with 103 catches for 2,336 yards and 26 touchdowns. Nacua led Orem to back-to-back 4A state titles, and he cleaned up on the award circuit, including the 2018 Utah Gatorade Player of the Year, Utah's Mr. Football and first team All-American. He finished his career with the Utah high school records for receptions (261), receiving yards (5,270) and receiving touchdowns (57). Nacua lettered in basketball and earned second team All-State honors as a junior. He also lettered in track and broke the 46-year-old state record in the long jump (23 feet 10.25 inches) to win the 4A state championship as a senior. Nacua finished his career with personal bests in the 100 meters (11.01) and 200 meters (22.38).

A four-star recruit, Nacua was the No. 22 wide receiver in the 2019 recruiting class and the No. 1 recruit in Utah. With family ties at BYU and Utah, he received offers from both schools after his freshman year of high school. Nacua had his pick of just about any West Coast school and initially committed to USC the summer before his senior year. However, he kept his recruitment open and officially flipped to Washington on signing day, mostly because of his relationship with wide receiver coach Junior Adams (who helped develop current Rams receiver Cooper Kupp at Eastern Washington). After two seasons with the Huskies, Nacua decided to transfer to BYU in 2021 to be closer to his family, specifically his maternal grandmother, who had cancer. His older brother (Kai) played safety at BYU (2013-16) and went unselected in the 2017 NFL Draft but has played for six NFL teams over the past six seasons, most recently with the New York Jets in 2022. His older brother (Isaiah) was a defensive lineman at BYU (2014). His older brother (Samson) walked on and played five years as a wide receiver at Utah (2016-20) before transferring to BYU for his final season in 2021 (teammates with Puka). Nacua accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl but suffered a concussion during the first practice and missed the rest of the week.

STRENGTHS: Smooth athlete with quiet, controlled upfield strides ... saw a high volume of screens and quick-throws to take advantage of his vision and toughness (five rushing touchdowns in 2022) ... outstanding body control and feel when the ball is in the air, allowing him to adjust/high-point ... catch timing and focus help him make grabs over defenders ... doesn't shrink from route contact and maintains his focus to secure contested catches (see 2022 Boise State tape) ... displays crafty footwork mid-pattern to leverage defenders out of position or expose space in zone ... voted a senior captain and has the pedigree of a competitor (NFL scout: "Our coaches are going to love this guy.") ... benefits from the "older brother" theory with three older brothers who played high-level college football.

WEAKNESSES: More quick than sudden and doesn't have the top-end speed that scares defenses ... the burst out of his breaks is average ... occasionally false steps and exposes his chest vs. press coverage ... can be baited into extra contact downfield ... marginal experience on special teams coverages ... NFL scouts have voiced concern about his durability as he battled numerous minor issues in his career ... suffered a sprained right ankle in the 2022 season opener (September 2022) and missed the following two games; he also missed time after suffering a hamstring injury (September 2022); a broken foot in practice (October 2019) ended his freshman season and required surgery; pulled out of the Senior Bowl after one practice because of a concussion (January 2023); unable to test at the combine because of a right toe injury (March 2023).

SUMMARY: A two-year starter at BYU, Nacua was an inside and outside receiver in offensive coordinator Aaron Roderick's balanced scheme. A record-setting athlete in high school, he spent two seasons at Washington before transferring to Provo, where he led the Cougars in receiving as a junior and senior despite battling multiple injuries. With his body control and focus, Nacua can win one-on-one situations on the outside or provide an underneath target as a zone-beater. Though there aren't questions about his ball skills, he might lack the pure speed that teams covet outside the numbers and the suddenness desired in the slot. Overall, Nacua needs to prove he can stay healthy and on the field at the next level, but he is smart, tough and athletic with the locked-in concentration that gives him a fighting chance to earn an NFL roster spot.

GRADE: 6th Round

29. MICHAEL JEFFERSON | Louisiana 6036 | 199 lbs. | 5SR Mobile, Ala. (Murphy) 12/21/1999 (age 23.35) #8

BACKGROUND: Michael "MJ" Jefferson II grew up in Mobile and started playing football in elementary school. At age 11, he won a youth championship trophy as a member of the Cottage Hill Steelers. His father (Michael Sr.) was diagnosed with acute myelogenous leukemia in 2010 and had to have his large intestine removed because of an infection in his colon called clostridium difficile colitis. He was diagnosed with a different strand of leukemia in 2018 and received a bone marrow transplant from his brother. He is now cancer free. The younger Jefferson, who often took care of his father during his health battles, attended Murphy High School, where he was a four-year varsity letterman at wide receiver while also seeing time at cornerback. As a junior he helped Murphy to seven wins and a spot in the 2016 7A state playoffs, posting 17 receptions for 340 yards and four touchdowns. Jefferson had his most productive season as a senior with 35 catches for 628 yards and 10 touchdowns, averaging 17.9 yards per catch. He also lettered in basketball at Murphy.

Jefferson wasn't ranked by online recruiting services and was overlooked by most Division I programs because of his limited varsity résumé. He received one scholarship offer from FCS-level Alabama State and committed to the Hornets. With everything going on at home with his father's illness and other issues (his car was stolen on campus), Jefferson was ready for a change of scenery after three years with Alabama State. He entered the transfer portal and had a chance to return home at South Alabama but wanted to avoid any distractions and decided to sign with Louisiana prior to the 2021 season. Jefferson took advantage of the extra year of eligibility and returned to the program in 2022 for a fifth college season. He graduated with his degree (December 2022). Jefferson accepted his invitation to the 2023 East-West Shrine Bowl.

PRO DAY	6035	202	32 5/8	9 3/4	79 3/8	-	-	-	-	-	4.43	6.94	- (stood on Combine testing)

STRENGTHS: Tall, limber athlete ... builds up his speed with long strides to eat up cushion and put corners on their heels ... productive vertical threat, getting behind coverage with his straight-line speed ... attacks defenders at the top of the stem, allowing him to work to open space ... solid ball tracking and frames his hands well to attack (sometimes at the highest point, other times not) ... strong leaper to adjust mid-air and win on jump-ball opportunities ... body control allows him to sidestep the first defender for extra yardage ... rigorous and fundamentally sound perimeter blocker ... was forced to grow up at an early age because of his father's cancer battles ... became a gunner on punt coverages as a super senior in 2022 and totaled three tackles.

WEAKNESSES: Very lean-muscled and lacks ideal bulk on his body ... average play strength will be fiercely challenged by NFL defenders ... not a true burner and won't simply out-race NFL coverage ... can be mugged by press corners, delaying his routes ... needs to use better sink in and out of breaks to efficiently unfurl his long legs ... inconsistent route awareness and can be late making adjustments ... needs to better use his body positioning, especially at the first down sticks and in the red zone ... fumbled twice in 2022.

SUMMARY: A two-year starter at Louisiana, Jefferson was an outside wide receiver in offensive coordinator Tim Leger's balanced scheme. After three years at Alabama State, he continued to mature on the field for the Ragin' Cajuns and was one of the team's go-to weapons (averaged one touchdown every 5.4 receptions over his five college seasons). Jefferson has better on-field speed (21.63 mph) than what his 40-yard dash would indicate, using his long, swift strides to win on vertical tracks. His size and leaping skills help him attack the catch point, but he needs to be more of a presence in the red zone (only one of his 11 touchdowns at Louisiana was a red-zone catch). Overall, Jefferson is a role-specific pass catcher, but he has the acceleration, body control and vertical tracking skills to compete for a fourth or fifth receiver spot on an NFL depth chart. His skills as a gunner will boost his chances of staying off the cut list.

GRADE: 6th Round

30. C.J. JOHNSON | East Carolina 6014 | 224 lbs. | 4SR Greenville, N.C. (D.H. Conley) 11/4/2000 (age 22.48) #5

BACKGROUND: William “C.J.” Johnson Jr. is a Greenville native who started playing football in middle school, initially as a quarterback. He attended D.H. Conley High School and played both ways all four seasons for the varsity squad, catching passes from his future East Carolina quarterback Holton Ahlers. Johnson had his breakout season as a sophomore with 88 receptions for 1,755 yards and 21 touchdowns. As a junior, he posted 68 catches for 1,547 yards and 31 touchdowns, which was the second-highest touchdown total in state history. As a senior captain, Johnson, who also handled the punting duties, earned All-State honors for the second straight year with 77 catches for 1,701 yards and 23 touchdowns. He added 14 rushing touchdowns, two passing touchdowns and picked off two passes. He finished his prep career with 239 catches for 5,198 receiving yards and 98 total touchdowns (79 receiving, 17 rushing, one fumble return, one interception return). Johnson was also a three-year letterman in basketball at D.H. Conley.

A three-star recruit, Johnson was the No. 175 wide receiver in the 2019 recruiting class and the No. 60 recruit in North Carolina. His remarkable production as a sophomore put him on the recruiting radar early. Johnson picked up several local ACC offers, including from Duke, NC State, North Carolina and Virginia Tech. However, he grew up in the shadow of East Carolina’s campus watching wide receivers like Dwayne Harris and Justin Hardy catch passes on their way to NFL careers. Johnson passed on the ACC to stay home and sign with East Carolina, joining Ahlers, who signed with the Pirates the previous year. Johnson spent the 2022 offseason away from the team serving a suspension. He accepted his invitation to the 2023 NFLPA Collegiate Bowl.

STRENGTHS: Fills out his uniform well with proportionate thickness ... large, accepting hands and drop rate improved exponentially his last two seasons compared to his first two ... strong through contact with the focus to win 50-50 balls ... stays controlled off the line to elude press and get rolling ... settles his feet in open space versus zone ... catches the ball cleanly on in-breakers without breaking stride ... highly competitive with the ball in his hands with powerful steps to run through tackles attempts ... has the upper-body strength to grip and control defenders as a blocker ... holds the East Carolina single-game receiving record (283 yards versus Cincinnati in 2019) ... played his best football as a senior.

WEAKNESSES: His speed is more build-up than immediate ... labors mid-route and struggles making sharp start/stop movements ... displays stiffness in his lower body, which hurts his ability to separate from man coverage ... doesn’t protect the ball as he barrels through contact (four fumbles the last three seasons) ... maturity was a question mark over his time at East Carolina, including an indefinite suspension from the team (February 2022) following an off-field incident (head coach Mike Houston: “C.J. is not living up to the standards we have set for our football program.”); Johnson was reinstated in July 2022 ... battled several minor injuries as a senior (right pinky, right wrist) ... special-teams value will be limited.

SUMMARY: A four-year starter at East Carolina, Johnson played the “H” wide receiver role in offensive coordinator Donnie Kirkpatrick’s scheme, lining up primarily in the slot. Despite a few hiccups during his tenure with the Pirates, he leaves as one of only five players in school history to surpass 2,800 career receiving yards. Johnson is a balanced, well-put-together athlete who smoothly extends to snag while staying on his route path. He builds up his speed with strong strides, but his lack of burst off the line and out of breaks will make it tough for him to separate from coverage. Overall, Johnson owns an NFL body with high-quality play strength and ball skills, but his ordinary athleticism might limit the ways to get him the football. He projects best as a slot receiver who can make a living between the numbers.

31. JALEN MORENO-CROPPER | Fresno State 5111 | 172 lbs. | 4SR Parlier, Calif. (Buchanan) 5/3/2001 (age 21.98) #5

BACKGROUND: Jalen Moreno-Cropper, who is the oldest of five children, was born and raised in Parlier (20 miles southeast of Fresno) and was a standout basketball and football player throughout his childhood. He originally attended Sanger High School, where he was a three-year varsity letterman in both basketball and football. As a sophomore, Moreno-Cropper played quarterback, wide receiver and defensive back and led Sanger to a 13-1 record and 2016 sectional championship (only loss came in the state championship game to Serra). After his junior season, he transferred to Clovis Buchanan High School for his final season and played primarily at wide receiver and defensive back. Moreno-Cropper posted 22 receptions for 565 yards (25.7 average) and three touchdowns as a senior, adding four rushing touchdowns and two interceptions on defense.

A three-star recruit, Moreno-Cropper was the No. 22 athlete in the 2019 recruiting class and the No. 51 recruit in the state of California. Between the end of his junior season through his senior year, he added several notable Pac-12 (Oregon, Oregon State, UCLA) and Big Ten offers (Indiana). He narrowed his final choice to Cal, Fresno State, Nebraska and Utah with most expecting him to sign with the Utes. However, Moreno-Cropper surprised everyone when he committed (as a wide receiver) to his hometown Fresno State. He was the highest-ranked recruit in the Bulldogs’ 2019 recruiting class and one of the highest-ranked recruits to ever sign with the program. Prior to his senior season at Fresno State, Jalen added the “Moreno” to his last name to honor his late grandfather, who passed away from COVID in 2020 (Moreno-Cropper: “He was one of the biggest influences in my life ... I will continue to live through his name.”). He didn’t legally change his name. Moreno-Cropper accepted his invitation to the 2023 East-West Shrine Bowl.

PRO DAY	5111	169	30	8 1/2	72 7/8	-	-	-	32	-	4.27	7.06	13 (stood on Combine runs and broad)

STRENGTHS: Smooth, agile-footed athlete ... closes cushion quickly and uses route pacing to unlock pockets of separation ... transitions his weight well to eliminate wasted motion out of his breaks ... opens his frame to make himself available to the quarterback ... quick hands, and ball-tracking adjustments appear to come naturally to him ... slippery with the ball in his hands to secure and skirt defenders after the catch (recorded five catches of 45-plus yards in 2022, including two 65-plus-yard touchdowns) ... caught a pass in 37 consecutive games (second-longest streak in school history) ... was a slot only until his senior season, when he added outside responsibilities to his résumé.

WEAKNESSES: Smallish target with a slender body type and marginal bulk ... his catch radius isn't anything to boast of ... can be knocked off schedule vs. a corner's jam and early contact ... high-trafficked areas of the field swallow him up, and his below-average play strength is evident on 50-50 balls ... only one red zone touchdown in 2022 ... guilty of leaning into his routes and must fine-tune his deceptive ways ... limited special teams résumé aside from some kick return duties as an underclassman (19.8 return average).

SUMMARY: A four-year starter at Fresno State, Moreno-Cropper lined up as an X receiver as a senior in head coach Jeff Tedford's spread scheme after working almost exclusively out of the slot as an underclassman. He leaves college as one of the most productive players to come out of Fresno State, finishing No. 5 in school history in receptions (220) and accounting for 28 total touchdowns (21 receiving, five rushing, two passing). Moreno-Cropper pairs his acceleration and break quickness to create catch-and-go opportunities and potential explosive plays. Although he struggles with contested windows, his quick ball skills make him effective in the deep and short (jets, screens, etc.) parts of the field. Overall, Moreno-Cropper has an undersized frame and struggles to combat contact mid-route and at the catch point, but there is no doubting his play speed, tempo and understanding of how to be friendly to the quarterback. He has the play style to become a rotational slot as an NFL rookie.

32. JALEN WAYNE | South Alabama 6015 | 210 lbs. | 6SR Spanish Fort, Ala. (Spanish Fort) 5/13/1999 (age 23.96) #0

BACKGROUND: Jalen Wayne was born in Baton Rouge and spent time in Florida before his family moved to Alabama when he was young. He played multiple sports growing up, including pee wee football, but always thought of himself as a basketball player first and foremost. He also played football in middle school but suffered a knee injury in eighth grade and decided to focus only on basketball. Wayne originally attended Faith Academy in Mobile, Ala., where he lettered in basketball four times (from eighth grade to his junior season) and helped lead the program to the 5A championship game as a junior point guard. After basketball his junior year, he wasn't getting highly recruited and decided to return to football. He joined the Faith Academy football team that spring and then transferred to Spanish Fort High School in the summer prior to this senior season (became teammates with several future FBS players like QB/TE Trae Berry and CB Kris Abrams-Draine). Wayne helped Spanish Fort to a 10-win season and 2017 Regional Championship with 28 receptions for 469 yards and three touchdowns, adding 279 rushing yards and one rushing touchdown to earn honorable mention All-Region honors. He also joined the basketball team as a senior, helping Spanish Fort to the semifinals of the 6A state tournament.

A two-star recruit, Wayne was the No. 438 wide receiver in the 2017 recruiting class and the No. 117 recruit in Alabama. With only his senior year worth of film on the football field, he understandably went overlooked as a recruit, but South Alabama and UAB offered late in the process. Wayne committed to nearby South Alabama (25 miles from Spanish Fort) a few weeks before signing day. He signed as a wide receiver but briefly played on defense as a safety before returning to offense. Wayne took advantage of the extra year of eligibility granted by the NCAA because of the pandemic and returned to South Alabama for his sixth season in 2022. His second cousin (Reggie), who Wayne considers his uncle, played wide receiver at Miami (1997-2000) and was picked in the first round (No. 30 overall) of the 2001 NFL Draft by the Indianapolis Colts. Reggie Wayne, who was recently hired as the wide receiver coach for the Colts, was a six-time Pro Bowler in his 14 seasons with the Colts, setting multiple franchise records including games played (211) and postseason catches (93). Jalen Wayne graduated with his bachelor's degree. He accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl.

PRO DAY	6020	216	32 1/4	9 3/8	79 1/4	-	-	-	-	-	4.51	7.43	- (stood on Combine drills)

STRENGTHS: Good-sized athlete with a trim frame ... competes with controlled urgency in his release and routes ... downfield glider to stack and get over top cornerbacks ... consistently works towards the sticks (73.7 percent of his catches in 2022 resulted in a first down or touchdown) ... always working to get open and plays with courage in crowded spaces ... tape shows a large catch radius, and he times his leaps well to go get the football ... plays with equal parts intelligence and aggressiveness (the coaches moved him to safety his first year on campus) ... enjoys blocking ... attentive worker and "coach-pleaser" behind the scenes, according to NFL scouts ... became the first player in school history to reach nine touchdowns in a single season.

WEAKNESSES: Builds up his speed but will struggle to out-pace NFL corners ... guilty of lingering steps at the break point and needs to be more efficient with his stemwork ... hand strength is average ... doesn't properly use his body position to create ownership of the catch point (also needs to do a better job becoming the defender so either he catches it or no one does) ... not shy pushing off defenders, which will be tougher to mask at the next level ... runs with a head of steam as a ball carrier but wasn't a tackle breaker on his 2022 tape ... meager special teams snaps the past four seasons.

SUMMARY: A three-year starter at South Alabama, Wayne was the X receiver in offensive coordinator Major Applewhite's scheme. After playing behind Kawann Baker (drafted in 2021) and Jalen Tolbert (drafted in 2022) on the depth chart, his production increased each season, and he leaves the program ranked top three all-time in career catches and receiving yards. A basketball-focused athlete most of his life, Wayne is a smooth athlete with the functional speed and go-and-get-it skills that emulate his uncle (Reggie Wayne). However, he lacks suddenness in and out of his breaks, and his success rate at the catch point was only average in college. Overall, Wayne has the size, football character and competitive juices that will appeal to NFL teams, but he might struggle finding steady separation versus NFL-level coverage. He is a potential bottom-of-the-roster wideout, especially if he can prove himself on special teams.

GRADE: 6th-7th Round

33. DAVID DURDEN | West Florida 6014 | 204 lbs. | 6SR Midville, Ga. (Emanuel County) 12/26/1998 (age 24.34) #17

BACKGROUND: John David Durden II, who is one of four children, was a multi-sport athlete growing up in east Georgia. His mother (Jeana) is a teacher and father (John), who played baseball at Air Force, is a minister. Durden attended Emanuel County Institute and kicked extra points as a freshman. A wide receiver on offense and safety on defense, he posted 13 receptions for 327 yards and five touchdowns as a sophomore, adding 42 tackles and four interceptions (one returned for a touchdown). As a senior, Durden finished with 45 receptions for 782 yards and 14 touchdowns to earn All-Region honors. He also accounted for three rushing scores and two special teams touchdowns (one punt return, one kick return). He also lettered in basketball and was a standout baseball player. He led Emanuel County to a state championship in 2015 and was named the 2017 Region Player of the Year with eight home runs.

A two-star recruit, Durden was the No. 301 wide receiver in the 2017 recruiting class and the No. 235 recruit in Georgia. Playing at a small-town high school program, he went mostly overlooked as a recruit until FCS-level Mercer scouted him and reached out with a scholarship offer. Durden committed to play football but backtracked after the Boston Red Sox selected him in the 20th round (No. 611 overall) of the 2017 MLB Draft. He spent the 2017 season at the rookie ball level and hit .220 (20-for-91) with one double and nine RBI in 30 games. With his heart still in football, Durden left the Red Sox and joined Mercer for the 2018 season. After two seasons at Mercer, he transferred to Division II West Florida and enrolled in the summer of 2020. Durden received an invitation to the 2023 East-West Shrine Bowl but was unable to participate due to a left wrist injury.

STRENGTHS: Good-sized athlete with functional strength to beat the jam ... explosive timed speed and play speed ... displays the acceleration to consistently gain vertical separation against Division II corners ... graceful in mid-air with natural ball-tracking skills ... takes sharp angles out of his breaks ... mixes his gears as a route runner and not shy attacking the middle of the field ... can turn short gains into big plays, displaying outstanding vision, competitive toughness and contact balance with the ball in his hands ... productive on special teams as a returner and gunner (10 special teams tackles) ... averaged 17.7 yards per punt return in 2022, including a 64-yard touchdown (14/248/1) ... averaged 24.6 yards per kick return (43/1,058/1) ... receiving production increased each season in college ... NFL scouts say his pro day workout (in 33-degree weather) was "outstanding."

WEAKNESSES: Doesn't have a body of work against top-tier competition ... routes can be overly deliberate at times, drawing sticky coverage ... shorter arms and might struggle to fight through the physical coverage of longer corners ... inconsistent high-pointer and too content using his body/wrists to finish ... contested windows disrupt his focus ... guilty of bracing himself for contact at the catch point, making grabs tougher than they need to be ... patient with the ball in his hands to follow his blocks but will need to make quicker decisions vs. NFL pursuit ... will turn 25 during his NFL rookie season ... suffered a left wrist injury that required postseason surgery (December 2022).

SUMMARY: A two-year starter at West Florida, Durden was an outside receiver in the Argos' balanced offense. After a short-lived pro baseball career, he returned to the football field was immediately productive, initially at Mercer and then West Florida where his 23 receiving touchdowns matched the program record. An impressive athlete for his size, Durden has a smooth accelerator before and after the catch and displays natural pass-catching skills thanks to his steady hand-eye coordination (averaged 19.7 yards per catch in his career). He shifts his gears well as a route runner but could use more polish to consistently create separation out of his stem turns. Overall, Durden will need to prove he can match up vs. NFL speed and strength, but he has the athletic profile and instincts (as a receiver and ball carrier) to earn an NFL roster spot in camp. His value on special teams (as a return man and gunner) could give the edge.

GRADE: 6th-7th Round

34. JUSTIN SHORTER | Florida 6042 | 229 lbs. | 5SR Monmouth Junction, N.J. (South Brunswick) 4/17/2000 (age 23.03) #4

BACKGROUND: Justin Shorter, who is the youngest of two boys, was born in Princeton, N.J., and grew up on the baseball diamond, where he was a promising shortstop and outfielder. He was introduced to football in the eighth grade and fell in love with the sport, although he didn't play much that year because of injury. Shorter attended South Brunswick High School, where he was a three-year starter as a cornerback and wide receiver in the team's triple-option offense. He helped the team to an 11-1 record and state championship as a sophomore, finishing with 31 catches for 582 yards and eight touchdowns. As a junior, Shorter earned first team All-Conference honors with 45 catches for 718 yards and six touchdowns. As a senior captain, he led the program to a 12-1 record and the 2017 Group 5 state title. Shorter finished his final season with 36 catches for 522 yards and seven touchdown grabs, adding 322 rushing yards and four rushing scores to earn second team All-American and first team All-State and All-Conference honors. He also was a standout cornerback and finished his prep career with seven interceptions. Shorter lettered in track as a senior, running sprints and relays.

A five-star recruit, Shorter was the No. 1 wide receiver in the 2018 recruiting class (ahead of Amon-Ra St. Brown, Jaylen Waddle and Ja'Marr Chase) and the No. 8 recruit overall. He collected numerous offers and considered Michigan and Rutgers but verbalized to Penn State prior to his junior season in high school and stayed loyal to that pledge. With Shorter and Micah Parsons, Penn State signed a pair of top-10 nationally ranked recruits in the 2018 class. After missing most of the 2018 season because of injury, he didn't see many targets behind KJ Hamler and Jahan Dotson and decided to enter the transfer portal before the end of the 2019 season. Shorter announced his transfer to Florida in January 2020. He graduated with his degree in educational sciences (May 2022). Shorter opted out of the 2022 bowl game and accepted his invitation to the 2023 East-West Shrine Bowl.

PRO DAY	6042	234	33 7/8	10	82 3/8	-	-	-	-	-	4.46	7.35	- (stood on Combine runs, jumps, bench)

STRENGTHS: Impressive size/speed athlete ... has the arm length that makes some offensive tackles jealous ... linear speed to close cushion and force cornerbacks to respect his acceleration ... dangerous in the deep third of the field ... tracks the ball naturally and adjusts in flight to high-point the football ... stabs with focus away from his body (only one registered drop over the 114 combined targets his junior and senior seasons) ... ranked No. 2 in the SEC in yards per reception in 2022 (behind only his teammate Ryan Pearsall) ... physical stature helps him overwhelm receivers as a blocker ... has experience as a gunner on special teams.

WEAKNESSES: Tightly wound, and some of the branches of his route tree are stiffer than others ... leggy in and out of breaks, causing him to linger or round off his patterns ... comes off the line tall and gives defenders a large target to press ... doesn't consistently use his body to shield or frame defenders downfield ... has never been known as a YAC threat over his career ... clear your schedule if trying to find forced missed tackles on his tape ... disappointing career production and never reached 600 yards receiving in a single season in his five years in college.

SUMMARY: A two-year starter at Florida, Shorter was the X receiver in head coach Billy Napier's offense. One look at him and there is no mystery why he had more stars as a high school recruit than a clear-night sky, but he struggled to find his footing at Penn State and was more of a splashy weapon over his three years at Florida. Shorter has striking speed for his size and is at his best when he can stack coverage and create a vertical runway (75.9 percent of his 2022 catches resulted in a first down or touchdown). Though he provides a large strike zone for his quarterback, his contested catch success should be higher with his size advantage. Overall, Shorter is a one-speed runner with predictable route running, but his height/weight/speed mix is uncommon, and his ball-winning potential will tantalize NFL teams. His fit as a back-end-of-the-roster receiver makes him worth the risk.

GRADE: 6th-7th Round

35. DERIUS DAVIS | TCU 5083 | 165 lbs. | SSR Saint Francisville, La. (West Feliciana) 9/11/2000 (age 22.63) #11

BACKGROUND: Derius (DARE-ee-us) Davis grew up in Saint Francisville (north of Baton Rouge) and attended West Feliciana High School. He made an impact on all three phases as a wide receiver, defensive back and return man. After helping the program to a 13-1 finish and deep playoff run in 2016, Davis led West Feliciana to a 16-1 record and the 2017 3A state championship as a senior. He finished his final season with 485 yards receiving and 408 yards rushing, combining for 18 total touchdowns (eight rushing, seven receiving, two special teams, one interception return). On defense, which was his preference over offense, Davis posted 40 tackles, 13.0 tackles for loss, 3.0 sacks and two interceptions as a senior. He was even more accomplished as a track athlete at West Feliciana and won the 200-meter state title in 2016 (21.61), 2017 (21.41) and 2018 (21.74). He won the 400-meter state titles in 2018 indoor (48.22), 2017 indoor (48.55) and 2017 outdoor (46.86).

A three-star recruit, Davis was the No. 85 cornerback in the 2018 recruiting class and the No. 42 recruit in Louisiana. He received several nearby offers (Louisiana, Louisiana Tech, Nicholls State, Northwestern State and Tulane) and a few Power 5 offers (Kansas State, TCU and Tennessee). Prior to his senior year, Davis committed to TCU, becoming the first from his high school to sign with a Power 5 program since 2014. Despite being listed as a cornerback recruit, he moved to offense his first season in Fort Worth. Davis took advantage of the extra year of eligibility because of COVID rules and returned to TCU for his fifth season in 2022. He accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl.

STRENGTHS: Speed, speed, speed (both timed and on the field) ... immediate acceleration catches would-be tacklers off balance ... able to turn short screens into big gains ... aggressive vision to attack creases, no matter the angle required ... has the foot quickness to give defenders the slip in tight quarters ... tiny hands, but he kept the drops to a minimum over his career ... plays with the toughness required for the NFL ... responsible for five punt return touchdowns and averaged 15.0 yards per return in college (44/658/5) ... also had a kick return touchdown and averaged 22.0 yards per return (52/1,145/1) ... also played on kick and punt coverages during his career (seven career special teams tackles).

WEAKNESSES: Small, small, small (both short and small-framed) ... below-average length and catch radius create a tiny target for his quarterbacks ... relies too much on his body to help trap the football ... responsible for five muffed punt returns in his career ... physical defensive backs will crowd him at the line and create release issues ... low batting average in contested catch situations ... needs to introduce better pacing and feel into his routes ... most of his catches came in the quick game, and he wasn't consistently asked to create spacing for himself ... explosive plays were primarily catch-and-run more than winning over the top (only three of his 42 catches in 2022 came on throws 20-plus yards or more in the air).

SUMMARY: A two-year starter at TCU, Davis was a slot receiver in former offensive coordinator Garrett Riley's RPO-based offense. He was named the Big 12 Special Teams Player of the Year in 2022, which capped off an impressive career that produced six special teams touchdowns (tied KaVontae Turpin for the school record). Davis has exceptional on-field speed and burst to create explosive plays with the ball in his hands, which was also represented in his testing (his 1.46 10-yard split led all combine participants). Although his offensive output was limited (never reached 550 receiving yards in a season), he finished his career with an extraordinary 15.0 yards per punt return. Overall, Davis is unproven has anything more than a gadget player, but the talent is there for him to expand his offensive impact while serving as a team's featured returner.

36. RONNIE BELL | Michigan 5115 | 191 lbs. | 5SR Kansas City, Mo. (Park Hill) 1/28/2000 (age 23.25) #8

BACKGROUND: Ronald "Ronnie" Bell, who is the oldest of four children, grew up around the game of football as the son of a college assistant coach. Growing up in the Kansas City suburbs, he focused on basketball most of his life and started playing football in middle school. Bell attended Park Hill High School, where he was a three-year varsity letterman at wide receiver and returner. As a sophomore, he posted 17 catches for 232 yards and four touchdowns. Bell posted 63 receptions for 639 yards and six touchdowns as a junior. He had his most productive season as a senior, finishing with 89 catches for 1,605 yards and 21 touchdowns, adding 163 rushing yards and three rushing touchdowns in 2017. Bell's 21 touchdowns as a senior ranked fourth-most in state history, and he took home first team All-State honors and the Thomas A. Simone Award as the top football player in the Kansas City Area. He finished his career with 169 receptions, 2,476 receiving yards and 31 touchdowns, which rank No. 3 in Missouri high school history behind Dorial Green-Beckham and Jeremy Maclin. Bell was also a three-year starter on the Park Hill basketball team and was named first team All-District and All-Conference as a junior with 14.4 points per game.

A three-star recruit, Bell was the No. 212 wide receiver in the 2018 recruiting class and the No. 18 recruit in Michigan. After his sophomore year in high school, he set a goal of playing college football, but he didn't attend recruiting camps because of his AAU commitments and didn't have any football scholarships through his senior season. Bell received several basketball offers and signed with Missouri State in December 2017. However, Michigan head coach Jim Harbaugh discovered Bell after speaking with his brother-in-law, Jimmy Cain, who coached basketball at Blue Springs South High School just outside of Kansas City. Cain told Harbaugh that Bell was the best football player in the Kansas City area, and Michigan reached out with an offer. Missouri State released Bell from his signed letter of intent, and he signed with the Wolverines (third-lowest ranked recruit in Michigan's 2018 recruiting class). His father (Aaron) played wide receiver at Pittsburg State, Missouri State and Fort Scott Community College before becoming a coach. Aaron was the wide receivers coach at Division II Missouri Western State for nine seasons (2006-14) followed by several stops as a high school assistant, including Park Hill. Aaron recently made his return to Missouri Western State as wide receivers coach for the 2023 season. Ronnie has younger twin brothers (Kendrick and Marqueas). Kendrick played quarterback at Park Hill and signed with Michigan as an athlete in the 2023 recruiting class. Marqueas signed with Southeast Missouri to play college basketball for the 2023-24 season. Bell graduated with his degree in social work. He accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl.

PRO DAY	5113	189	31	9 5/8	75 1/2	-	-	-	-	-	4.04	6.62	- (stood on Combine runs, jumps, bench)

STRENGTHS: Fleet-of-foot athlete and attentive as a route runner ... uses short-area quickness and sink in his breaks to swiftly detach out of his cuts ... maintains field leverage and gives himself room for bucket throws along the sideline ... tracks the football with the focus and timing needed at the next level ... fearless when his route path takes him into crowded areas and plays bigger than he looks ... aggressive perimeter blocker who prides himself on his well-rounded game ... two-time team captain who became a player-coach during the 2021 season when he was sidelined with his knee injury (his approach and work ethic have never been questioned by any of his coaches) ... only the 15th player in Michigan history to surpass 2,000 career receiving yards.

WEAKNESSES: Average-sized and underpowered ... easily out-muscled in traffic, and contested windows vastly favor the defender ... guilty of opting for the acrobatic grab instead of establishing earlier position ... quick initial movements, but his speed stalls out, limiting deep ball separation ... doesn't have the body type to run through tackle attempts (also fumbled twice in 2022) ... play strength will be tested by physical press corners in the NFL ... below-average scoring output with single-digit touchdown catches on 228 career targets ... suffered a torn ACL in his right knee (September 2021), requiring season-ending surgery.

SUMMARY: A four-year starter at Michigan, Bell was an inside and outside receiver in head coach Jim Harbaugh's pro-style spread offense. After missing the 2021 season with a torn ACL, he worked his way back and posted career bests in every receiving category, leading the Wolverines in receiving for the third time in the past four seasons. Bell's basketball background is evident with his smooth steps and movements and the way he leaps, floats and attacks the football. However, he is quicker than fast with only average acceleration through contact and out of stems, which is tough to overcome vs. NFL coverage. Overall, Bell is a naturally instinctive and competitive pass catcher and brings the right mindset to the NFL game, but creating separation and finishing catches in crowded windows will be a tall task at the next level. He has the skill set to carve out a Rashard Higgins-like role in the NFL.

37. JACOB COPELAND | Maryland 5112 | 201 lbs. | SSR Pensacola, Fla. (Escambia) 7/19/1999 (age 23.77) #2

BACKGROUND: Jacob Copeland, who has six older brothers, was born and raised in north Pensacola. He became the first in his family to graduate high school, and his father (Darrick Bennett), who was in and out of prison throughout Copeland’s childhood, died when Copeland was 13 years old. Copeland started playing football at age 6 for the Brent Raiders and quickly established himself as one of the best wide receivers and overall athletes in the area. At age 12, Copeland moved in with his youth coach (Trampas Miller) and his family for a more stable situation while remaining close with his mother (Betty) and his brothers. Copeland started his prep career at Pine Forrest High School, where he saw immediate varsity reps as a freshman wide receiver. He had his most productive season as a sophomore with 39 receptions for 771 yards and seven touchdowns followed by 29 catches for 516 yards and five touchdowns as a junior. Midway through his junior year (after the football season), Copeland transferred to Escambia High School (Emmitt Smith’s alma mater) for his final season. As a senior, he helped Escambia to an 8-3 record and earned All-Area honors with 29 receptions for 613 yards and five touchdowns, adding a pair of rushing touchdowns. He was named an Under Armour All-American and finished his prep career with 114 catches for 2,261 yards and 19 touchdowns. Copeland also ran track in high school and set personal bests in the 100 meters (11.23), high jump (6 feet 2 inches) and long jump (21-11).

A four-star recruit, Copeland was the No. 12 wide receiver in the 2018 recruiting class (behind notable names like Amon-Ra St. Brown and Jaylen Waddle) and the No. 14 recruit in Florida. He was the No. 69 overall recruit nationally. Copeland received scholarship offers from Florida and Miami (Fla.) after his freshman year of high school and finished with 30-plus major offers, including Clemson, Georgia, Ohio State and others. He originally committed to Florida prior to his senior year but decommitted two months later and strongly considered Alabama because of his connection with then-Tide offensive coordinator Mike Locksley. On signing day, Copeland recommitted to the Gators over his other finalists (Alabama and Tennessee). He made his decision live on ESPN, and the clip soon went viral because his mother, who is an Alabama native and wanted her son to pick the Crimson Tide, packed her things and walked off the set after he put on a Gators hat. After a redshirt year, Copeland’s production increased each of the next three seasons, but he was frustrated with his role and ready for a change. After the 2021 season, he entered the transfer portal, and his relationship with Locksley led him to Maryland for his final season. Copeland opted out of the 2022 bowl game and accepted his invitation to the 2023 East-West Shrine Bowl.

STRENGTHS: Looks the part with his broad-shouldered, muscular frame ... naturally explosive athlete ... his tape shows the run-by speed to create vertical separation on his terms ... more than a straight-line runner, and his routes show ease of movement ... has strong hands and doesn’t fight the football short or deep ... tracks well over his shoulder with natural hand-eye coordination to make late adjustments ... open-field burst forces off-balanced tackle attempts ... throws iron around in the weight room and loves to train ... has the traits to be a productive gunner on punt coverage (see 2022 Penn State tape).

WEAKNESSES: Below-average career production and struggled to find a meaningful role at Maryland ... needs to add branches to his route tree and sharpen the angles out of his breaks ... occasionally slow to return his eyes to the line of scrimmage and forced to throttle down to find the football ... can be caught in low gear by the net of physical press corners ... needs to be a better hand fighter to free himself for targets ... effort wavers from snap to snap and must adopt a more locked-in approach if he wants to eat at the NFL table ... returned kicks as a senior, but it wasn’t a glowing part of his game.

SUMMARY: A part-time player at Maryland, Copeland was the backup X receiver in head coach Mike Locksley’s spread offense. A former top high school recruit, he showed steady improvements in his four seasons at Florida but found himself buried on the talented wide receiver depth chart in his one season with the Terps. Copeland moves with impressive muscle twitch and upfield athleticism that was represented in his testing numbers at the combine. He shows the ability to track the football but must become more quarterback-friendly and tighten up his routes to keep corners from getting the jump on him. Overall, Copeland is a physically impressive athlete who can beat man coverage with pure speed, but his undeveloped instincts and lack of attention to detail have kept him from becoming a complete pass catcher. An NFL team might have something if the coaching staff can get him to buy in and harness his explosive traits.

38. BRYCE FORD-WHEATON | W. Virginia 6036 | 221 lbs. | SSR Fuquay-Varina, N.C. (Holly Springs) 3/9/2000 (age 23.13) #0

BACKGROUND: Bryce Ford-Wheaton, who is one of three children, grew up in Martinsburg, W.Va., with deep family ties to the area. He later moved to the Raleigh area and attended Holly Springs High School, where he was a three-year letterman as a wide receiver and defensive back. Ford-Wheaton had his most productive season as a sophomore with 28 receptions for 311 yards and four touchdowns. As a junior, he posted 14 catches for 168 yards and four total touchdowns (two receiving, two rushing) in a run-first offense (also had an interception return for a touchdown). As a senior, Ford-Wheaton accounted for 11 receptions for 242 yards (22.0 average) and five touchdowns (four rushing, one receiving) over the first four games before a shoulder injury sidelined him for the final six games. Despite missing most of the 2017 season, he was named the Offensive MVP and earned All-Conference honors. Ford-Wheaton also lettered in track with personal bests in the 100 meters (11.34), 200 meters (24.00) and long jump (20 feet 0 inches).

A three-star recruit, Ford-Wheaton was the No. 119 wide receiver in the 2018 recruiting class and the No. 26 recruit in North Carolina. He received several Power 5 scholarship offers, including Louisville, Missouri, Syracuse and Washington State. But Ford-Wheaton wanted to continue his family’s legacy at West Virginia. His maternal grandfather (Garrett Ford Sr.) played running back at West Virginia (1964-67) and became the first player in school history to reach the 1,000-yard rushing mark. He was picked in the third round (No. 58 overall) of the 1968 NFL Draft by the Denver Broncos and later returned to West Virginia as an assistant coach under Bobby Bowden (first black coach in school history) and then as assistant athletic director. Bryce’s uncle (Garrett Ford Jr.) was a running back at West Virginia (1989-92). Bryce’s mother (Tracie Ford) and father (Keith Wheaton) both earned their degrees from West Virginia. Bryce graduated with his degree in sport management (December 2021). He became the first player in school history to wear No. 0 on his jersey. He accepted his invitation to the 2023 East-West Shrine Bowl.

PRO DAY	6035	223	33 3/8	9 5/8	82 1/2	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	(stood on Combine testing)

STRENGTHS: Limber and long with a stretched-out frame ... special athlete with his explosive speed and agility (his 1.80 was the fastest “flying 20” at the combine) ... has the leaping skills and springs in calves to play in the clouds ... expands catch radius to reel in tough grabs ... matches the physicality of defensive backs ... at his best on linear routes where he can stretch out his stride length and utilize his size (fades, back-shoulders, in-breakers, etc.) ... loose body movements and control along the sideline ... quarterbacks feel comfortable giving him chances at 50-50 balls ... has the easy acceleration to turn screens/slants into explosive plays ... was a regular on punt coverage.

WEAKNESSES: Upright, undisciplined route runner ... loose and liberal with his breaks/releases, giving cornerbacks a chance to jump his path ... needs to use better route leverage to create expanded downfield separation ... history of costly drops and must prove he has the hand strength to secure the rock ... relies too much on his body to finish grabs, especially in traffic ... can be knocked off schedule by press or firm hands mid-route ... film shows hints of self-doubt at the catch point and as a runner ... should be a better YAC threat with his athleticism.

SUMMARY: A three-year starter at West Virginia, Ford-Wheaton was the X receiver in head coach Neal Brown’s offense, lining up exclusive to the left of the formation. Though his catch volume increased each of the last four seasons, his yards per catch decreased as his receptions increased, and he never reached 700 yards receiving in a single season. Ford-Wheaton posted elite testing numbers at the scouting combine, and that athleticism flashes on tape, especially in jump ball situations or when he has a runway. However, he needs to sharpen his route angles and introduce more discipline to his approach. Overall, Ford-Wheaton must develop better confidence in his hands and routes to matchup in the NFL, but he is a rare height/length/speed athlete with potential to be a ball winner. He is a high-level developmental NFL prospect.

39. MITCHELL TINSLEY | Penn State 6000 | 199 lbs. | 5SR Lee’s Summit, Mo. (Lee’s Summit) 9/15/1999 (age 23.62) #5

BACKGROUND: Mitchell “Mitch” Tinsley, who is one of three children, played multiple sports throughout elementary and middle school, including football. However, he decided to focus on basketball when he enrolled at Lee’s Summit High School and was a two-year varsity letterman at shooting guard. Tinsley decided to return to football for his senior season at Lee’s Summit and posted 19 receptions for 350 yards and six touchdowns. He also lettered in track (relays and jumps) and set a personal-best in the long jump (21 feet 11.75 inches) at 2018 sectionals.

Tinsley had only one year of high school tape with moderate production and was barely a blip on the recruiting radar. With zero offers, he walked on at Hutchinson Community College in Kansas and had a breakout sophomore season with 47 catches for 556 yards and four touchdowns in 2019. A three-star junior college recruit in the 2020 recruiting class, Tinsley received seven FBS-level offers and committed to Western Kentucky. With Bailey Zappe at quarterback for the 2021 season, Tinsley was one of only eight FBS receivers with 1,400-plus receiving yards. He took advantage of the NCAA extra year of eligibility because of COVID rules and entered the transfer portal for his fifth season. Tinsley quickly heard from numerous schools and received offers from programs like North Carolina, Tennessee, Texas A&M and USC. However, Penn State (specifically former wide receivers coach Taylor Stubblefield) was on him early, and Tinsley signed with the Nittany Lions to fill the shoes of the departing Jahan Dotson. His younger brother (Malik) played basketball at Iowa Central Community College (2021-22). Tinsley accepted his invitation to the 2023 NFLPA Collegiate Bowl.

PRO DAY	-	202	-	-	-	4.55	2.63	1.60	-	-	4.14	6.70	(stood on Combine measurements, jumps)

STRENGTHS: Average height, but well-strapped together with length and hand size ... above-average short-area quickness ... route precision allows him to snap off his breaks ... eyes quickly locate the football, and his body stays balanced adjusting to it ... efficient pluck-and-put away technique ... rescues throws off his shoulder or down by his cleats ... crowded catch points didn’t seem to faze his focus on tape ... dependable character and made an impact in Happy Valley despite only one year there (offensive coordinator Mike Yurcich: “He’s a team guy. He loves to compete ... love that kid.”) ... comfortable working inside and outside ... led Penn State in receptions in 2022.

WEAKNESSES: Lacks desired top-end speed ... doesn’t have a secondary burst to easily create vertical separation (only four of his 51 catches in 2022 came on throws of 20-plus yards) ... footwork lags if his body rhythm isn’t on point in his stem work ... can do more to effectively sell his patterns ... needs to improve his physicality vs. rugged press corners ... doesn’t consistently play above the rim or use body position to box out defenders ... not a dynamic make-you-miss threat, regardless of the space ... had only one game with 70-plus receiving yards in 2022 ... marginal special teams experience and potential in the NFL.

SUMMARY: A one-year starter at Penn State, Tinsley was primarily an outside receiver in offensive coordinator Mike Yurcich’s RPO-based scheme. He had to learn five different offenses (at three different stops) in his five years in college, but he quickly digested the Penn State playbook and connected with quarterback Sean Clifford, who was also his roommate. What Tinsley doesn’t offer as a deep threat, he makes up with his crisp quickness underneath and finishing skills at the catch point. However, the absence of high-end explosiveness limits his special teams value and ability to be more than a possession target. Overall, Tinsley is well-liked by evaluators because of his fluid movements, ball skills and football smarts, but the lack of game-breaking athleticism puts a cap on his pro ceiling. He projects as a reliable slot option.

40. MATT LANDERS | Arkansas

6043 | 200 lbs. | SSR

St. Petersburg, Fla. (St. Petersburg)

#3

BACKGROUND: Matthew “Matt” Landers grew playing basketball and football throughout his childhood in the Tampa Bay area. He started his prep career at Lakewood High School, where he saw time at quarterback, wide receiver and defensive back. Landers transferred to Admiral Farragut Academy for his junior season and had his breakout season, helping the team to a 10-2 record and the 2015 regional finals in the playoffs. He earned first team All-State honors as a junior with 34 receptions for 1,038 yards and 15 touchdowns, averaging 30.5 yards per catch. Landers briefly returned to Lakewood in the spring of 2016 before transferring to St. Petersburg High School for his senior year. In his final season, he recorded 40 receptions for 719 yards and seven touchdowns, leading the team to an 8-2 record and playoff appearance.

A three-star recruit, Landers was the No. 98 wide receiver in the 2017 recruiting class and the No. 89 recruit in Florida. Despite not ranking among the top players in the state, he picked up several notable offers during his junior year, including Florida, Florida State, Kentucky, Miami (Fla.) and North Carolina. Georgia offered Landers a scholarship in February 2016, and he committed two months later. He added offers from Michigan, Notre Dame and others during his senior year, but Landers stayed committed to the Bulldogs. He struggled to find the field and move up the depth chart in Athens (NFL scout: “He was used to being ‘the guy’ and needed an attitude adjustment ... he eventually figured it out.”). After four seasons, Landers transferred to Toledo for his fifth season in 2021. He took advantage of the extra year of eligibility due because of COVID rules and entered the transfer portal again. Looking to return to the SEC, Landers transferred to Arkansas and rejoined head coach Sam Pittman, who was previously on the Georgia staff. His father (Toney Mack) was a standout basketball player at Georgia (1985-88) and was a second-round pick (No. 54 overall) in the 1989 NBA Draft by the Philadelphia 76ers. Landers accepted his invitation to the 2023 Hula Bowl.

PRO DAY	6045	202	32 7/8	9 3/8	79	-	-	-	-	-	4.32	6.86	- (stood on Combine runs and jumps)

STRENGTHS: Tall, long and fast ... swift strider to eat up grass vertically and get overtop coverage ... made a living downfield on the 2022 tape (76.6 percent of his catches resulted in a first down or touchdown) ... nimble feet aid his ability to get by press coverage and stack corners ... accelerates well off his plant foot for separation on one-cut routes (slants, posts etc.) ... tracks the ball naturally and gives his quarterback a good-sized strike zone thanks to his catch radius ... body control allows for him to adjust to the ball in flight ... flashed better elusiveness than expected with the ball in his hands ... played his best football in 2022 and might have finally turned a corner with his development.

WEAKNESSES: Slim body type, and that likely won’t change ... doesn’t have the play strength to consistently out-muscle NFL corners to win 50-50 balls ... at his best on runway patterns and not nearly as effective as a start-stop route runner ... doesn’t use enough sink in his releases or breaks to leverage defenders ... produced some concerning tape where he appears uninterested in blocking or getting involved ... battled confidence issues and immaturity as an underclassman, and his NFL team interviews are a crucial step in his draft process ... will turn 24 before his first NFL training camp ... limited special teams background and likely doesn’t have a future there in the NFL.

SUMMARY: A one-year starter at Arkansas, Landers was an outside wide receiver in former offensive coordinator Kendal Briles’ up-tempo spread attack. He had a well-traveled football career with time at three different high schools and three different colleges before finally giving NFL teams a reason to pay attention with his best season in 2022, leading the Razorbacks in receiving. Landers is a legitimate deep threat with his smooth strides and ability to make in-air adjustments (among FBS receivers with at least 45 catches in 2022, he ranked No. 2 in the country with 19.2 receiving yards per catch). Despite his age, he still has some upside if he introduces more attention to detail in his releases and route running. Overall, Landers has the vertical speed and catch radius that will draw the attention of NFL teams, but there are red flags that create doubt with his NFL projection. His limited special teams value will also be working against him.

41. JADON HASELWOOD | Arkansas

Atlanta, Ga. (Cedar Grove)

#9

BACKGROUND: Jadon (JAY-din) Haselwood (HAY-zel-wood), who has a younger brother, grew up in the Atlanta area and spent his childhood living with his grandmother, mother and several cousins. He played multiple sports growing up and started to separate himself on the football field. Haselwood attended Ellenwood’s Cedar Grove High School and was a four-year letterman, seeing immediate varsity action as a freshman. His production increased each season, including 10 touchdown catches as a sophomore and 632 receiving yards as a junior. As a senior, Haselwood led Cedar Grove to a 14-1 record and the 2018 state championship, earning U.S. Army All-American honors with 53 receptions for 1,032 receiving yards and 11 touchdowns. He also played defensive back and finished his prep career with six interceptions (three returned for touchdowns) along with four punt returns for touchdowns. Haselwood also lettered in track and was one of the top hurdlers in the state. He captured the state title in the 110-meter hurdles as a sophomore (14.52) and junior (14.38) and finished top three in the 300-meter hurdles as a freshman, sophomore and junior.

A five-star recruit, Haselwood was the No. 1 wide receiver in the 2019 recruiting class and the No. 1 recruit in Georgia (ahead of Travon Walker, Andrew Booth and Owen Pappoe). He was the No. 4 overall recruit nationally behind only Nolan Smith, Kayvon Thibodeaux and Derek Stingley. After his freshman season, Haselwood picked up his first offer (Illinois) followed closely by Georgia, LSU and Michigan. Several coaches, including Nick Saban, offered him as a defensive back. After his sophomore season, he officially committed to Kirby Smart and Georgia but decided to decommit midway through his senior season. Haselwood considered offers from Alabama, Auburn, Clemson, Florida and Ohio State, but his final four was Florida State, Georgia, Oklahoma and Tennessee. Between family connections and head coach Lincoln Riley’s persistence, Haselwood signed with the Sooners and was the top-ranked recruit in a class that also included five-star quarterback Spencer Rattler. Haselwood’s father (Jeremy) is from Oklahoma City and attended Oklahoma (didn’t play football), so Jadon was a Sooners fan growing up in Georgia. Several of his relatives (aunts, uncles, cousins) still live in Oklahoma. He entered the transfer portal after the 2021 season (Haselwood: “Lincoln (Riley) leaving was probably the last straw.”). A week later, Haselwood committed to Arkansas. He joined the Razorbacks because of running backs coach Jimmy Smith, who was the head coach at Cedar Grove when Haselwood was in high school. After one season with the Razorbacks, he opted out of the 2022 bowl game and entered the 2023 NFL Draft. Haselwood accepted his invitation to the 2023 East-West Shrine Bowl but didn’t play in the game after suffering a toe injury during practices.

STRENGTHS: Slender, athletic frame with large hands ... extends well to pluck throws outside his body ... displays run skill out of the slot to out-angle pursuit or give defenders the slip ... finishes with refreshing physicality as a ball carrier ... strategically shakes press and quickly enters his routes ... shows lower-body fluidity and hip sink to get in and out of his breaks ... leverages coverage on comebacks and hitches to help give his quarterback more margin for error ... doesn’t give defenders indications to his route path ... has build-up speed to make downfield plays over coverage if given a clear runway ... shows promise as a stalk blocker.

WEAKNESSES: Saw a lot of quick, uncrowded targets on the 2022 tape ... average functional strength and won’t consistently power through defenders ... lacks a runaway gear to maintain stride separation from pursuit ... takes some exaggerated steps when attempting to separate mid-route ... hands-y tendencies at the top of routes will draw NFL flags ... guilty of unnecessarily allowing the ball into his body ... battled confidence issues early in his career ... doesn’t have special teams experience ... suffered a torn ACL (April 2020) to his right knee while training out at home and missed most of the 2020 season; played with a sprained AC joint in his left shoulder (September 2022) throughout his final season.

SUMMARY: A one-year starter at Arkansas, Haselwood operated primarily out of the slot in former offensive coordinator Kendal Briles’ up-tempo spread attack. The former No. 1 wide receiver recruit in 2019 (one spot ahead of Garrett Wilson), he struggled to live up to expectations over his career (only one career 100-yard receiving game), but his fresh start at Arkansas helped show NFL scouts his talent. Haselwood is tall and long with the physical toughness and foot quickness to give his quarterback a target. He accepts the football with soft hands, although his success rate plummets when crowded. Overall, Haselwood is a gliding athlete with the short-area quicks to defeat press, but his separation is usually short-lived, which highlights his lack of desired speed and strength. His best college tape came as a “big slot,” and that is how he projects in the NFL.

42. JAKE BOBO | UCLA

North Andover, Mass. (Belmont Hill)

BACKGROUND: Jackson “Jake” Bobo, who has two younger brothers, grew up in North Andover (25 miles north of Boston), where his mother was a teacher and college counselor at Brooks School. Growing up, he developed his love for football playing in the Lawrence Pop Warner league. The summer before eighth grade, his family moved to Arkansas before returning to Massachusetts and moving to the Concord area. Bobo enrolled at Belmont Hill, a private school for boys, where he was a four-year varsity letterman at wide receiver. He earned first team All-League honors as a sophomore with 30 catches for 652 yards and five touchdowns in 2015. As a junior, Bobo he led Belmont Hill to a 7-2 record and the 2016 New England Prep School championship, finishing with 31 catches for 632 yards and 10 touchdowns. As a senior, he received first team All-League honors for the third consecutive year with 34 receptions for 514 yards and five scores. Bobo also lettered in basketball and track, setting personal bests in the 200 meters (25.32), high jump (6 feet) and triple jump (41-9.5).

A three-star recruit, Bobo was the No. 183 wide receiver in the 2018 recruiting class and the No. 6 recruit in Massachusetts (Pat Freiermuth was No. 1). He received several Ivy League offers (Dartmouth, Harvard and Yale) and considered Boston College and Wake Forest. But Duke was his first offer midway through his junior year, and he committed a few months later. After the 2021 season, Bobo elected to take advantage of the extra year of eligibility because of COVID rules and decided to transfer for his final season. Within hours of entering the transfer portal, he heard from Chip Kelly and UCLA, who made an aggressive recruiting push. After he graduated with his degree in economics from Duke (December 2021), he decided to head west and signed with UCLA over Boston College. His father (Mike) was a three-year starting wide receiver at Dartmouth (1989-91). His mother (Casey) played ice hockey at Dartmouth and is a longtime lacrosse and field hockey coach. His younger brother (Luke) is a rising junior quarterback at Division III Williams College (Williamstown, Mass.). His younger brother (Mac) is a basketball and football player at Belmont Hill. His paternal grandfather (Keith) played quarterback at SMU (1971-73) and was drafted in the 12th round (No. 309 overall) of the 1974 NFL Draft by the Dallas Cowboys. His maternal grandfather (David Hagerman) played ice hockey at New Hampshire. His aunt (Jamie Hagerman Phinney) played ice hockey at Harvard and earned a bronze medal at the 2006 Olympic Games. His aunt (Kully Hagerman Reardon) played field hockey and lacrosse at Middlebury College, winning the field hockey NCAA championship in 1998 and the lacrosse NCAA championship in 1997 and 1999. His aunt (Whitaker Hagerman Willocks) played lacrosse at Virginia. Bobo accepted his invitation to the 2023 East-West Shrine Bowl.

STRENGTHS: Large-framed target and plays up to his size ... quick to turn and find the football ... strong, plucky hands and skillfully rescues fastballs above his eye level ... shields defenders and plays with the functional strength to win 50-50 balls ... gravitates toward soft spots in zone ... tracks the ball well over his shoulder on post-corners ... uses subtle hesitation to keep man coverage guessing ... finishes his runs like a tight end, looking to add a few yards to his total after the catch ... five of his seven touchdowns in 2022 came in the red zone ... dependable football character (NFL scout: “The Duke coaches say he was their best practice player in the program.”).

WEAKNESSES: Monotone speed and routes ... doesn’t sink/explode out of his stem breaks, which limits separation opportunities ... will struggle to uncover vs. NFL press defenders ... has trouble separating downfield, and safeties will attach themselves to his third-level routes ... doesn’t have make-you-miss quickness or a pull-away gear to be a legitimate YAC threat ... lackluster start-stop movements and needs a moment to rev back up to top speed ... competitive blocker but should be more dominant walling-off defenders considering his size advantage.

SUMMARY: A one-year starter at UCLA, Bobo lined up inside and outside in head coach Chip Kelly’s offense and was primarily used as an underneath target. After four seasons with moderate production at Duke, he transferred for his final season and emerged as Dorian Thompson-Robinson’s top target in 2022, posting an outstanding first-down rate (77.2 percent). Bobo is quick to read coverages and shows an instinctive feel for sitting down in zones with alert eyes and ready hands. However, he is extremely speed deficient, and his upright entry into breaks forces him to labor in and out of his cuts. Overall, Bobo’s size advantage won’t be as profound vs. NFL-level athletes, and he won’t see as many clean catch windows, but he has strong ball skills and competes with a sense of urgency. He projects as a “big” slot or potential tight end convert if he commits to adding weight.

SUMMARY: Antoine Green was a standout basketball, football and track athlete at Rockledge High (east of Orlando), recording 413 receiving yards and two touchdown grabs as a senior. A four-star recruit, Green had several high-profile offers and flipped from Florida State to North Carolina (over Georgia and Ohio State). He was lost on the depth chart until his final two years, when he emerged as a dangerous deep threat (averaged a touchdown every 6.6 catches and 19.1 yards per catch over junior and senior seasons). Green is at his best on outside, vertical-based patterns, where he can get on top of corners and win down the field. He shows timing and strength as a catch-point finisher. Creating his own separation isn’t currently a strength to his game, though, especially as an underneath option. Overall, Green has the acceleration and tracking skills to adjust well vertically but will need to expand his route tree to bolster his chances of sticking on an NFL resume.

SUMMARY: Xavier Gipson was born and raised in Dallas and was a standout four-year cornerback at Woodrow Wilson High. He also played receiver as a senior and had 24 catches for 383 yards and five scores. He also ran track, posting a 10.55 100 meters. A three-star recruit, he committed to SMU (as a cornerback) but grades were an obstacle and he decided to go the FCS route, signing with Stephen F. Austin (as a wide receiver). He led SFA in receiving each of his four seasons and was responsible for four punt return scores. A slot-only receiver in college, Gipson is a speed demon with or without the football, using natural burst to quickly outflank pursuit. He is shifty in his routes, but his timing, tempo and footwork need to be sharper against NFL coverage. Despite smaller hands, he is dependable tracking and securing grabs away from his frame. Overall, Gipson is an undersized slot target, but his explosiveness allows him to make big plays on offense and special teams.

SUMMARY: Shaquan “Shaq” Davis was a basketball-focused athlete most of his life and didn’t take football seriously until his junior year at Summerville (alma mater of several pros, including AJ Green). He had more scholarship offers for basketball but decided to pursue football. However, he didn’t have the grades for the FBS teams looking at him. FCS-level South Carolina State took a chance, and he missed 2018 to get his grades on track. He quickly became a key playmaker and led the team in receiving the past three years. Davis looks like a basketball player with his tall, long frame and stringy muscle tone. He accelerates to top speed quickly with his expansive strides and shows upper body flexibility to win deep (20.5 yard/catch average). However, his ball skills are troublesome, and he doesn’t always play up to his size. Overall, Davis’ game lacks attention to detail, but he has Martavis Bryant-like developmental upside, making him worthy of bringing to NFL camp.

SUMMARY: Malik Knowles was born in Lynwood, Calif. before moving in with his aunt and uncle in Mansfield at age 9. He was originally a running back, until a growth spurt moved him to receiver at Lake Ridge High, where he collected 15 receiving touchdowns as a senior. A three-star recruit, he signed with Kansas State and now leaves ranked top five in program history in all-purpose yards (3,998). He averaged 27.7 yards per kick return with three scores and posted consistent receiving production. Knowles has quick, steady hands and shows quickness out of breaks to create pockets of separation for his quarterback. He can win deep with his speed, but his routes can be easily affected by defenders, and he must continue working to get open. He was unable to work out for NFL teams pre-draft because of a PCL repair (February 2023). Overall, Knowles has NFL talent as a receiver and kick returner, but he must become more consistent with the details of the position.

SUMMARY: Jason Brownlee was primarily a defensive back until he got to West Point High and moved to receiver as a sophomore. He posted 42 catches for 967 yards and 11 touchdowns as a senior, adding four interceptions on defense. He went the junior college route and had an All-American sophomore year, leading the nation in receiving in 2019. A three-star junior college recruit, he led Southern Miss in receiving each of the past three seasons and finished No. 4 in school history in touchdown grabs. With his long, lithe frame, Brownlee does an excellent job locating, adjusting and extending to snag the ball. He has leaping skills to play above the rim but struggles in traffic or when corners crowd the catch windows. The lack of route-running precision and break quickness make it tough for him to uncover. Overall, Brownlee has enticing length and ball skills to make it in the NFL, but the lackluster speed and questionable special teams impact could be his kryptonite.

SUMMARY: Dontay Demus Jr. (DEE-miss) grew up in the DMV and helped lead Friendship Collegiate to the 2017 DCSAA Class AA city championship game, posting 66 catches for 1,167 yards and 12 touchdowns as a senior. A three-star recruit, he stayed close to home and committed to Maryland. After leading the Terrapins in receiving in 2019 and 2020, he was on pace to do the same in 2021 and was a projected top-100 draft pick. However, he suffered a major right knee injury (October 2021) and didn't look the same in 2022, putting his NFL prospects in limbo. Demus is a smooth strider with the body control to create late separation and expand his catch radius. He plays well through contact and has high-pointing skills. However, his routes aren't crisp, and his short-area quickness is just average. Overall, Demus' 2021 knee injury changed his career trajectory and will give teams pause, but he has NFL upside if he returns to pre-injury form and his knee holds up long-term.

SUMMARY: Joseph "Jo" Ngata (enn-GOT-uh), who is the middle son of three boys, was born in Reno, Nev., and raised in nearby Sparks by his Cameroon-born parents. The family moved to Folsom so their boys could play football, and Ngata led Folsom High to back-to-back state titles in 2017 and 2018. A four-star recruit, he chose Clemson over Alabama, Ohio State and many others. However, he battled several injuries and struggled to find the end zone (didn't lead the team in receiving in any of his four seasons). Ngata has a long, angular frame with acceleration out of his stutter-step release to challenge cornerbacks on the outside. Though his catch radius belongs on the NFL level, his lack of runaway speed or short-area burst hinders the snap out of breaks. Staying healthy is the key question mark. Overall, Ngata naturally uses his body length to make full-extension grabs over defenders, but his struggles to create his own separation will be a challenging mountain to climb.

SUMMARY: Kearis (Kee-AIR-us) Jackson was an All-State receiver at Peach County with 47 receptions for 852 yards and nine touchdowns as a senior. He led the team to a 13-2 record and the 2017 state title game. He also captured the 2017 state shot-put championship (51'4"). A four-star recruit, he passed on Alabama and other suitors to stay in Georgia. He set career bests as a sophomore in 2020 but was more of a part-timer over his final two seasons in Athens. He also handled punt return duties (8.0 average). Jackson is underwhelming from a size/speed/strength perspective and struggled to earn more of a target share in a productive passing offense. He catches the ball well with body control to adjust to his surroundings. He works well at every level of the field, but physical corners will give him trouble. Overall, Jackson is a sure-handed receiver with dynamic qualities, but he needs to learn how to more efficiently use those traits to create before and after the catch.

SUMMARY: Malik Heath was introduced to football by his father (Harold), who played tight end at Jackson State. He prepped at Callaway High and originally played quarterback before moving to receiver and having a breakout junior season with 46 catches for 1,213 yards and five touchdowns. He was the top recruit in Mississippi and committed to Mississippi State but was forced to go the juco route for two seasons. After two years in Mike Leach's offense, he jumped to the other side of the Egg Bowl and transferred to Ole Miss for his final season. Heath has average speed, but is he fast enough? He is a balanced athlete and runs his routes with urgency, but he needs to introduce more tempo and discipline mid-pattern. He has a good-sized catch radius with strong hands to pluck and finish through contact. Overall, Heath doesn't have the desired speed or linear burst for the position, which are the main concern, but his size and catch-point skills are NFL worthy.

SUMMARY: Jacarlos "Jaray" Jenkins put himself on the recruiting radar with 1,960 receiving yards and 27 touchdowns during his first three years of high school. A three-star recruit, he committed to LSU as a junior but suffered a fractured tibia in the season opener of his senior year, which led to him redshirting when he arrived in Baton Rouge. With Ja'Marr Chase opting out prior to the 2020 season, Jenkins became a starter and posted steady production in each of the last three seasons. A well-built perimeter target, he shows a keen use of his body to establish positioning and out-physical defenders at the catch point. He doesn't have the juice to create missed tackles, but he runs his routes to proper depth and finds the sticks (85.2 percent of his catches in 2022 resulted in a first down or touchdown). Overall, Jenkins is speed deficient and will have a tough time creating separation in the NFL, but he offers strong hands and plays well through contact as a possession target.

SUMMARY: Ryan Miller, who comes from a family of athletes, was born and raised in Jackson and attended University School of Jackson. As a senior captain, he caught 69 passes for 1,149 yards and eight touchdowns. He also lettered in basketball and track and played trombone all four years in the band. He landed at FCS Furman where he was a hybrid tight end and increased his production each season, including an All-American senior year (posted 13 catches for 95 yards and a touchdown versus Clemson in 2022). He knows how to get open underneath, showing exceptional quickness on angle/pivot routes to give his quarterback a target. He tracks the ball well, but vertical seams won't be as accessible as he will see a higher percentage of contested targets versus NFL defenders. Overall, Miller is more quick than fast and has strong ball skills to win in traffic or be a reliable zone beater underneath. He will transition from an H-back to a possession slot.

SUMMARY: Braydon Johnson was born in Oklahoma City and grew up in Arlington, where he was a football and track star at Bowie High. As a senior, he accounted for 45 receptions for 729 yards and eight touchdowns, adding a punt-return touchdown to help the program to a 10-3 record. A three-star recruit, he committed to Oklahoma State and was expected to have a breakout 2021, but he was lost for the season because of injury. He returned healthy for a sixth season in 2022 and set career bests as a receiver. Johnson is at his best on vertical routes, where he can tempo corners and show off his wheels down the field. He catches the ball cleanly with the tracking and body control to make necessary adjustments. Hands-on coverage can disrupt his release and route cadence, and he struggles to play through it. Overall, Johnson proved his big-time speed and fluid athleticism at his pro day, but his lack of size and physicality will be more noticeable versus NFL competition.

SUMMARY: Cephus Johnson III became the starting quarterback at Davidson High late in his junior year and earned All-State honors as a senior, setting several school passing records. A two-star recruit, he stayed close to home at South Alabama but struggled in his first year as a starter and transferred after the season. At FCS SE Louisiana, he spent two years as a backup and part-time receiver before becoming the full-time starting quarterback as a senior in 2022. Johnson is a good-sized athlete with a strong arm and run instincts to create plays with the ball in his hands. He frequently broke tackles on tape due to his body strength and footwork to force complicated angles. With only three career college receptions, he is unproven as route runner and pass catcher. Overall, Johnson is in the mold of former Buffalo quarterback Tyree Jackson, a big athlete whose best chance for an NFL career is a transition to wide receiver/tight end (and emergency quarterback).

SUMMARY: Tyler Adams earned All-State honors in football and baseball at Louisville High, leaving as the school's all-time leading receiver. He signed with Harvard to play football and was moving up the depth chart when he lost three consecutive seasons (2019-21) because of two ACL injuries and the COVID-canceled year. He transferred to Butler for his sixth season in 2022 and started the season opener just nine months removed from surgery, leading the team in receiving. Adams wins at the line with early burst and displays a pull-away gear on posts and fades that cornerbacks struggle to match. His shorter arms hinder his catch radius, but he tracks well over his shoulder and has surprisingly physical ball skills with a defender on his hip. He needs to refine his footwork to be more efficient at the top of routes. Overall, Adams has overcome multiple ACL tears, so durability is a concern, but he has high-end speed and focus through-contact that will stand out in NFL camp.

1. MICHAEL MAYER | Notre Dame 6044 | 249 lbs. | 3JR Independence, Ky. (Covington) 7/6/2001 (age 21.81) #87

BACKGROUND: Michael Mayer (pronounced like “Mayor”), who is the fourth of five children, was born and raised in Northern Kentucky, where he developed a love for basketball. He played youth football in middle school, but his dream was to one day play basketball for Kentucky. Mayer planned to play basketball and baseball at Covington Catholic High School but not football. However, the freshman football coach convinced him to join the team, and Mayer led the freshman squad to an undefeated season. He joined the varsity football team as a sophomore and started on offense (tight end) and defense (defensive end/linebacker) for three seasons. Mayer and his older brother (A.J.) led Covington Catholic to an undefeated season in 2017 (also won a basketball state title that same year). Over his sophomore and junior seasons, he combined for 60 catches for 1,261 yards and 15 touchdowns, adding 150 tackles, 10.0 sacks and five forced fumbles on defense. As a senior, Mayer led Covington Catholic to another undefeated 15-0 season and 5A state championship, winning MVP honors in the 2019 championship game. He finished his senior year with 50 receptions for 970 yards and 15 touchdowns, along with 99 tackles, 1.5 sacks, five forced fumbles and four interceptions. Mayer was named a U.S. Army All-American and Kentucky’s 2019 Mr. Football. In his three varsity seasons, Covington Catholic posted a 44-1 record with a pair of state titles. Mayer played three years of varsity basketball (didn’t play as a senior) and earned All-District and All-Region honors as a junior with 10.7 points and 7.4 rebounds per game.

A five-star recruit, Mayer was the No. 2 tight end in the 2020 recruiting class (behind Arik Gilbert) and the No. 1 recruit in Kentucky (No. 32 recruit nationally). As a sophomore, he received his first offer from Miami (Ohio), which was recruiting his brother. Mayer quickly landed on the radar of national powers like Alabama, Michigan and Ohio State, but he wasn’t interested in the recruiting process. He only took three official visits: Kentucky, Notre Dame and Penn State. Mayer developed a close relationship with James Franklin and Penn State was his No. 2 choice, but he fell in the love with the atmosphere at Notre Dame and committed to the Irish the summer prior to his junior year (Chip Long was his main recruiter). His father (Andy) played college baseball at Ohio. His older brother is the all-time leading passer at Covington Catholic and played quarterback at Miami (Ohio) for four seasons (2018-21) and is now at Arkansas State. His maternal grandfather (Dick Maile) was an All-American and All-SEC basketball player at LSU (1963-65), leading the team in scoring and rebounding all three seasons (1,284 career points). Mayer’s cousin (Luke Maile) is currently a major league catcher with the Cincinnati Reds (2015-22). Mayer elected to skip his senior season and the 2022 bowl game to enter the 2023 NFL Draft.

STRENGTHS: Boasts the big-boned frame and toughness desired for the position (NFL scout: “He’s built out of vibranium.”) ... outstanding play strength and body control at the catch point, securing the football with muscular mitts ... not shy using his body to physically leverage defenders mid-route ... comfortable leaving his feet to reel- in throws ... transitions his speed efficiently at the top of routes, using subtle push-and-sink movements to gain separation ... showed the full tight end route tree on tape, specializing in crossers, angles and seams (his favorite is the sail route vs. man) ... gets his money’s worth as a finisher with the ball in his hands ... can get his man moving in reverse when he connects in the run game ... flagged only once in 2022 (holding penalty) ... voted a 2022 team captain ... has a low-key personality but is hyper-competitive and the on-field killer instinct comes natural to him ... outstanding receiving production and rewrote the Notre Dame tight end record books (needed just 30 games to break Tyler Eifert’s career receptions record by a tight end) ... caught a pass in all 36 games he played the last three seasons, and his 180 career catches passed Jeff Samardzija for third most in school history.

WEAKNESSES: Average-speed player with tepid burst in his movements ... not a true field stretcher ... will have a focus drop here and there ... powers into contact after the catch, but I expected more missed tackles on his tape ... needs to better use angles to his advantage as a run blocker ... starts strong at contact in the run game but needs better sustain technique ... inconsistent base blocker in pass protection ... minimal special teams experience (lined up on field goal attempts as a freshman) ... missed only one game the last three seasons because of a groin strain (October 2021).

SUMMARY: A three-year starter at Notre Dame, Mayer was the primary target in offensive coordinator Tommy Rees’ scheme, splitting his snaps inline (61.9 percent) and detached (38.1 percent). At a program known for producing NFL tight ends (14 Irish players have been drafted at the position since 2001), he is the most prolific tight end in school history, setting Notre Dame positional records (both single-season and career) for catches, receiving yards and receiving. With his body control and ball skills, Mayer is productive underneath and as a big seam target, using his frame and fluidity to be a pass-catching weapon. Although he lacks suddenness in his footwork, he doesn’t strain as a route runner and there are no wasted movements. Overall, Mayer needs to become more consistent with his blocking technique and execution, but his controlled athleticism, play strength through contact and stellar intangibles raise his floor as a prospect. He projects as a traditional Y tight end with immediate NFL starting talent.

GRADE: 1st Round (No. 19 overall)

2. DALTON KINCAID | Utah 6035 | 246 lbs. | SSR Las Vegas, Nev. (Faith Lutheran) 10/18/1999 (age 23.53) #86

BACKGROUND: Dalton Kincaid, the youngest of three children, grew up in Las Vegas and played every sport he could, including baseball, soccer, skiing, snowboarding and flag football (his mother didn’t want him playing tackle football). But his focus was always on basketball, and he led his AAU team to a national championship. He played freshman football and volleyball as a sophomore, but basketball was his primary sport his first three years of high school. Towards the end of his junior year, Kincaid transferred to Faith Lutheran High School (a smaller private school) and planned to only play basketball, but his friends convinced him to join the football team for his senior year. Playing wide receiver at 6-foot-5 and 200 pounds, Kincaid earned first team All-Conference and second team All-State honors in 2017 with 37 receptions for 745 yards and eight touchdowns. As a senior on the basketball team, he averaged 11.5 points, 7.5 rebounds and 2.5 assists.

A no-star recruit, Kincaid wasn’t ranked by the online recruiting services in the 2018 recruiting class. Initially, he wasn’t planning to play college sports and considered enrolling at Colorado State as a student to study abroad. But several smaller programs started reaching out and college football became a possibility. Kincaid signed with San Diego, a non-scholarship FCS team, as a tight end. After two productive seasons, he explored transferring to the FBS level for the challenge and to be put on scholarship. Because of the pandemic, there was uncertainty with his transfer destinations, but Kincaid signed with Utah in August 2020 and was declared immediately eligible. He later took advantage of the extra year of eligibility granted by the NCAA because of the pandemic and returned to the Utes in 2022 for his fifth season. Kincaid opted out of the 2022 bowl game because of injury. He accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl but chose to bow out to continue healing his injury.

PRO DAY	6037	244	32 1/2	10 1/8	75 1/4	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	- (no workout – back)

STRENGTHS: Long, loose athlete with an adequate frame ... uses lateral agility and flexible shoulders to quickly release off the line and accelerates into his routes ... outstanding focus to isolate the football and catch the ball cleanly ... comfortable adjusting mid-air and expanding his catch radius, showing unwavering trust in his ball skills ... catches well in stride and stays balanced through contact (eight catches of 25-plus yards in 2022) ... quickly collects himself to force overpursuit or make the first man miss (one of only three FBS tight ends with 16-plus forced missed tackles in 2022) ... his dynamic speed cuts out of breaks creates interference/holding calls for the defense ... willing and functional run blocker ... shows the play speed to fit, hook and seal on cross-formation blocks ... received positive character feedback from his coaches and was a member of Utah’s leadership council ... had a career performance versus USC in 2022 with 16 receptions (on 16 targets) and 234 yards – his 16 catches was the most by an FBS player in 2022 ... only Georgia’s Brock Bowers had more catches and receiving yards in 2022 among FBS tight ends.

WEAKNESSES: Slender frame for the position and doesn’t have desired bulk ... must continue developing his core strength ... doesn’t have a strong blocking base and finds himself upright and off-balance ... reaches his landmarks, but his body angles are inconsistent when working up a level or pulling on perimeter runs ... messy pass-pro mechanics, often overextending, dropping his eyes and losing control ... penalized four times as a senior (three false starts, one holding) ... will round off his routes and lean into breaks, telegraphing his intentions ... missed time as a senior because of multiple injuries, including a shoulder (October 2022) and thoracic injury (November 2022), which also sidelined him for the Senior Bowl and combine.

SUMMARY: A two-year starter at Utah, Kincaid was an F tight end in offensive coordinator Andy Ludwig’s offense. An FCS transfer, he became the main target in the Utes’ offense as a senior after Brant Kuithe was injured and led all FBS tight ends in receiving yards (74.2) and receptions (5.8) per game, just ahead of Notre Dame’s Michael Mayer in both categories (67.4 and 5.6, respectively). With his basketball background, Kincaid has fluid movement skills and flashes the short-area quickness to open stride and accelerate in and out of his breaks. He is a natural ball winner and shows confidence in his hands, doing most of his damage when catching the ball on the move (remarkable 35-to-4 touchdown-to-drop ratio in college). Overall, Kincaid is still developing his play strength and consistency as a blocker, but he is an above-average pass catcher with the burst, body control and ball skills to be a weapon in the slot. He projects as a playmaking “move” tight end in the NFL.

GRADE: 1st Round (No. 20 overall)

3. LUKE MUSGRAVE | Oregon State 6057 | 253 lbs. | 4SR Bend, Ore. (Senior) 9/2/2000 (age 22.65) #88

BACKGROUND: Lucas “Luke” Musgrave, who has a younger brother, grew up in Vancouver, Wash. (north of Portland near the Oregon-Washington border) where he started skiing at age 5. (His mother, Amy, was on the U.S. Developmental ski team in the 1980s). At age 14, he won the overall title at the Pacific Northwest Buddy Werner Championship for the Mt. Hood Race team, sweeping the three major races: Super-G (52.58 seconds), Slalom (45.94) and Giant Slalom (1:03.68). Musgrave also played football, lacrosse and track at the youth levels. His family moved to Bend, Ore. in 2014 and Musgrave enrolled at Bend Senior High School, where he was a two-year varsity letterman. A quarterback and defensive back as a freshman, the coaches moved him to wide receiver on offense and later to tight end and defensive end when he got up to 230 pounds as a junior. Despite missing the final two games of the 2018 season (concussion), Musgrave earned first team All-Class at tight end and defensive end as a senior with a team-best 31 catches for 563 yards and four touchdowns; he added 42 tackles. He was a three-year letterman in lacrosse and earned first team All-League as a sophomore and junior. Musgrave was a champion alpine ski racer and also lettered in track (sprints, relays, throws and jumps). He set personal bests in the 100-meters (11.25), 200-meters (23.43), shot put (40 feet 11.25 inches), javelin (100-5), long jump (22-1) and triple jump (44-4.25), which ranked top-five at the 2019 state championships.

A three-star recruit, Musgrave was the No. 37 tight end in the 2019 recruiting class and the No. 5 recruit in Oregon. Since he did not play varsity until his junior year, he wasn’t well-known on the recruiting trail until standout performances at summer camps prior to his senior year. Musgrave received offers from both Oregon schools, and he surprised many by choosing the hometown feel of Oregon State over Oregon (where he had family connections). His younger brother (Colt), who was also a champion skier, was a three-star linebacker and signed with Idaho in the 2021 recruiting class. His dad (Doug) was an All-American high school quarterback in the Denver-area and signed with Michigan (1989) before transferring to Oregon (1990-92) and later attended medical school, where he became an orthopedic hand surgeon. Luke’s uncle (Bill) was a four-year starting quarterback at Oregon (1987-90) and fourth-round pick (No. 106 overall) in the 1991 NFL Draft by the Dallas Cowboys. He played seven seasons in the NFL before becoming an assistant coach the last 25 years, including eight different stints as an offensive coordinator at the college or NFL level: Philadelphia Eagles (1998), Carolina Panthers (1999-2000), University of Virginia (2001-02), Jacksonville Jaguars (2003-04), Minnesota Vikings (2011-13), Oakland Raiders (2015-16), Denver Broncos (2017-18) and Cal (2020-22). Musgrave accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl.

STRENGTHS: Tall, limber frame with a massive wingspan ... impressive one-step acceleration to quickly reach his top-end speed (his 1.54-second 10-yard split led all tight ends at the combine) ... loose flexibility in his lower body and hips to stem defenders and create a step of separation out of his breaks ... races to his landmarks as a route runner or works back to help give his quarterback a target ... above-average hand-eye coordination to fluidly spear the football away from his body mid-motion ... stretches out his stride to be a RAC playmaker in the open field ... physical hands as a blocker and at the top of routes, knocking defenders off-balance ... efficiently sets a foundation as a blocker and fires into his target ... excellent blocking leverage (stationary and on the move) and stays balanced through contact ... has worked hard to improve his technical approach as a blocker ... his coaches call him a “team-first guy” and “coach pleaser” who doesn’t want to let down his teammates ... has special teams experience, including a blocked punt as a junior, which he returned for a touchdown.

WEAKNESSES: Unnecessarily relies on his body at times to finish catches (2-to-9 touchdown-to-drop ratio in his career) ... will play in overdrive at the catch point, leading to drops ... inconsistent results on tight-windowed throws and when finishing through contact ... urgent route runner but would benefit from improved tempo ... gets his weight too far out in front as a blocker and can be tossed ... his angles in the run game can be more consistent ... medical feedback will be important after he missed the final 11 games of his final season because of a left knee injury (September 2022); also missed the final two games of his senior year in high school because of a concussion (November 2018).

SUMMARY: A two-year starter at Oregon State, Musgrave was a Y tight end in offensive coordinator Brian Lindgren’s run-heavy scheme, lining up both inline and in the slot. After two seasons as a backup behind two future NFL players Noah Togiai (Philadelphia Eagles) and Teagan Quitoriano (Houston Texans), he became a starter as a junior, but his targets were limited in the Beavers’ run-first offense and he missed almost all his senior year because of injury. An impressive size/speed athlete, Musgrave runs like a gazelle (elite high school track numbers for his size), and his lacrosse and skiing backgrounds translate to football with his core strength and hip fluidity as both a pass catcher and blocker. He blocks with outstanding body control and leverage to be a physical edge setter and engage defenders at the second and third levels, although he still needs to improve his sustain skills and steadiness as a pass blocker (only 5.9 percent of his career snaps on offense came in pass protection). Overall, Musgrave must continue to build up his football resume and overall consistency, but he is a high-level athlete with the route running and blocking talent to be a productive starting combo tight end in the NFL. He should be the first-ever Oregon State tight end drafted in the top 100 picks.

GRADE: 1st-2nd Round (No. 29 overall)

4. DARNELL WASHINGTON | Georgia 6065 | 264 lbs. | 3JR Las Vegas, Nev. (Desert Pines) 8/17/2001 (age 21.69) #0

BACKGROUND: Darnell Washington, the youngest of eight children (five boys, three girls), grew up in Las Vegas with his mother (Katrina Graves). The family was often on the move (every “four to five months,” according to Washington) and sometimes homeless because of financial hardships. (Washington also spent three years in a foster home.) He played football throughout his childhood, but he didn’t play organized football until he was age 11 and didn’t receive consistent coaching because of how often he changed schools (his most consistent coach was his older brother, Ezekiel). Washington attended Basic Academy in Henderson as a freshman before moving to east Las Vegas as a sophomore and transferring to Desert Pines High School. At 240 pounds, he saw varsity reps as a tight end and defensive end and helped lead Desert Pines to the 2017 3A state championship with 19 catches for 309 yards. As a senior, Washington helped the offense average 43.6 points per game with 31 receptions for 586 yards (18.9 average) and four touchdowns, earning Under Armour All-American honors. On defense, he posted 15 tackles, 4.0 tackles for loss and one interception. Washington lettered in track as a sophomore and captured the 3A state championship in the shot put. He played basketball and helped Desert Pines win the 2017-18 state championship as a sophomore with a 21-9 record. As the starting power forward, Washington averaged 11.0 points and 12.0 rebounds per game as a junior. He also played the bass in the orchestra.

A five-star recruit, Washington was the No. 2 athlete in the 2020 recruiting class (behind Drew Sanders) and the No. 1 recruit in Nevada. He ranked as the No. 23 recruit overall, which would have made him the No. 2-ranked tight end (behind only Arik Gilbert). Washington received his first scholarship offer from Arizona State during his sophomore season. He collected almost 40 offers, including from Clemson, Michigan, Ohio State, Oregon, Texas, USC and several others. In the end, Washington committed to Georgia over Alabama, Florida, Miami and Tennessee. He was one of four five-star recruits in the Bulldogs’ 2020 recruiting class, joining Kelee Ringo, Broderick Jones and Jalen Carter. He has a four-year-old daughter (Laila), who was born during Washington’s junior year in high school. Washington elected to skip his senior season and enter the 2023 NFL Draft.

PRO DAY	6074	272	34 3/8	10 5/8	83 3/8	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	(position drills only – choice)

STRENGTHS: Big-boned athlete with a toned frame and wingspan comparable to a basketball forward ... massive, accepting hands and comfortably adjusts to throws away from his chest ... his drop rate decreased each season (registered only two drops on 43 targets in 2022) ... has the size to naturally post up defenders and win in crowded catch points with his focus and play strength ... eats up grass quickly with his long strides as a catch-and-run target ... plays with short-area agility to quickly adjust his route path (his 4.08-second short shuttle was third best among all participants at the combine) ... determined runner with the ball in his hands ... dominant-level ability as a run blocker, walling off lanes or latching and driving defenders from the play ... controlled on backside and cross-formation blocks ... comes to balance and squares up his target as a rangy lead blocker, destroying defensive backs to spring outside runs ... looks to manhandle defenders, and his play personality matches his intimidating size ... received half the number of targets as Brock Bowers in 2022 but embraced his role and played with consistent effort.

WEAKNESSES: His speed is more build-up than immediate ... moves with high hips, which can slow his change of direction ... needs to get his head turned quicker to make himself more available for quarterbacks ... ran a basic tight end route tree in college ... will have late drops when he doesn’t put the ball away quickly enough ... big target for tacklers and will have a tougher time breaking tackles in the NFL with his average contact balance ... bodies up edge rushers in pass protection but needs to rely more on blocking angles ... very physical run blocker but needs to become more disciplined (flagged five times in 2022, including personal fouls for a blindside block, low block and illegal use of hands) ... missed the first four games of his sophomore season because of a foot injury suffered in practice (August 2021), requiring surgery; knocked out of the College Football Playoff semifinal game against Ohio State with a left ankle injury (December 2022).

SUMMARY: A three-year starter at Georgia, Washington was a traditional Y tight end in offensive coordinator Todd Monken’s offense, lining up primarily inline (66.2 percent) over his career. His college receiving stats (45 catches in 36 games) look more like single-season production as he was underutilized as a pass catcher, primarily because of Bowers’ impact and Washington’s value as a sixth offensive lineman. The leanest 270ish pounds I have ever seen on a football field, Washington executes different kinds of blocks with his athletic range and the physical hands to control, drive and steer defenders. As a receiver, he gives his quarterback a massive catching target and swallows the football, although his long legs can get tied up on redirection routes or when making sharp cuts out of breaks. Overall, Washington will need time to mature in areas, but he offers a unique set of skills to be a weapon as an NFL blocker as he continues to ascend as a pass catcher, especially in the red zone. He is a one-of-one talent with fascinating pro potential because of his rare length, play strength and body flexibility at his size.

GRADE: 1st-2nd Round (No. 30 overall)

5. TUCKER KRAFT | South Dakota State 6046 | 254 lbs. | 4JR Timber Lake, S.D. (Timber Lake) 11/3/2000 (age 22.48) #85

BACKGROUND: Tucker Kraft, the youngest of three boys, was born and raised in Timber Lake (a small farming town with a population of just over 500) and grew up playing multiple sports, including basketball and football. He attended Timber Lake High School, where he starred in nine-man football as a three-year starter. After playing special teams as a freshman, Kraft was the starting quarterback (primarily a run-first wildcat QB) as a sophomore while also playing defensive end and linebacker on defense and punting. He moved to running back as a junior and rushed for over 1,600 yards. As a senior, Kraft posted 1,405 rushing yards and 24 touchdowns, adding 132 receiving yards and 56 tackles on defense. He finished his prep career with 3,130 rushing yards and 50 touchdowns plus 142 tackles and 8.0 sacks (also had five passing touchdowns). Kraft lettered in basketball (he initially hoped to play college basketball instead of football) and earned second team All-State honors, averaging 14.2 points, 8.0 rebounds and 2.0 steals per game.

A no-star recruit, Kraft wasn’t ranked by the online recruiting services. He didn’t have any scholarship offers after his junior year at Timber Creek, but he attended several camps and started to receive attention from college programs. Kraft received offers from several Division II programs, followed by South Dakota State, his first Division I offer. He committed almost immediately and became the first commit in the Jackrabbits’ 2019 recruiting class. However, Kraft visited Iowa State and started to draw looks from several FBS schools. He received an offer from Wyoming and was ready to decommit from South Dakota State, but the coaches convinced him to stay close to home. After the 2021 season, Kraft received six-figure NIL offers to enter the transfer portal from several national programs, including Alabama, but he again stayed loyal to the relationships built at South Dakota State. His father (Doug) was a record-breaking NAIA wide receiver, a three-time All-American at Huron University (1992-95) and had a tryout with the Miami Dolphins. The field at Timber Lake is named after Doug, who died in June 2013 while piloting a crop duster. Tucker's older brother (Cody) played tight end at Division II Northern State (2012-17). Kraft is an early childhood major and plans to be a school superintendent and coach after his playing days to make an impact with children. Kraft elected to skip his senior season and enter the 2023 NFL Draft.

STRENGTHS: Looks the part of an NFL tight end with adequate length ... impressive agility and fluidity for his size, with the ability to drop his hips and move laterally to shake defenders ... quickly enters his routes with the speed to win vertical seams ... adjusts to the football naturally with reliable hands ... quick pluck-and-transition skills without slowing his stride ... effective in the quick game ... frequently tramples defensive backs and breaks the first tackle attempt with his contact balance ... above-average strength in the weight room and on the field (broke the South Dakota State power-clean record) ... fits his blocks and drives his feet to widen the edge or torpedo his target as a lead blocker ... confident competitor with accountable character (my “BS meter” didn’t go off when talking to him) ... outstanding toughness and came back sooner than expected from his 2022 ankle injury.

WEAKNESSES: A work in progress as a route runner ... must show better rhythm on timing patterns ... occasionally rounds the top of his routes and needs to develop better savvy with his footwork to deceive coverage ... too confident in his contested-catch abilities and needs to continue working to open space ... guilty of running before he secures the football, leading to drops ... wasn’t asked to match up with defensive ends on the edge in pass protection, but he has the base strength to hold up ... missed a chunk of his final season because of a right ankle injury suffered in the opener vs. Iowa (September 2022), which required a tigh trope procedure (MRI showed sprains in “hard-to-reach places”); suffered a ligament strain in his left knee vs. UNI (February 2021) and missed three games.

SUMMARY: A three-year starter at South Dakota State, Kraft was a hybrid tight end (inline, wing and slot) in the Jackrabbits’ balanced offense. After passing on lucrative NIL offers from programs like Alabama, he returned to Brookings in 2022 for what NFL scouts expected to be his breakout season, but an ankle injury in the first quarter of the opener vs. Iowa curtailed that plan (he still returned and helped the program win the 2022 FCS National Championship). As a pass catcher, Kraft is an outstanding catch-and-go creator with fluid adjustment skills and balanced feet. As a blocker, he might not be polished, but he gets after it with the body control and desire to sustain and finish blocks. Since 1976, South Dakota State has only produced two top-100 draft picks and both were tight ends (Dallas Goedert, the No. 49 pick in 2018 and Steve Heiden, No. 69 in 1999); Kraft should be the third. Overall, Kraft needs development time to refine his route running and blocking techniques, but he is big, strong and athletic with the ball skills and blocking tenacity to evolve into an NFL starter. His play style and talent are reminiscent of Foster Moreau.

GRADE: 2nd Round (No. 51 overall)

6. SAM LAPORTA | Iowa

6032 | 245 lbs. | 4SR

Highland, Ill. (Highland)

#84

BACKGROUND: Samuel “Sam” LaPorta, who has three sisters, grew up in Highland in southern Illinois (30 miles east of St. Louis). He was a four-year letterman (and three-year team captain) as a wide receiver and defensive back at Highland High School, helping the program to a 40-6 record over that span. As a junior, LaPorta earned first team All-State honors with 67 receptions for 1,387 yards and 20 touchdowns, adding seven interceptions to earn first team All-Conference on defense. He again took home first team All-State honors as a senior receiver with 68 catches for 1,457 yards and 19 touchdowns. On defense, LaPorta finished his senior year with 53 tackles and seven interceptions. He finished his prep career ranked second in Illinois high school history in receiving touchdowns (50) and third in receiving yards (3,793). LaPorta lettered four years in basketball and earned third team All-State honors as a senior, averaging 15.1 points per game. He also lettered in baseball (shortstop) and two years in track. He participated in the long jump (16’3.5”), 110-meter hurdles (15.40), discus (140’2”) and shot put (44’6.5”).

A three-star recruit, LaPorta was the No. 42 tight end in the 2019 recruiting class and the No. 19 recruit in Illinois. Despite his productive high school career, he went overlooked throughout the recruiting process as a 205-pound receiver. After initially receiving only FCS attention, MAC schools Bowling Green and Central Michigan took notice and gave LaPorta his first two FBS offers. In the final weeks before signing day, Iowa entered the picture and invited LaPorta for a school visit after seeing his athleticism on the basketball court. Iowa became his third FBS offer and he signed with the Hawkeyes as a tight end. He comes from an athletic family: his father (Joe) played football at William Jewell; his mother (Staci) played basketball and softball at Rend Lake College; his older sister (Olivia) played college volleyball at Fordham (2015-18); his older sister (Alex) played college basketball at Missouri-St. Louis (2017-22), where she set the school record for career rebounds (1,130), and currently plays professionally in the Dutch Women’s Basketball League; his younger sister (Bella) is a sophomore volleyball player at William Jewell. LaPorta was invited to the 2023 Senior Bowl but declined.

PRO DAY	6032	246	32	10 1/4	76 1/2	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	16

STRENGTHS: Adequate frame and build for the position ... displays agile footwork and short-area quickness at the top of routes ... fluid athlete with excellent sink/redirect to plant and snap on pivot or square routes ... large, accepting hands ... above-average body control adjusting to throws ... showed improved RAC ability as a senior (only FBS tight end with 20-plus forced missed tackles in 2022) ... comfortable working the seam or middle of the field ... physical hands to escape contact at the line ... penalized only once in his career (touchdown celebration in 2021) ... voted a senior captain and NFL scouts praise his character (LaPorta told NFL scouts he returned for his senior season at Iowa because it was important for him to be a captain) ... his coaches say his on-field production and impact are a “direct reflection” of the work he puts in (NFL scout: “Sam isn’t quite (Noah) Fant or (T.J.) Hockenson, but he’s tougher than both of them. ... He competes like (George) Kittle.”) ... strong college production and became the first tight end in school history to lead the team in receptions and receiving yards in back-to-back seasons.

WEAKNESSES: Ordinary length and long speed for the position ... mixed results as a blocker ... head ducker as a lead blocker and looks to slam into contact instead of latching and controlling ... must improve his angles as a run/pass blocker ... doesn’t have a secondary gear to maintain separation from pursuit ... inconsistent finishing skills when asked to climb the ladder or win 50-50 balls ... focus drops are a part of his game ... finished his career with a dismal 14-to-5 drop-to-touchdown ratio ... suffered a torn meniscus in his right knee as a senior (November 2022) and missed one game but worked his way back for the bowl game.

SUMMARY: A four-year starter at Iowa, LaPorta was the featured target in offensive coordinator Brian Ferentz’s offense, evenly splitting his snaps between inline/backfield (49.4 percent) and slot/wide (50.6 percent). At a program known for producing NFL tight ends, he became just the second Hawkeye to be named the Big Ten’s Tight End of the Year and finished as the program’s all-time receptions leader (153) at the position. Although he is more quick than fast as a route runner, LaPorta makes himself available mid-route because of his lower-body quickness and athletic fluidity. As a blocker, his functional strength and consistency must improve, but Iowa asks its tight ends to do everything (LaPorta even took three snaps out of the wildcat) and scouts rave about his competitive demeanor. Overall, LaPorta is an average point-of-attack blocker and his lack of length hurts his success rate in contested situations, but he plays with outstanding quickness and body rhythm with soft hands as a pass catcher. He is in the Austin Hooper mold and projects as a low-end TE1 or high-end TE2 on an NFL depth chart.

GRADE: 2nd-3rd Round (No. 64 overall)

7. LUKE SCHOONMAKER | Michigan 6052 | 251 lbs. | 5SR Hamden, Conn. (Hamden Hall) 9/28/1998 (age 24.58) #86

BACKGROUND: Luke Schoonmaker, who is the oldest of four children, grew up in Old Saybrook, a coastal city in southern Connecticut along the Long Island Sound, and started playing football in fifth grade. He originally attended Xavier High School in Connecticut, where he played quarterback for three seasons and was teammates with Will Levis. As a junior, Schoonmaker lacerated his spleen in the third game and missed the rest of the 2015 season. In order to repeat his junior year, he transferred to Hamden Hall, where he was coached by Joe Linta, who is better known as a high-profile football agent with clients like Joe Flacco and Kyle Juszczyk. As a junior, Schoonmaker led Hamden to an undefeated 11-0 season and the No. 1 ranking in New England. He finished the 2016 season with 59.8 percent completions (55-for-92) for 878 yards with five touchdowns and five interceptions and added 623 rushing yards, 13 rushing scores, 111 receiving yards and two receiving touchdowns. As a senior, he transitioned to more of a pass-catcher role and finished with 22 receptions for 343 yards and one touchdown while also making plays passing (18-for-37 for 201 yards and two touchdowns), rushing (34 carries for 306 yards and two touchdowns) and on defense as a cornerback (three interceptions). Schoonmaker helped Hamden to back-to-back conference championships his junior and senior seasons. He also lettered in baseball.

A three-star recruit, Schoonmaker was the No. 39 tight end in the 2018 recruiting class and the No. 3 recruit in Connecticut behind Levis (Penn State/Kentucky) and cornerback Josh Jobe (Alabama). He received offers from Connecticut and several MAC programs but wasn’t highly recruited. Through Linta’s friendship with former Michigan defensive coordinator Don Brown, Schoonmaker found his way onto Michigan’s radar, which eventually led to a scholarship offer. Following in the footsteps of former Wolverines like Ben Mason, Andrew Stueber and Tarik Black, Schoonmaker continued a recent Connecticut-to-Michigan pipeline. His father (Scott), who is currently the school superintendent at North Branford, played college basketball at Assumption College (1982-86) and was one of the top rebounders in school history before playing professionally for one season in Brazil. Luke’s younger brother (Jack) was a walk-on defensive lineman at Division II Saint Anselm (2019-20) and is currently a 2nd lieutenant in the Marine Corps. His youngest siblings are twins: his sister (Lily) was an All-State high school lacrosse player in 2022 and his brother (Mark) is a standout tight end and defensive end at Hamden. Schoonmaker accepted his invitation to the 2023 East-West Shrine Bowl but was unable to participate because of his shoulder injury.

PRO DAY	6052	252	33	9 3/8	79	-	-	-	35 1/2	-	4.32	6.81	-	(stood on combine runs, broad)

STRENGTHS: Natural size/speed athlete with a solid build ... smooth, punctual route runner and coordinated in and out of his breaks ... lulls defenders with his stride length ... releases cleanly off the line and into his routes ... terrific body control to adjust his target window and quickly become a ball carrier after the catch ... flashes strength in his hands to physically move defenders from the spot ... showed his agility as a pass blocker (limited sample size) ... efficiently engages linebackers and keep them busy to spring runs ... improved use of angles as a stalk blocker ... looked comfortable aligning all over the offense ... only modest college production, but he stepped up as a senior because of injuries.

WEAKNESSES: Better athleticism in his routes than after the catch ... missed tackles were rare on his film, limiting his RAC plays ... inconsistent tracking skills with smaller hands and will use his body to trap the ball ... needs to get his eyes to the quarterback quicker out of breaks to make himself more available ... fazed by traffic and focus is disrupted in a crowd ... quickly finds himself upright when fitting blocks ... will turn 25 as an NFL rookie (spent five years in high school after repeating his junior year because of mono and a lacerated spleen, which ruptured when he rushed back) ... missed time in his final season because of an AC joint sprain to his left shoulder (December 2022) and then injured his right shoulder in the College Football Playoff semifinal vs. TCU; wasn’t able to finish his pro day because of a right leg injury (March 2023) ... limited special teams experience ... his career receiving production could be mistaken for a single season.

SUMMARY: A two-year starter at Michigan, Schoonmaker was a Y tight end in head coach Jim Harbaugh’s power-spread offense, lining up primarily inline/wing and occasionally in the slot. Originally a left-handed quarterback in high school, he became a starter as a junior in Ann Arbor, and his role expanded as a senior when Erick All missed the 2022 season because of injury. As a pass catcher, Schoonmaker is efficient in his routes and catches the ball well enough, but he is limited after the catch (only four of his 52 receptions the past two seasons went for 25-plus yards). As a blocker, he showed improvements each season and does enough to keep defenders busy, although his pass-pro reps were limited. Overall, Schoonmaker is only average in most areas, but he has the size, speed and strength to be a solid possession receiver and positional blocker. His well-rounded game will help him become a steady No. 2 (and potential No. 1) tight end for an NFL team.

GRADE: 3rd Round (No. 90 overall)

8. BRENTON STRANGE | Penn State 6037 | 253 lbs. | 4JR Parkersburg, W.Va. (Parkersburg) 12/27/2000 (age 22.33) #86

BACKGROUND: Brenton Strange, who is one of two boys in his family, grew up near the Ohio-West Virginia border. He enrolled at Parkersburg High School and was a four-year varsity letterman on offense (tight end) and defense (defensive back). After earning honorable mention All-State honors as a sophomore, he garnered first team All-State and All-Conference honors his final two seasons. As a junior captain, Strange posted 57 receptions for 938 yards and 12 touchdowns on offense and 95 tackles, 9.0 tackles for loss and three defensive scores in 2017. As a senior captain, he set the school receiving records with 65 catches for 1,083 yards and eight touchdowns. On defense, Strange posted 65 tackles, 10.0 tackles for loss, 6.0 sacks and three interceptions. He finished his prep career as the most accomplished pass catcher in school history (186 receptions for 2,660 and 23 touchdowns). Strange also lettered all four seasons at Parkersburg in basketball and earned third team All-State honors as a junior.

A four-star recruit, Strange was the No. 14 tight end in the 2019 recruiting class and the No. 3 recruit in West Virginia. After his junior season, he collected offers from Cincinnati, Marshall, Purdue and Wake Forest. Strange attended an Ohio State camp in June 2018 and earned a scholarship offer, then did the same thing a week later at Notre Dame and again at Penn State. Midway through his senior year, he committed to the Nittany Lions over the Buckeyes and Irish, and he enrolled early in January 2019. Strange elected to skip his senior season and enter the 2023 NFL Draft.

PRO DAY	-	249	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	(weight only – choice)

STRENGTHS: Muscular, athletic build ... highly competitive after the catch with the balance to keep his feet or barrel through contact ... shows a knack for creating separation and settling down in zones ... natural hand tracking outside his frame without breaking stride (only one drop on 38 targets in 2022) ... comfortable catching passes on the perimeter or over the middle ... feisty run blocker and able to generate power through his hips when he stays low and runs his feet ... effective as a lead blocker or puller on counters ... digs out safeties and works aggressively out in space (see: 2022 Auburn tape) ... was a regular on kickoff return and punt coverages ... versatile experience lining up in the backfield, inline or in the slot/outside.

WEAKNESSES: His lack of length is evident on tape (the only tight end at the Combine with a sub-76-inch wingspan) ... catches the ball well through contact, but his overall catch radius is average ... requires route refinement if he is going to uncover versus NFL man-to-man defenders ... lacks desired fluidity through his hips and body, limiting his efficiency at the top of routes ... his blocking fundamentals don’t consistently match his blocking persistence ... usually stays square as a pass blocker, but his base foundation develops cracks and narrows versus high-level rushers (see: 2022 Ohio State tape) ... underwhelming statistical resume (averaged only 2.3 catches and 24.4 yards per start in his college career).

SUMMARY: A three-year starter, Strange was a move tight end in offensive coordinator Mike Yurcich’s RPO-based scheme, lining up mostly detached or on the wing. He put several splashy plays on film and has a nose for the end zone. However, he wasn’t a highly targeted weapon for the Nittany Lions with only four games of 50-plus receiving yards (zero 100-plus receiving yard games) in 31 career starts. Strange has terrific hand strength and focus to snatch the football and does his best work on scramble plays or horizontal runway routes (drags, crossers, etc.). He is highly physical in all aspects of his game, including as a blocker, but his technique will need to catch up to his competitive nature for him to be effective at the next level. Overall, Strange doesn’t offer ideal size or refinement as a blocker or pass catcher, but he shows outstanding desire and functional athleticism in both areas. He is a well-rounded H-back prospect with the talent to be a better pro than college player.

GRADE: 3rd-4th Round (No. 97 overall)

9. DAVIS ALLEN | Clemson 6057 | 245 lbs. | 4SR Calhoun, Ga. (Calhoun) 2/3/2001 (age 22.23) #84

BACKGROUND: Robert “Davis” Allen, who is one of three children, grew up in Calhoun (70 miles north of Atlanta), where he was a multi-sport standout from a young age. He attended Calhoun High School, where he played with future Clemson teammates Baylon and Brannon Spector. He played both ways as a linebacker and slot receiver and earned second team All-Region honors on defense as a sophomore. As a junior, Allen helped Calhoun to a 14-1 record and the 2017 3A state championship, finishing with 155 tackles and 12.0 tackles for loss on defense and 13 receptions for 174 yards and two touchdowns on offense. As a senior, Allen led Calhoun to a 12-2 record in 2018 and earned first team All-State, All-Region and All-Area as a linebacker while adding 2018 County Defensive Player of the Year honors. He earned All-County honors in baseball (his fastball hung around 88 MPH) and basketball (15.0 points, 8.2 rebounds and 2.6 blocks per game as a junior).

A three-star recruit, Allen was the No. 39 tight end in the 2019 recruiting class and the No. 82 recruit in Georgia. His recruitment picked up after his junior season with several schools looking at him on offense and others on defense. Allen received offers from Duke, Minnesota, Ole Miss, Vanderbilt and Virginia Tech. But he had his sights set on Clemson after visiting the campus and committed shortly after receiving his offer the summer before his senior year. Davis was one of the lowest-ranked recruits in the Tigers’ 2019 class (No. 25 out of 29), five spots behind Brannon Spector. His father (John) played linebacker at Georgia and was a senior captain in 1991. His older brother (Reed) was a defensive end at Calhoun and signed with Air Force in 2012. Davis proposed to his fiancé (Erin Kelly) on Christmas Eve 2022. He graduated with his degree in marketing (December 2022). Allen accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl.

STRENGTHS: Loose athlete for his large frame ... dependable pass catcher with outstanding track, adjust and finish skills ... looks comfortable spearing the ball away from his body ... elite concentration in crowded catch points ... never had more than one drop in any season with a career drop rate of only 3.3 percent ... purposeful in his route steps to leverage defenders and create passing windows ... adequate positional blocker to engage defenders with fundamentally-sound angles ... was a regular on kick return and punt coverages (501 special teams snaps and seven tackles in his career) ... voted a senior captain ... smart, tough-minded and battles through injuries (played in all 54 games the last four seasons).

WEAKNESSES: Average long speed ... ordinary burst at the top of routes, opening break points for defenders ... flashes contact balance, but his tape didn't show many broken tackles ... needs to continue filling out his frame and improving his play strength ... his inline power and hip snap need to be consistently better to execute versus NFL defensive ends ... inconsistent in pass protection and can be walked back when he doesn't set his anchor ... suffered a sprained AC joint in his right shoulder during Senior Bowl week (February 2023) but played through it, although he was unable to do bench press during the pre-draft process.

SUMMARY: A two-year starter at Clemson, Allen was a hybrid tight end in former offensive coordinator Brandon Streeter's scheme, lining up 50-50 between inline and detached. Although he wasn't a high-volume pass catcher in the Tigers' offense, he was productive when targeted, and his 12 career touchdown grabs ranks second best in school history among tight ends. As a pass catcher, Allen excels with his natural size, hand-eye coordination and adjustment skills to win at the catch point. He needs to continue strengthening his core to improve as a sustain player, but he executes as a positional blocker. Overall, Allen isn't overly dynamic as a receiver, but his body control and catch radius are among the best in this tight end draft class, and he shows real promise as a blocker. With his talent and character, he has intriguing development potential.

10. ZACK KUNTZ | Old Dominion 6073 | 255 lbs. | SSR Camp Hill, Pa. (Camp Hill) 6/6/1999 (age 23.89) #80

BACKGROUND: Zackary "Zack" Kuntz (Koo-ntz), the youngest of five children (four boys, one girl), was born in Harrisburg and grew up in nearby Camp Hill. He was a multi-sport standout throughout his youth, especially in basketball and football throughout his time at Good Shepherd Elementary and Camp Hill Middle School. Kuntz enrolled at Camp Hill High School, where he was a four-year varsity letterman as a tight end and defensive end. He was an immediate starter as a freshman and finished his first season with 47 catches for 658 yards and seven touchdowns, helping Camp Hill to the 2014 state championship. As a sophomore, Kuntz registered 49 catches for 793 yards and 11 touchdowns and led the team to its second consecutive state title. After missing the first half of his junior season with a foot injury, he posted 40 receptions for 1,060 yards and nine touchdowns as a senior captain, earning first team All-State and All-Conference honors on both offense and defense in 2017. Kuntz was a three-year letterman in both basketball and track. He won the 110-meter hurdles (14.47 seconds) at the 2017 state championship while also taking home several district titles, including a personal best in the 300-meter hurdles (39.80) and high jump (6 feet 4 inches).

A four-star recruit, Kuntz was the No. 4 tight end in the 2018 recruiting class and the No. 3 recruit in Pennsylvania (behind Micah Parsons and Phil Jurkovec). He was hoping to play basketball in college until his football recruitment blew up after his freshman season. Kuntz received offers from national programs like Alabama, LSU, Michigan, Notre Dame, Ohio State, Stanford and USC — and visited almost all of them multiple times. But family and geographical connections led him to Penn State (Camp Hill is a 90-minute drive from Penn State's campus). Kuntz was part of a high-profile 2018 recruiting class at Penn State that also included several current NFL players like Parsons (Dallas Cowboys), Odafe Oweh (Baltimore Ravens), Jahan Dotson (Washington Commanders) and Pat Freiermuth (Pittsburgh Steelers). After only three catches in three seasons with the Nittany Lions, Kuntz entered the transfer portal after the 2020 season. He had several transfer options, but the coaching connections led him to Old Dominion. Ricky Rahne was the tight ends coach (2016-17) and offensive coordinator (2018-19) at Penn State before taking the ODU head coaching job in 2020. He also brought four other coaches from State College, so Kuntz was familiar with the people and offensive playbook. His father (Fran) played two years at the juco level before transferring to Maryland as a wide receiver (1984). His mother (Kitty) lettered in basketball, softball and track at Camp Hill. His older brother (Christian) played wide receiver at Penn State (2009-12). His older brother (Brandon) was a walk-on wide receiver at Penn State (2014) before transferring to Division II West Chester. His older sister (Anna) was a dual-sport college athlete, playing basketball and running track at West Chester (2012-16). Zack graduated with his degree in marketing from Penn State. Kuntz was unable to participate in a college all-star game because of a knee injury.

PRO DAY	6075	257	34 3/4	10 1/2	83	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	- (stood on Combine testing)

STRENGTHS: Freaky athletic traits ... turned heads with his combine testing and workout (his 40-inch vertical, 10-8 broad jump, 6.87 three-cone and 23 bench press reps all were No. 1 among tight ends) ... easily gets over the top of coverage (seam or outside) when he stretches out his stride ... willing to secure throws and take punishment over the middle ... exceptionally long with the frame to pack on more muscle ... very few drops on his film, and he has a catch radius that makes his quarterbacks appear more accurate than they are ... able to seal on down blocks and shows the potential to be an asset in the run game ... voted a senior captain ... described as a “blue-collar kid” and the “vocal and emotional” leader of the tight end room.

WEAKNESSES: Lacks desired bulk on his stretched-out frame, especially in his lower half ... struggles to leverage the point of attack as a blocker, especially in pass protection, because of a narrow base ... subpar play strength and needs better utilize his biomechanics to access his power potential ... relies too much on his body and wrists to finish catches ... inconsistent using his big body to shield defenders ... his tape should have more explosive plays for a receiver with his athleticism (only 48.2 percent of his receptions resulted in a first down or touchdown at Old Dominion) ... relies more on speed than technique as a route runner ... missed the second half of his senior season because of a dislocated knee cap (October 2022), which required surgery; missed the first half of his junior season in high school because of a preseason broken foot (August 2016).

SUMMARY: A two-year starter at Old Dominion, Kuntz was a hybrid tight end in head coach Ricky Rahne’s balanced offense, lining up mostly detached. After struggling to make headway on Penn State’s depth chart, he became a pass-catching weapon, when healthy, at ODU and put together a dominant combine performance (testing and position drills). With his long strides, Kuntz creates separation when given any type of runway, and he provides a sizeable target for his quarterback (his wingspan was larger than 43 of the 51 offensive linemen at the combine). However, he struggles to answer power and physicality, as both a receiver and blocker, because of his linear body and frenetic movements. Overall, Kuntz is unrefined as a route runner, blocker and pass catcher in traffic, but he has rare size/speed tools waiting to be cultivated. He is a developmental No. 3 tight end.

11. JOSH WHYLE | Cincinnati 6064 | 248 lbs. | SSR Cincinnati, Ohio (La Salle) 9/8/1999 (age 23.64) #81

BACKGROUND: Joshua “Josh” Whyle grew up in the Cincinnati suburb of Mount Airy and started playing sports at an early age. He attended La Salle High School, a Catholic, all-male school, where he was a four-year letterman. After playing wide receiver as a freshman and sophomore, Whyle played a hybrid receiver-tight end role his final two years. As a junior, he helped La Salle to its third straight Division II state championship with 40 receptions for 546 yards and six touchdowns, earning first team All-Conference honors. Whyle earned first team All-State, All-District and All-Conference as a senior, finishing the 2017 season with 37 catches for 442 yards and three touchdowns. La Salle posted a 50-8 record over Whyle’s four high school seasons. Whyle also lettered in basketball.

A three-star recruit, Whyle was the No. 19 tight end in the 2018 recruiting class and the No. 14 recruit in Ohio. He picked up several high-profile scholarship offers from all over the country, including Auburn, Georgia, Iowa, Kentucky, Oregon, TCU and Tennessee. However, Whyle has strong Cincinnati roots and grew up 10 minutes from campus. A month into his head coaching tenure, Luke Fickell offered Whyle in January 2017, and Whyle committed a few months later. He was ranked as the third-highest recruit in the Bearcats’ 2018 class. Whyle was leaning towards entering the 2022 NFL Draft but suffered a foot injury in the Cotton Bowl and returned for his fifth season. He accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl.

STRENGTHS: Good-sized athlete with a tapered waist and projectable frame ... gliding mover with above-average speed ... reads his triangle (WILL, corner, safety) well to uncover on option routes ... loose-hipped with the body control to extend and adjust to throws outside his body ... his catch radius gives him an advantage on end-zone fades ... willing blocker and showed improved control as a senior compared to his underclassman tape, especially as a stalk blocker ... doesn’t have great sustain but will throw his weight into linebackers and slow them down ... his senior season was the first time he maintained his weight at 250-plus pounds ... his coaches say he went from an immature kid who needed direction to an accountable senior captain who grew up each year on campus ... his 15 career touchdowns is the most by a tight end at Cincinnati.

WEAKNESSES: Shorter arms than expected for a player his size ... solid hands, but his tracking focus comes and goes, especially on the move (drags, crossers, etc.) ... his over-the-shoulder skills on fades are unpredictable ... inconsistent finisher in traffic and struggles to match the physicality of linebackers and safeties ... upright route runner and needs to improve his stem footwork and balance to better explode out of breaks ... doesn’t break tackles ... fits his blocks, but his technique falls apart when attempting to sustain ... injuries have been an issue for him: suffered a fractured collarbone during fall practice (August 2018) in his first season, requiring surgery and forcing him to redshirt; missed most of the 2019 season with several nagging injuries, including an ankle issue; suffered a Lisfranc injury to his left foot in the final minutes of the Cotton Bowl loss to Alabama (December 2021) ... mediocre production, and his best numbers came in 2020.

SUMMARY: A three-year starter at Cincinnati, Whyle was an F tight end (mostly boundary) and part of a rotation in former offensive coordinator Gino Guidugli’s spread RPO offense. A Cincinnati native, he passed on SEC and Big Ten offers to play for the Bearcats, although he wasn’t a focal point in the offense and never reached 400 receiving yards in a season. After playing at 230 pounds as an underclassman, Whyle sustained 250-plus pounds as a senior, and the improved play strength and toughness showed in his blocking. Though he has outstanding speed and body control for his size, he doesn’t break tackles and his ball skills as a receiver are inconsistent (only 62.7 percent of his targets in 2022 resulted in a reception). Overall, Whyle has the triangle numbers (height/weight/speed) and blocking upside that NFL teams look for, but he doesn’t consistently play up to his testing numbers and his receiving tape leaves much to be desired. With improved catch-point skills, he has the traits to be a rosterable Y tight end in the NFL.

GRADE: 5th Round

12. CAMERON LATU | Alabama 6043 | 242 lbs. | SSR Salt Lake City, Utah (Olympus) 2/24/2000 (age 23.18) #81

BACKGROUND: Cameron Latu (LAH-too), who has two brothers, was born in Torrance, Calif. (Los Angeles area) before moving Chisholm, Minn. (95 miles south of the Canadian border) with his mother (Jill Argust-Fine) when he was age 2. He grew up playing multiple sports, including football and rugby, in elementary and middle school in northern Minnesota. When he was in seventh grade in 2013, his mother, who worked for Delta Airlines, moved the family to Salt Lake City for more opportunities, including football exposure. Latu attended Olympus High School, where he was a three-year letterman on varsity, primarily as a defensive end and linebacker. He had a breakout junior season in 2016 with 65 tackles, 29.0 tackles for loss and 9.0 sacks, adding a pair of receiving touchdowns as a tight end. As a senior, Latu collected 49 tackles, 12.0 tackles for loss and 4.0 sacks. He also wrestled at Olympus (finished fifth at the 2016 state championships as a sophomore) and played for the club rugby team throughout high school.

A four-star recruit, Latu was the No. 7 weakside defensive end in the 2018 recruiting class and the No. 3 recruit in Utah (Penei Sewell was No. 1). He received his first scholarship offer (BYU) the summer prior to his junior year and committed to the Cougars. After his breakout junior season, Latu reopened his commitment and collected offers from numerous national programs, including Notre Dame, Oregon and Tennessee. The summer before his senior season, he narrowed down his final five to Alabama, Nebraska, USC, Utah and Washington and committed to the Crimson Tide (as a defensive end) in August 2017. Latu was recruited by former Alabama defensive line coach Tosh Lupoi (before he left for the NFL) and was hosted by Tua Tagovailoa on his campus visit. After one season as a pass rusher, Alabama moved Latu to tight end, a position he played sparingly in high school. His twin brother (Nathan) played at Snow College (2019-20) for two seasons before transferring to Oklahoma State as a defensive end and logging 3.0 sacks in 2022. His older brother (Viliamu Sioka) also played defensive end and signed with Division II St. Cloud State in 2012. Latu graduated with his degree (May 2022). He accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl.

STRENGTHS: Coordinated athlete ... not naturally explosive but snaps out of his breaks with fluidity and short-area quicks ... smooth within his route construction, using body lean or head bobs to shake loose ... soft hands and comfortably adjusts to throws away from his body ... deftly turns, makes the catch and gets his eyes upfield to make a play ... has the vision to quickly process pursuit angles and maximize RAC yardage ... physical hands and hip roll as a point-of-attack blocker ... urgently attacks the second level and engages linebackers ... lowered his penalties from six in 2021 to only one in 2022 ... his coaches say his pass-catching confidence improves with each game ... caught 12 touchdowns over the last two seasons, including eight in 2021, an Alabama tight end record.

WEAKNESSES: Very average from a size/strength/speed perspective ... not elusive and forced missed tackles were infrequent on his film (only two in 2022) ... guilty of losing focus and dropping layup targets ... marginal run blocker and lacks the length or upper-body strength to control defenders ... must improve his body angles to out-leverage defenders ... unseasoned with his strike placement and aiming points as a pass blocker ... fumbled twice over the last two seasons ... missed the season opener as a senior because of a fall practice foot injury (August 2022) and also suffered an ankle injury (November 2022).

SUMMARY: A two-year starter at Alabama, Latu was a combo tight end in offensive coordinator Bill O'Brien's offense, splitting his snaps inline (45 percent) and detached (55 percent) as a senior. A former linebacker, he transitioned to full-time tight end in 2019. He proved to be a reliable outlet for quarterback Bryce Young the past two seasons with 80.4 percent of his college receptions resulting in a first down or touchdown. Although there aren't many explosive plays on his tape, Latu runs his routes with excellent pacing and smooth movements in and out of his breaks and at the catch point. As a blocker, he is physical into engagement and can seal at the second level, but his handwork, angles and finishing strength lack consistency, especially in the run game. Overall, Latu has an average size/speed profile and must improve as a blocker, but his ascending confidence and smooth pass-catching skills make him a dependable chain mover. He should compete for a backup role as an NFL rookie with eventual low-end starting potential.

13. PAYNE DURHAM | Purdue 6055 | 253 lbs. | SSR Suwanee, Ga. (Peachtree Ridge) 6/15/2000 (age 22.87) #87

BACKGROUND: William Payne Durham grew up in Suwanee and started playing multiple sports at a young age, specifically football and lacrosse. He focused on football through middle school, but he stopped playing to focus on lacrosse when he enrolled at Peachtree Ridge High School. Durham was an All-County player at the attack position and set the school records for goals in a season (68) and game (8). When Reggie Stancil was hired as head coach of the football team in the spring of 2017, he recruited Durham to the football team at a school prep rally. Durham agreed to join the team if Stancil made a three-point shot, which he did (made eight in a row). Going into his senior year, he joined the team for workouts, which rekindled his passion for football. He played tight end, receiver and H-back and was the focal point of the offense, earning first team All-County and All-Region honors as a senior with 22 receptions for 330 yards and five touchdowns. Durham also returned to the lacrosse team for his senior season.

A three-star recruit, Durham was the No. 79 tight end in the 2018 recruiting class and the No. 169 recruit in Georgia. He received several offers to play lacrosse in college, but his one year on the gridiron earned him more attention as a football recruit. His first offer was from Missouri, followed by Purdue and Duke. Durham loved the Purdue campus and the new coaching staff and signed as part of former head coach Jeff Brohm's first recruiting class with the Boilermakers. He opted out of the 2022 bowl game and accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl (was voted the National team's Practice Player of the Week at tight end).

PRO DAY	6057	255	34	9 7/8	80 1/4	-	-	-	-	-	4.51	7.15	14 (stood on Combine runs and jumps)

STRENGTHS: Large, lean-framed player with outstanding length (his wingspan and arm length make some offensive linemen jealous) ... strong, accepting hands and drops were uncommon on his college tape (only four on 136 targets the last two seasons) ... displays a good-sized catch radius and is comfortable snaring throws outside his frame ... coordinated feet and doesn't need gear down to break out 90-degree route breaks ... doesn't play timid over the middle and enjoys the physicality of the position ... rumbles after the catch with a head of steam ... has the functional inline strength to be a battering ram or turn and seal defenders ... out-angles linebackers to spring outside runs ... the Purdue coaches heap praise on the value he brought to the team (Brohm: "Payne's our team leader. ... He's just a physical specimen that plays hard.") ... durable and missed only one game because of injury the last four seasons.

WEAKNESSES: Strong initial acceleration, but his speed taps out ... all-gas route runner and would benefit from added tempo and pacing, since he doesn't have an explosive gear to easily separate ... isn't much of a RAC threat, unless you hit him in stride ... averaged only 10.1 yards per catch and doesn't create many explosive plays (only one 30-plus yard reception in 2022) ... wish he had more broken tackles on tape – he runs tall with inconsistent balance as a ball carrier, making it easy for him to be cut down ... route movements are upright and mechanical ... can get hung up near the line of scrimmage against physical defenders ... gets tall in his blocking fits and needs to improve his leverage to stay underneath defenders ... has plenty of stalemates but doesn't consistently drive targets off their spot.

SUMMARY: A four-year starter at Purdue, Durham was the Y tight end in former head coach Jeff Brohm's spread offense, splitting his snaps between the slot (57.2 percent) and inline (39.4 percent). A four-year lacrosse player in high school, he returned to football his senior year at Peachtree Ridge High School, and his production improved each of his five seasons with the Boilermakers. Although his routes tend to be rigid and upright, Durham is a long-striding athlete with good foot quickness and impressive body control to win with size and adjust to throws behind/above him. As a blocker, he needs to rely more on leverage and hand techniques to sustain, but he is physical and strong with the upside to become a dependable NFL blocker. Overall, Durham has average-at-best speed and separation skills, but he creates a large throwing target for his quarterback and enjoys the dirty work at the position. He has the skill set of a solid No. 2 tight end option in the NFL, similar in ways to Jesse James.

14. WILL MALLORY | Miami (Fla.) 6044 | 239 lbs. | 5SR Jacksonville, Fla. (Providence School) 6/22/1999 (age 23.85) #85

BACKGROUND: William "Will" Mallory, who has a sister, grew up in a football family and often moved around as his father (Mike) changed coaching positions. The family moved to Jacksonville in 2013, when Mike was hired as the Jaguars' special teams coordinator and Will enrolled at Providence School, a private Christian school. After seeing varsity action as a freshman and sophomore, Mallory had a breakout junior season as an outside wide receiver with 46 receptions for 900 yards and 12 touchdowns, earning All-Conference honors. He battled multiple injuries as a senior and finished with 21 catches for 364 yards and three scores. Mallory also lettered in basketball and track, finishing fourth in the 100 meters (10.99 seconds) and 110-meter hurdles (14.91) at the 2018 state championships. His set personal bests in the 100 meters (10.85), 200 meters (22.95) and high jump (6 feet 0 inches).

A four-star recruit, Mallory was the No. 8 tight end in the 2018 recruiting class (three spots behind Kyle Pitts, one ahead of Pat Freiermuth) and the No. 37 recruit in Florida. As a Michigan legacy, the Wolverines were his first offer when he was only a freshman. Mallory also picked up offers from Alabama, Clemson, Georgia, Notre Dame, Ohio State and USC. He grew up a Michigan fan and most assumed he was headed for Ann Arbor, but Mallory wanted to pave his own way and committed to Miami (Fla) and head coach Mark Richt in April of his junior year. (Mallory grew up around former Hurricanes tight ends Jeremy Shockey and Jimmy Graham while his father coached with the Saints). While he was highly recruited, Mallory was the second-ranked tight end in Miami's 2018 class behind Brevin Jordan, who was the No. 1 tight end nationally. Will's paternal grandfather (Bill), who died in 2018, was a long-time college football head coach with Miami Ohio (1969-73), Colorado (1974-78), Northern Illinois (1980-83) and Indiana (1984-96) before retiring from coaching in 1996. Bill had three sons, all of whom played at Michigan. Will's father (Mike) played linebacker for the Wolverines (1982-85) and was team MVP in 1984 before he got into coaching. He had nine stops as an assistant in college (Indiana, Kent State, Eastern Illinois, Rhode Island, Northern Illinois, Maryland, Illinois, Kansas, Louisville), then jumped to the NFL with the New Orleans Saints (2008-12), Jacksonville Jaguars (2013-20) and the Denver Broncos (2022). Will's mother (Kim) also attended Michigan. Will has two uncles (Mike's brothers) in coaching: Doug, who was with the Atlanta Falcons (2015-20) and is currently a defensive analyst with Michigan; Curt, who was the defensive backs coach at Michigan (2011-14) and has been head coach at Indiana State since 2017. Mallory took advantage of the extra year of eligibility and returned to Miami for a fifth season in 2022. He accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl.

STRENGTHS: Sleek, athletic frame with above average speed (his 4.54 40-yard dash was No. 1 among tight ends at the combine) ... has the acceleration to run by the second level and threaten safeties vertically or on crossers ... uses a quick inside/outside stem to square off patterns ... fights off physical coverage and works to space as a zone buster ... improved focus at the catch point, and his drop rate declined his senior season ... his catch radius has always been a strength to his game ... with a father who coaches special teams at a high level in college and professional football, he grew up in NFL meeting rooms and knows what is expected of him at the next level ... voted a senior captain and set career bests in 2022.

WEAKNESSES: Average overall bulk and body mass ... doesn't have the power in his lower body to consistently drive edge talent or second-level targets ... often out-leveraged at the point of attack, leading to sustain issues (multiple holding penalties on 2022 game tapes studied) ... average base strength and will throw his hands wide in pass protection ... doesn't create enough separation mid-route for a player with his athletic talent ... fazed by crowded catch points and often loses 50-50 battles (see: 2022 Texas A&M tape).

SUMMARY: A four-year starter at Miami, Mallory was a hybrid tight end in former offensive coordinator Josh Gattis' pro-style spread. With gradual improvements in his production each season, Mallory led the Hurricanes in receiving in 2022 and finished No. 2 in receiving among tight ends in school history, which is even more impressive considering Miami's NFL pipeline at the position. With a family tree that includes several accomplished players and coaches at the high school, college and NFL levels, Mallory has the athletic pedigree and focus to play at the next level. However, he can be mugged at the line and downfield, and his blocking tape is very mediocre. Overall, Mallory isn't the type of tight end you are going to line up inline and play smash-mouth football, but he is an athletic pass catcher on the move with long-striding speed and accessible ball skills. He has the talent to compete for F tight end duties for an NFL team.

GRADE: 5th-6th Round

15. BRAYDEN WILLIS | Oklahoma 6034 | 241 lbs. | 5SR Arlington, Texas (James Martin) 11/11/1999 (age 23.46) #9

BACKGROUND: Brayden Willis, who has a younger sister, grew up in the Dallas-Fort Worth Metroplex and started playing flag football at age 4. He primarily played quarterback throughout his childhood and continued playing at Ousley Junior High and James Martin High School in Arlington. After playing on the freshman and JV teams as a freshman, Willis made varsity as a sophomore and moved from wide receiver to tight end. He recorded 27 receptions for 323 yards and three touchdowns as a junior. As a senior captain, Willis caught 29 passes for 586 yards and seven touchdowns. Because of injuries, he also returned to quarterback for several games and recorded 521 passing yards, 572 rushing yards and 20 additional touchdowns (16 rushing, four passing). Willis, who also saw snaps at defensive end and punter, was named District MVP in his final season after leading Martin to an 11-2 record and the third round of the 2017 state playoffs (lost to eventual state champion Allen).

A three-star recruit, Willis was the No. 58 tight end in the 2018 recruiting class and the No. 190 recruit in Texas. After his junior year, he was offered by several FCS (Grambling, Illinois State) and FBS (Colorado State, Houston, Texas State, Tulane) programs. Willis had only two Power 5 offers (Arizona and Wake Forest), until Lincoln Riley was looking to fill the final few spots in Oklahoma's class and offered him a week before signing day. Willis was the third-lowest-rated recruit in the Sooners' 2018 class. He took advantage of the extra year of eligibility and returned to Oklahoma for his fifth season in 2022. His younger sister (Grace Reddic) played soccer at Martin and is a rising sophomore on the Texas State soccer team. Willis graduated with his degree in economics (May 2022). He accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl.

STRENGTHS: Loves to block and has the mental makeup for the dirty work ... physical on the edge to seal and spring perimeter runs ... NFL coaches will love his finishing attitude as a blocker, ball carrier and receiver ... drops his pads and runs through tackle attempts after the catch ... accelerates well once he gets rolling and was on the receiving end of Oklahoma's longest receiving play in 2022 (78 yards) ... senior captain and the vocal leader who holds the team accountable ... described as an "alpha leader" by the Sooners' coaches (head coach Brent Venables: "Nobody on our team has more command and respect than Brayden.") ... pushes himself in the weight room ... well-schooled on special teams (845 career snaps) and was a regular on kick return and punt coverages (one blocked punt in his career).

WEAKNESSES: Tight through his hips, which limits his separation as a route runner ... lacks refinement in his lower body and takes too many steps at the stem ... can be slowed by early contact when releasing from inline ... needs to better use his frame to post up with defenders at the catch point ... guilty of cradling the ball or relying on his chest/shoulder to finish catches, especially over the middle ... inconsistent production as a seam runner ... his blocking hands are strong but also sticky, making him a target for holding calls ... needs to strengthen his anchor to answer NFL rushers in pass protection ... missed most of the 2020 season because of a leg injury (October 2020) ... wasn't able to run at the Combine or pro day due to a nagging injury.

SUMMARY: A two-year starter at Oklahoma, Willis was a do-everything H-Back in offensive coordinator Jeff Lebby's up-tempo scheme. Lining up at fullback, tight end (detached or attached) or wildcat quarterback, he was an unsung hero for the Sooners' offense (and on special teams) and described as a "true program guy" by the Oklahoma coaches. With his body quickness, mentality and hand strength, Willis is a multi-dimensional blocker capable of stepping up and stone rushing or sealing defenders with his on-the-move control. He won't wilt as a pass catcher over the middle and works well on delayed releases or intermediate crossers, but he is a muted route runner who struggles to create spacing for himself. Overall, Willis won't be a full-field receiving threat in the pros, but he has a healthy appetite as a blocker and will appeal to NFL teams that value alignment versatility. He projects as a wide-ranging H-back (backfield, inline or slot) and regular contributor on special teams.

16. BLAKE WHITEHEART | Wake Forest 6036 | 247 lbs. | 5SR Winston-Salem, N.C. (Mount Tabor) 3/22/2000 (age 23.10) #85

BACKGROUND: Blake Whiteheart, who has an older brother, attended Mount Tabor High School in Winston-Salem and was a four-year varsity letterman at tight end and wide receiver. As a junior, he caught 38 passes for 701 yards and four touchdowns, earning All-Conference honors. As a senior captain, Whiteheart led Mount Tabor to an 11-3 record and the 2017 conference championship. He finished his senior year with 24 catches for 389 yards and four touchdowns while also seeing time on defense as an edge rusher. Whiteheart also lettered all four seasons in lacrosse. Playing the attack position, he earned All-Conference honors three times and was named first team All-Region and honorable mention All-State as a junior in 2016.

A three-star recruit, Whiteheart was the No. 69 tight end in the 2018 recruiting class and the No. 48 recruit in North Carolina. He put his name on the recruiting radar after working out well during camps as an underclassman. Whiteheart considered offers from Appalachian State, Colorado State, Old Dominion and Southern Miss, but he decided to stay close to home and committed to Wake Forest (three miles from his high school). Wake Forest was his only offer from a Power 5 program, and he was part of the same recruiting class as QB Sam Hartman and wide receiver A.T. Perry. Whiteheart accepted his invitation to the 2023 East-West Shrine Bowl.

PRO DAY	6041	245	31 7/8	8 5/8	79 5/8	-	-	-	-	-	4.24	6.77	- (stood on Combine runs, jumps, bench)

STRENGTHS: Athletic footwork to release and stem defenders ... able to create windows of separation by the strain out of breaks ... accelerates well and maintains his speed down the steam ... understands leverage, runs routes to proper depth and is always searching for the sticks (70.5 percent of his career catches resulted in a first down or touchdown) ... above-average hand-eye coordination to attack throws away from his body, regardless of whether he's in space or heavy traffic ... tenacious blocker, quickly introducing his hands and keeping them there with appropriate techniques ... works hard to stay centered to sustain in the run game and pass pro ... was a regular on kick return and punt coverages over his career (343 special teams snaps).

WEAKNESSES: Solidly built but lacks ideal height and length ... his play strength was enough for the ACC, but drive-blocking duties in the NFL will require him to continue strengthening his frame ... his grabby hands, shorter arms and yearning to stay attached will draw holding calls ... average start-stop quickness mid-route to deceive coverages ... needs to be more subtle with his physical push-offs downfield ... competitive after the catch but not very elusive to be a consistent tackle breaker ... only a one-year starter with below-average career production.

SUMMARY: A one-year starter at Wake Forest, Whiteheart was a Y tight end in head coach Dave Clawson's slow-mesh vertical offense, lining up primarily inline. His statistical resume feels incomplete with only 44 career catches and six touchdowns, but tight end hasn't been a heavily targeted position in that scheme. Whiteheart is an athletic route runner with synchronized shake at the break point and controlled adjustment skills at the catch point. As a blocker, he doesn't have elite size or power but compensates with his aggressive nature and fundamental approach. Overall, Whiteheart might lack a distinguishing trait, but he has plenty of useful traits as a tough-minded blocker and capable receiver. He projects as a gritty move tight end (in the Tyler Conklin mold) with special teams skills.

GRADE: 6th-7th Round

17. NOAH GINDORFF | North Dakota State 6060 | 263 lbs. | 6SR Crosby, Minn. (Crosby-Ironton) 2/12/1999 (age 24.21) #87

BACKGROUND: Noah Gindorff (GHIN-dorf), who has an older sister, was born and raised in Crosby (two hours north of Minneapolis), where both of his parents are teachers. He attended Crosby-Ironton High School and was a four-year starter on the varsity football team, primarily playing quarterback and defensive end. As a senior captain, Gindorff was named the 2016 District MVP and earned All-State honors as he led Crosby-Ironton to a 7-3 record and the playoffs. He finished his final season with a school-record 2,348 all-purpose yards (1,468 rushing, 787 passing, 93 receiving) and 29 touchdowns (22 rushing, six passing, one receiving) while adding 130 tackles, 7.5 sacks, two forced fumbles and two interceptions. Gindorff finished his career with a school-record 6,333 all-purpose yards. He lettered in basketball and was named the conference MVP as a senior captain and surpassed 1,000 career points. Gindorff also earned All-Section honors as a senior captain in baseball and graduated with a 3.99 GPA as the class salutatorian.

A three-star recruit, Gindorff was the No. 91 tight end in the 2017 recruiting class and the No. 10 recruit in Minnesota. After his junior year, he collected scholarship offers from several FCS programs, including North Dakota, North Dakota State, Northern Iowa, South Dakota and South Dakota State. Gindorff was drawn to the Bison program and committed in July 2016. After P.J. Fleck was hired as head coach, Minnesota made a late run to flip Gindorff in the final weeks before signing day, but he stayed loyal to his North Dakota State commitment and passed on the chance to play in the Big Ten. Gindorff planned to enter the 2022 NFL Draft but suffered an injury during the 2021 playoffs, which led him to return for a sixth college season in 2022. His father (Michael), who coached Noah in high school, was an All-American defensive lineman at Division II Concordia (1988-91) and was inducted into the school's athletic Hall of Fame in 2014. He went undrafted but signed free-agent contracts with the Tampa Bay Buccaneers and Minnesota Vikings. Noah graduated with his accounting degree (December 2021). He accepted his invitation to the 2023 NFLPA Collegiate Bowl but was unable to participate because of injury (still made the trip to Pasadena and met with NFL scouts at the game).

PRO DAY	6061	266	34 1/8	10	79 3/4	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	20 (no workout – right ankle)

STRENGTHS: Looks the part with a thick, long torso and strong build ... quick first step to gain early blocking advantages ... fits his hands and gets his hips/feet into position to wall off or seal ... flashes the play strength to create pop and re-leverage himself mid-engagement ... enjoys the dirty work as an inline blocker ... drives his feet until the echo of the whistle ... has the ability to adjust and snatch the football ... enormous wingspan expands his catch radius ... at his best when operating with short-area routes ... his post-catch determination and balance will help him slip tackle attempts ... hard worker and intelligent (34 out of 36 on his ACT) and voted a team captain.

WEAKNESSES: Average athletic profile with tightness in his hips ... doesn't have the short-area quickness to sink and separate at the top of routes ... will struggle to threaten the seam versus NFL man-cover talent ... a lot of his route spacing was created by play action in college ... guilty of relying on his body to finish catches ... head ducker and willing to stray from his blocking technique to overwhelm defenders ... already 24 years old ... faced primarily FCS competition (only three of his 44 catches in college came against an FBS opponent) ... suffered a broken fibula and damaged right ankle ligaments during the playoffs (December 2021); the injury didn't heal correctly and he required a second procedure (October 2022), which ended his 2022 season.

SUMMARY: A four-year starter at North Dakota State, Gindorff was an inline Y tight end in offensive coordinator Tyler Roehl's run-heavy, gap-power scheme. Despite never playing the position before college, he joined the tight end room (which included Cody Mauch) when he arrived in Fargo and turned himself into an NFL prospect. Gindorff graduated with an accounting degree at North Dakota State, but he also earned a master's in blocking and takes a lot of pride in that being the strength of his game. He made his limited pass-catching targets count, but his ordinary athleticism will limit ways to get him the football. Overall, the medical feedback after back-to-back season-ending ankle surgeries will determine if Gindorff is drafted or not, but when healthy, he catches the ball well and relishes the dirty work as an inline blocker. He projects as a throwback Y tight end capable of winning a No. 2 blocking role.

GRADE: 7th Round

18. LEONARD TAYLOR | Cincinnati 6045 | 250 lbs. | 5SR Springfield, Ohio (Springfield) 8/26/1999 (age 23.67) #11

BACKGROUND: Leonard Taylor, who has a younger sister, grew up in Springfield (40 miles west of Columbus) with his mother and grandparents. He excelled in basketball and football early in life and was a standout quarterback. Taylor attended Springfield High School and played both ways as a quarterback and defensive end. After posting five offensive touchdowns and 3.0 sacks as a sophomore, he earned first team All-Conference as a junior with 17 total touchdowns (nine rushing, eight passing) and 44 tackles, 3.0 sacks and a pair of interceptions (one returned for a touchdown). As a senior, Taylor was named second team All-District and first team All-Conference on defense with 35 tackles and 4.0 sacks. On offense, he finished his final season with 1,759 passing yards and 23 total touchdowns (15 passing, eight rushing). Taylor also was considered one of the best basketball players in the district as a four-year starter at Springfield, leading the program to 44-8 record over his junior and senior seasons.

A four-star recruit, Taylor was the No. 16 tight end in the 2018 recruiting class and the No. 9 recruit in Ohio. He also received interest as a basketball recruit, but the better offers came in football. Taylor's offer sheet included heavy hitters like Alabama, Notre Dame, Ohio State, Penn State, Tennessee and others. However, most schools recruited him as a defensive end and he wanted to stay on offense, which affected his decision making. His final four comprised of Cincinnati, Louisville, Kentucky and Texas A&M, and he committed to the Bearcats to be close to home and his grandmother (Marcia Barga), who passed away in July 2020. Taylor took advantage of the extra year of eligibility granted by the NCAA because of the pandemic and returned to school for his fifth season in 2022. He graduated with his degree in interdisciplinary studies and received his sports coaching certificate. Taylor opted out of the 2022 bowl game and accepted his invitation to the 2023 East-West Shrine Bowl.

PRO DAY	6050	248	32 3/4	10 1/4	80	-	-	-	-	-	4.98	-	10 (only shuttle and bench – right knee)

STRENGTHS: Sturdy frame and worked his tail off to rework his body composition (didn't start lifting weights until college) ... catches the ball well with his hands ... able to create a step of separation when he gets rolling vertically ... effectively uses shoulder/body moves before making 90-degree cuts at the top of routes ... keeps his legs pumping to finish forward as a ball carrier ... competitive blocker and has the lower-body flexibility to create leverage at contact ... applies sound techniques and stays after the block ... his coaches speak highly of his maturation since high school ... was a regular on punt coverages his final three seasons at Cincinnati.

WEAKNESSES: Builds to speed and not a one-step explosive mover ... his patterns lack polish and breaks lack suddenness ... needs a moment to get his route back on path after he meets early resistance from defenders ... non-threatening after the catch and won't make defenders miss in space ... inconsistent sustain skills and gets caught trying to overwhelm targets instead of controlling them ... long defenders can get into his frame ... wasn't highly targeted in college with an unimpressive receiving resume ... missed one game as a senior.

SUMMARY: A three-year starter at Cincinnati, Taylor was a Y tight end (mostly inline) and part of a rotation in former offensive coordinator Gino Guidugli's spread RPO offense. A highly sought-after recruit out of high school, he wasn't a high-volume target for the Bearcats with only 69 catches in 60 games played (and only one catch of 20-plus yards in 2022). Taylor is a good-sized athlete and maximizes his catch radius to pull down throws away from his eyeline. He battles as a blocker and creates solid fits with his pad level, but he will have a tough time matching up at the point of attack in the NFL. Overall, Taylor has a very average skill set and doesn't have the resume of a playmaker, but his basketball background is evident with the way he moves and catches the football, giving evaluators optimism about his developmental upside. He might be able to fend for a rotational No. 3 tight end role.

19. TRAVIS VOKOLEK | Nebraska

6061 | 259 lbs. | 6SR

Springfield, Mo. (Kickapoo)

#83

BACKGROUND: Travis Vokolek (VOKE-oh-leck), who has a sister, is the son of a college football coach, which meant he had to move around during his childhood. He grew up mostly in Springfield (while his father coached at Missouri State) and attended Kickapoo High School, where he was a three-year varsity letterman on both offense (wide receiver/tight end) and defense (linebacker/safety). As a junior, Vokolek posted 82 tackles and helped Kickapoo to a 12-1 record and 2015 district title. As a senior, he again led Kickapoo to the playoffs and finished with 90 tackles, 4.0 tackles for loss, 1.0 sack and one forced fumble, adding 17 receptions for 205 yards and two touchdowns. Vokolek earned first team All-State honors in 2016. He also lettered in basketball and track at Kickapoo, setting personal bests in the 200 meters (26.50), 400 meters (1:07.05), high jump (6-0) and long jump (17-9).

A three-star recruit, Vokolek was the No. 94 tight end in the 2017 recruiting class and the No. 12 recruit in Missouri. He received several FCS offers, including from Missouri State, Northern Iowa and South Dakota. Minnesota and Rutgers entered the mix after his senior year, and Vokolek committed to the Scarlet Knights just before signing day. After two seasons, he entered the transfer portal and committed to Nebraska and former head coach Scott Frost, who had previously worked with Travis’ father. He took advantage of the extra year of eligibility granted by the NCAA because of the pandemic and returned to Lincoln for his sixth. His father (D.J.) played linebacker at Nebraska-Kearney and has been a college coach since 1993, including stops as a defensive coordinator at Nebraska-Omaha (2000-02), Northern Iowa (2004-05), Missouri State (2006-14) and currently at Southern Illinois (2023). Travis’ uncle (Terry Allen) was a longtime college head coach at Northern Iowa (1989-96), Kansas (1997-2001) and Missouri State (2006-14). Travis’ cousin (Chase Allen) played tight end at Iowa State and went undrafted in the 2022 NFL Draft, spending the 2022 season on the Chicago Bears’ practice squad. Vokolek graduated with his degree in child, youth and family studies (August 2021). He accepted his invitation to the 2023 East-West Shrine Bowl.

STRENGTHS: Offers the desired size measurements for the position ... displays solid hand-eye coordination ... athletic body control and looks natural making cross-frame adjustments to bail out his quarterback ... able to cross over defenders at the top of routes, powering up his strides off his plant foot ... uses skillful pacing and drift to leverage coverage or create tougher angles for tacklers ... strains with his blocking hands once they connect with his target ... gets his feet moving once he locks on to escort defenders from the play ... hooks linebackers in motion ... spent time on college football fields since he was born and was voted a senior captain.

WEAKNESSES: Labors with his start-stop transitions ... his route-running effectiveness drops considerably after he slows his feet ... need to better use his frame to shield defenders and draw early contact ... more drops (eight) than touchdown catches (four) in his career ... responsible for only two red-zone touchdowns in 46 career games ... his taller blocking stature creates leverage opportunities for defenders ... inconsistent precision on point-of-attack blocks ... missed a combined five games the past two seasons, including because of an ankle injury (August 2022) as a senior ... will be 25 as an NFL rookie.

SUMMARY: A three-year starter at Nebraska, Vokolek primarily played as a Y tight end in former offensive coordinator Mark Whipple’s shotgun, pro-style scheme. The son of a longtime college coach, his effectiveness as both a blocker and pass catcher improved each season in college, initially at Rutgers and then in Lincoln. Vokolek is a coordinated big man with crafty adjustment skills at the catch point, but creating his own space will be a challenge with his average athletic profile. He needs to tighten up some fundamental aspects of his blocking, but he has workable size and strength to give defenders a battle at the point of attack. Overall, Vokolek is a big target with inline skills, although he doesn’t have a technically sound approach and might struggle with the speed of the NFL level. He has a chance to make a roster or practice squad as a steady No. 3 tight end as an NFL rookie.

SUMMARY: Joel Wilson grew up in northern Michigan and started playing football at age 8. As a quarterback, linebacker and punter at Petoskey High, he earned All-State as a senior with 18 touchdowns (11 passing, seven rushing) and led the team in tackles. A no-star recruit, he received Division II offers but was leaning towards a preferred walk-on opportunity from Central Michigan. It became an easy decision when the CMU coaches upped it to a full-ride offer as a tight end. As a senior, Wilson ranked top five in receiving among all FBS tight ends before he suffered a season-ending left ankle injury. He has adequate size with gliding speed and above-average foot quickness to give his quarterback a target. As a blocker, he competes with physicality, but his point-of-attack strength and balance tend to waver. Overall, Wilson needs to tighten his routes and consistency as a blocker, but he is an athletic, sure-handed pass catcher with potential to be an NFL backup.

SUMMARY: Griffin Hebert was a standout receiver at St. Thomas More High, helping the program to its first state title his senior year. He finished his prep career with more than 1,000 receiving yards and 24 touchdowns while also earning All-District honors in basketball. A two-star recruit, Hebert committed to Louisiana Tech, where he moved to tight end on the depth chart. As a super senior in 2022, he led all FBS tight ends in yards per catch (18.7) and lived beyond the sticks (78.3 percent of his grabs resulted in a first down or touchdown). Hebert has fantastic route-running athleticism with an explosive lower body to shake free underneath, win on vertical patterns or gash defenses as a RAC weapon. He is a try-hard blocker who gets in the way, but he doesn't have the play strength to control or neutralize his man. Overall, Hebert's remarkable testing numbers match his on-field athleticism before and after the catch. He can be a fun H-back for a creative NFL play caller.

SUMMARY: Kyle Patterson, the youngest of four children, is the son of Shawn Patterson, who was a second-round pick in 1988 by the Green Bay Packers. Kyle played football and basketball at Perry (and a high school teammate of Brock Purdy). A three-star recruit, Patterson passed on offers from Alabama, Georgia and others to sign with Air Force. However, his college career was disrupted by a torn ACL and MCL in his knee (September 2021) followed by a clean-up procedure (July 2022) and another knee injury (October 2022). He has another knee surgery scheduled for April 2023. Patterson is a stout, balanced blocker who can seal the edge and be an asset in the run game. He wasn't a high-volume receiver but was productive when targeted (16 of his 18 career catches resulted in a first down or touchdown). Overall, Patterson has the blocking talent and development upside to warrant a draft pick, but the health of his knee might force him to go the undrafted route.

SUMMARY: Daniel Barker bounced around high schools and transferred to Boyd Anderson High as a junior, before he wound up at Deerfield Beach and earned All-County as a senior tight end. A three-star recruit, Barker committed to Illinois (over Kentucky) and became the school's all-time record holder for touchdown grabs by a tight end (11). He pulled his name out of the 2022 NFL Draft and transferred to Michigan State for his "super senior" season, then set a career high in catches. A long, solidly built athlete, Barker works towards open space with tracking skills, but his speed and separation abilities are average at best. While he blocks with a competitive edge to remove defenders from their feet, his subpar technique and positioning will be quickly exposed versus NFL defenders. Overall, Barker is a coordinated route runner and flashes athletic pass-catching ability, but he is a below-average blocker and faces a steep uphill climb to make an NFL roster.

SUMMARY: Jack Colletto moved to Camas (just outside of Portland) from Seattle as a sophomore in high school. After playing safety as a junior, he became the starting quarterback as a senior and was the Gatorade Player of the Year, leading Camas to the 2016 state title. A two-star recruit, he went to Arizona Western College for a year and then signed with Oregon State over Vanderbilt. He arrived as a quarterback before moving to linebacker and short-yardage running back, doing whatever he could to get on the field (won the 2022 Hornung Award as the most versatile player in college football). Colletto is a hard-nosed player with the physicality needed for blocking duties. He has only average speed but appears smooth in his routes with succinct footwork and tracking hands to finish catches. Overall, Colletto might be a jack-of-all-trades, master-of-none player, but his athleticism, competitive toughness and versatility will speak to NFL coaches.

SUMMARY: Jahleel Billingsley grew up in the Chicago area and transferred from Mount Carmel High to Wendell Phillips Academy as a junior. He helped the program to the 2017 5A state title with 31 catches for 431 yards and seven touchdowns. A four-star recruit, he became the first player from Illinois to sign with Alabama in the Nick Saban era. Looking for more playing time, Billingsley transferred to Texas for the 2022 season but served an NCAA-mandated six-game suspension and then left the program in mid-November (NFL scout: "He wore out his welcome."). With his speed and athleticism, Billingsley quickly enters his routes and creates conflict for defenders because of the fluidity in and out of his breaks. He can stone blitzers in the hole but doesn't have the build or play strength for NFL blocking, and his overall game lacks focus. The red flags (on and off the field) likely will leave him undrafted, but he has rosterable NFL talent if he adopts a more disciplined approach.

SUMMARY: Ben Sims grew up in San Antonio and lived with his mother (Julie Sims-Louden) after his parents divorced when he was young. He attended Tom C. Clark High, where he led the team in receiving as a junior and senior. A three-star recruit, he committed to Matt Rhule and Baylor over Auburn and UTSA, his hometown school. Sims became the starter over his final three seasons and finished his career with the school record for touchdowns catches by a tight end (12). Although he builds his speed and lacks dynamic separation qualities, Sims is controlled within his routes to leverage in-breakers and make himself available to his quarterback. He has a sturdy base in pass protection but struggles to uncoil inline, and he is still learning how to properly use his hands/reach to fit and control his man in the run game. Overall, Sims is a balanced athlete with steady hands, but he isn't a threat after the catch and needs to turn his losses into stalemates as an NFL blocker.

SUMMARY: Johnny Lumpkin was born and raised in Atlanta, where he was a basketball and football standout at Frederick Douglass High and earned All-Region honors as a senior tight end/slot. A two-star recruit, he committed to Miami (Ohio) as a senior but instead was forced to go the juco route. After two seasons at Hutchinson Community College, he transferred to Louisiana, where — aside from missing the 2019 season — his receiving production improved each season. He has a big, rangy frame with long strides and a remarkable wingspan. As a blocker, he positions his hands into defenders and uses his long levers and drive skills to create movement. As a pass catcher, he doesn’t have the lower-body flexibility to easily uncover as a route runner, but his massive catch radius creates matchup opportunities at the chains. Overall, Lumpkin’s run-blocking skills and upside as a red-zone ball winner give him an NFL path, likely starting on the practice squad.

SUMMARY: Princeton Fant, who is the cousin of Seattle Seahawks’ tight end Noah Fant, was a four-year starting wide receiver at LaVergne High. A three-star wide receiver recruit, he committed to in-state Tennessee (over LSU and Ole Miss) and moved to running back for two years before transitioning to tight end for his final four seasons. Fant had his most productive season as a senior with nine total touchdowns, including five rushing scores, mostly as the upback in goal-line situations. Fant, who has a three-year-old daughter (Aaliyah), doesn’t offer ideal size or strength through contact, and his unpolished routes lead defenders to his targets. His special teams resume is also underwhelming. However, he plays with loose movements and focused ball skills as a pass catcher with shiftiness after the catch. Overall, Fant is strength- and technique-deficient as a blocker, but his athletic upside as a utility H-back and special teamer will be his ticket to an NFL camp.

1. PARIS JOHNSON JR. | Ohio State 6063 | 313 lbs. | 3JR Cincinnati, Ohio (Princeton) 7/3/2001 (age 21.82) #77

BACKGROUND: Paris “PJ” Johnson Jr., who has a younger sister, was born and raised in the Cincinnati area by his mother (Monica Daniels) and started playing football at age 5. He initially played cornerback for the West Chester Outlaws at the pee-wee level and continued playing through elementary and middle school, taking snaps at defensive end, tight end, wide receiver and safety. Johnson enrolled at St. Xavier High School where he played on the freshman team at 6-3 and 205 pounds in 2016. Despite no experience on the offensive line, Johnson started to outgrow other positions and began working out with former NFL Pro Bowl tackle Willie Anderson during the offseason. He became the starting left tackle on varsity as a sophomore and earned all-conference and all-state honors as a junior. With the goal of graduating high school early, Johnson transferred to Princeton, a public school in Cincinnati, for his final season. As a senior, he was named a U.S. Army All-American and earned First-Team All-State and All-Conference honors at left tackle. Johnson was also named the 2019 Anthony Muñoz Lineman of the Year, which is given annually to the best high school lineman in the country.

A five-star recruit, Johnson was the No. 1 offensive tackle in the 2020 recruiting class and the No. 1 recruit in Ohio. The only offensive recruits ranked higher than him in the class were Bryce Young (Alabama), Julian Fleming (Ohio State) and Arik Gilbert (LSU/Georgia). Before he moved to the offensive line, he received his first scholarship offer (Rutgers) as a freshman defensive end. His recruitment as an offensive tackle took off during his sophomore year, with offers from every major college program. In June 2018, the summer before his junior year, Johnson committed to Urban Meyer and Ohio State. However, Meyer retired six months later, and Johnson reopened his recruitment, taking visits to Alabama, Georgia, Georgia Tech, Kentucky, LSU and Tennessee. He kept in touch with the Buckeyes and developed a strong relationship with new head coach Ryan Day. Johnson ultimately stuck with Ohio State (over LSU), where he was the No. 2 recruit in the Buckeyes’ 2020 class (one spot behind Fleming and one spot ahead of Jaxon Smith-Njigba). He started “The Paris Johnson Jr. Foundation” as a senior in high school to empower and serve disabled veterans and disadvantaged student-athletes (his foundation won the 2022 Armed Forces Merit Award as announced on ESPN). Johnson’s father (Paris Sr.), who grew up in foster care in Chicago’s West Side, was a safety at Miami (Ohio) who was drafted in the fifth round (No. 122 overall) of the 1999 NFL Draft by the Arizona Cardinals. After his playing days, he went into law enforcement, which was followed by stints as an assistant coach at Michigan State, Pittsburgh and Savannah State. Paris Jr. graduated with his degree in journalism (December 2022), writing numerous articles for the school newspaper, The Lantern. He elected to skip his senior season and enter the 2023 NFL Draft.

STRENGTHS: Fluid big man who maneuvers well in space ... his frame is long, filled out and comfortably carries weight ... displays adequate knee bend and lateral movements to cut off outside pass-rush angles ... his athletic gifts aid his recovery skills ... quick out of his stance with above-average pulling athleticism to stay ahead of blocks ... rangy zone blocker to reach/seal backside edge defenders ... mean finisher and works hard to stay connected through the whistle ... efficient on combinations and when advancing to the second level, putting linebackers on their backs ... bursts into down blocks and drives his feet ... cerebral on and off the field (4.0 GPA in high school, fluent in Mandarin Chinese and earned his college degree in three years) ... penalized only once (false start) in 2022 ... very disciplined with his nutrition and takes football seriously (NFL scout: “It’s not just that he’s coachable, but he’s a real quick learner and handles playbook complexities really well for his age.”) ... a humble leader and described as the “father” of the Buckeyes offensive line because of the way his teammates confide in him ... durable and finished his career with 26 straight starts (every game the last two seasons) with double-digit starts at both tackle and guard.

WEAKNESSES: Needs to show better control at the top of the rush ... tends to drift his weight outside, creating a path through his inside shoulder ... his hands start too wide, which leads to inconsistent strike points ... can get caught on the balls of his feet and needs to better sink his weight and settle once power rushers get into his chest ... finds himself too upright as a run blocker and loses his angles ... occasionally ducks and overextends himself in the run game, allowing defenders to slither around him ... can improve his pacing and break down as a puller ... only one season of tackle experience at the college level.

SUMMARY: A two-year starter at Ohio State, Johnson moved from right guard to his more natural left tackle spot as a junior in head coach Ryan Day’s zone/RPO-based offense. He struggled at times against better competition (his only sacks allowed in 2022 came against Michigan and Georgia), but he played at a high level most of the season and became the first Buckeye tackle to earn consensus All-American honors since 2015 (Taylor Decker). Johnson is quick out of his stance with the movement skills to mirror pass rushers around the arc or show off his pulling range in run game. He must be more consistent with his sinking, settling and striking, but he has the athleticism to recover quickly and his mistakes are fixable over time. Overall, Johnson must replace bad habits with more trust in his technique, but he is an athletic move blocker with the size, fluidity and character of a future starting NFL left tackle. With his quickness, he is ideally suited for a zone-based scheme.

2.

BRODERICK JONES | Georgia

6053 | 311 lbs. | 3SO

Lithonia, Ga. (Lithonia)

#59

BACKGROUND: Broderick Jones, who is the youngest of four children, grew up in Lithonia (20 miles east of downtown Atlanta) and was raised by his mother (Tawana) after his father (Roosevelt Dotson) died from an illness when Broderick was age 6. With his size, he naturally gravitated toward basketball and football. Jones attended Lithonia High School where he was a four-year letterman and played both ways on offense (left tackle and tight end) and defense (defensive line). He played on both JV and varsity as a freshman and sophomore and posted 24 tackles for loss and nine sacks, earning All-County honors on defense in 2017. As a junior, Jones earned multiple First-Team All-State honors and was named a Second-Team All-American at left tackle. As a senior, he led Lithonia to the 2019 5A state playoffs and helped the offense post 3,106 yards of total offense. Jones was named an Under Armour All-American and earned unanimous First-Team All-State honors on offense, adding 17 tackles and four sacks on defense. He was also a standout basketball forward at Lithonia and helped the team to the 5A Final Four in 2019 with a 21-10 record. Jones has also been an avid rider of dirt bikes throughout his life.

A five-star recruit, Jones was the No. 2 offensive tackle in the 2020 recruiting class (behind Ohio State’s Paris Johnson) and the No. 3 recruit in Georgia (behind Arik Gilbert and Myles Murphy, but one spot ahead of Will Anderson). He was the No. 11 overall recruit nationally. Jones started to receive attention from colleges as a freshman and received his first offer from Georgia as a sophomore, committing to the Bulldogs in April 2018. However, he reopened his recruitment shortly before signing day after Sam Pittman left the Georgia coaching staff to take the Arkansas head coach job. Jones visited Arkansas, Auburn and Illinois but ultimately stayed committed and signed with head coach Kirby Smart and Georgia. Jones elected to skip his final two seasons of eligibility and enter the 2023 NFL Draft.

PRO DAY	6050	313	34 1/4	10 7/8	83 5/8	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	(position drills only – choice)

STRENGTHS: Basketball athlete with above-average movement skills ... loose hipped and agile footed ... utilizes knee bend in his kick slide ... displays violent, quick-strike hands with the recoil to land multiple punches and knock away the reach of rushers ... able to rework himself and sit down versus long-armed defenders ... patient and aware versus stunts/counters ... excellent snap quickness in the run game to quickly out-angle or seal ... at his best using his mobility on the outside or when working up to the second level (his 4.97 40-yard dash was fastest among offensive linemen at the combine) ... flashes the power to move defenders from the gap ... always looking for work and plays with the competitive demeanor required in the pro game ... zero holding penalties in his UGA career (only one false start) ... started all 15 games in 2022 and finished third on the team (behind Stetson Bennett and Sedrick Van Pran) in total snaps (933).

WEAKNESSES: Lacks the height/length that NFL teams desire at the position ... needs to continue maturing his technique ... will lose his bearings and base when his upper half overextends ... finds himself jarred at contact when he gives up his chest ... needs to do a better job breaking contact versus long-arm moves ... his hands are quick, but they land outside when he has too much of a wind-up in his attack ... will sacrifice his body control at times in the run game ... missed the start of his first season in Athens because of a dirt-bike accident (July 2020) ... doesn’t have versatile experience at right tackle or on the interior.

SUMMARY: A one-and-a-half-year starter at Georgia, Jones filled in for Jamaree Salyer in 2021 before becoming the full-time left tackle in 2022 in former offensive coordinator Todd Monken’s balanced scheme. Left tackle for the Bulldogs has become a feeder position to the NFL as Isaiah Wynn, Andrew Thomas and Salyer preceded Jones protecting the blindside in Athens. A former basketball player, Jones displays outstanding feet, coordination and recovery skills and disrupts the rhythm of rushers when he unlocks his hips and transfers power from his lower body to his hands. However, he needs to do a better job of keeping his upper and lower halves on the same page and will require time at the next level for his technique to catch up to his talent. Overall, Jones lacks ideal refinement and experience (fewest number of college snaps among FBS offensive tackles in this class), but with his movement skills, raw power and finishing violence, the necessary tools are there for him to be a decade-long starter in the NFL. He should be one of the first linemen drafted, and his NFL projection ranges from solid starter to Pro Bowler.

GRADE: 1st Round (No. 15 overall)

3. DARNELL WRIGHT | Tennessee 6053 | 333 lbs. | 4SR Huntington, W.Va. (Huntington) 8/20/2001 (age 21.69) #58

BACKGROUND: Darnell Wright grew up in Huntington and started playing football at the youth level as a linebacker. After not playing football in middle school, Wright returned to the sport in high school and initially tried out at tight end, but the coaches moved him to the offensive line. At Huntington High School, he became the starting left tackle as a sophomore and was named Second-Team All-State while also playing at defensive end. As a junior in 2017, Wright led Huntington to a 12-1 record with the lone loss coming in the playoff semifinals. He earned First-Team All-State honors and the Stydahar Award (as the top lineman in the state), adding 48 tackles, 14 tackles for loss, 2.5 sacks and one forced fumble on defense. As a senior, Wright again earned First-Team All-State honors and made multiple All-American teams. He was also a standout on the Huntington basketball team and lettered in track. Wright placed first in the shot put (54’1.5”) at the 2018 state championships.

A five-star recruit, Wright was the No. 2 offensive tackle in the 2019 recruiting class (behind Evan Neal) and the No. 1 recruit in West Virginia. He ranked as the No. 10 overall recruit in the nation. After only two prep starts at left tackle, Wright received his first scholarship offer (Marshall) as a sophomore. He was highly sought after by many of the top programs, including Alabama, Clemson, Georgia, Ohio State, USC and several others. Despite a late push from West Virginia, Wright committed to Tennessee and he was the top-ranked recruit in the Vols’ 2019 class (just ahead of Wanya Morris and Henry To’oTo’o). He accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl and was voted the American team’s offensive line practice player of the week.

PRO DAY	6052	333	-	-	-	-	-	-	28 1/2	-	4.72	-	- (no 3-cone or bench – choice)

STRENGTHS: A large-framed blocker with a thick torso and functional mass ... raw power courses through his body ... competes with a patient, yet physical mindset and unleashes controlled violence when he sees the opportunity ... strikes with a stiff, full-extension punch to knock rushers off balance ... able to knock down the reach of rushers and flashes the grip strength to snatch ... has enough quickness to shut down the corner ... rarely bullied ... reworks his balance for quick recoveries after a misstep ... keeps his feet and hips on the same page in the run game ... his heavy hands allow him to displace defenders ... made an impressive jump in performance between his junior and senior seasons, decreasing his penalties from 10 in 2021 to only two in 2022 (one false start, one holding) ... has starting experience inside at guard and at both left and right tackle ... finished his college career with 34 straight starts.

WEAKNESSES: Top heavy and resorts to waist bending at times ... finds his weight too far out in front when he overextends, inviting defenders to toss him ... his outside foot drifts, leaving him late to react versus inside moves ... his hand positioning lacks discipline and he needs to stay more compact to answer different kinds of rush moves ... improved movement skills and knee bend, but lacks consistent twitch in his redirect ... has trouble coming to balance on the second level ... relies more on brute strength as a run blocker than leverage points.

SUMMARY: A four-year starter at Tennessee, Wright lined up at right tackle in head coach Josh Heupel’s up-tempo, spread offense. After moving to the offensive line as a sophomore in high school, he fell short of expectations his first three years in Knoxville. But everything clicked, especially in pass pro, when he moved to right tackle as a senior (didn’t allow a sack in 2022 and quieted Will Anderson on the Alabama tape). With his extraordinary power and torque, Wright creates a surge in the run game with the physical hands to latch, drive and displace. While he is susceptible to inside rush moves, he reaches his landmarks and stays square as a pass blocker, relying on his length, punch and stout anchor to stalemate rushers. Overall, Wright will get himself into trouble when he sacrifices technique for his nasty demeanor, but he naturally defaults to his raw power and body control to consistently win in both the run and passing game. He is a plug-and-play right tackle, and some teams have him on their draft board as a starting guard.

GRADE: 1st-2nd Round (No. 24 overall)

4. ANTON HARRISON | Oklahoma 6043 | 315 lbs. | 3JR Washington, D.C. (Archbishop Carroll) 2/2/2002 (age 21.24) #71

BACKGROUND: Anton (ANN-tahn) Harrison grew up in the Washington, D.C., area with dreams of playing in the NBA. When he got closer to high school, he realized football was probably the more realistic career path and shifted his focus to the gridiron. Harrison enrolled at Archbishop Carroll, a Catholic high school, where he was a four-year letterman at offensive tackle and on the defensive line. After Archbishop combined for only six wins during his first three varsity seasons, he helped the team to an eight-win season and a postseason appearance in 2019. As a senior, he was named the 2019 Conference Player of the Year at left tackle. After starting out on the JV basketball team, he moved up to varsity as a sophomore and immediately became one of the team’s leading scorers.

A four-star recruit, Harrison was the No. 17 offensive tackle in the 2020 recruiting class and the No. 4 recruit from Washington, D.C. (two spots ahead of Penn State’s Olu Fashanu). He received his first scholarship offer from Kentucky as a freshman in 2016. Several schools like Maryland and Morgan State gauged his interest in playing both basketball and football. Over the years, Harrison accumulated dozens of scholarship offers and he narrowed those down to six finalists: Maryland, Michigan, Penn State, Ohio State, Oklahoma and Ole Miss. In the end, Harrison committed to the Sooners because he wanted to work with offensive line coach Bill Bedenbaugh. He was the sixth-ranked recruit in Oklahoma’s 2020 class, one spot behind Marvin Mims. His father (Andre) played on the defensive line at Ole Miss in the mid-’90s. Anton played with two of his brothers in high school: Andre II went on to play at Division II Johnson C. Smith, and Donte is a cornerback at Division II Shepherd. Harrison elected to skip his final season of eligibility and enter the 2023 NFL Draft.

PRO DAY	6042	316	34	9	80	-	-	-	-	-	4.84	-	24 (no 3-cone – back tightness)

STRENGTHS: Impressive foot athlete with coordinated movements to answer edge speed ... stays square to outside rushers and escorts them wide of the pocket ... uses a quick, inside step to cut off rush angles ... able to redirect versus counters ... sees spin moves coming and doesn't appear stressed ... active with his hands to pepper and refit ... can sit down and anchor at the top of the rush because of his lower-body flexibility ... nimble on short- and long-range blocks, getting outside the hashes to attack defensive backs as a puller ... quick on cut-off and combination blocks ... alert kill-shot recognition (sees when his man is leaning) ... good-looking frame with functional arm length and room for additional mass on his body ... recently turned 21 and has played at a high level for his age ... has experience at both left and right tackle.

WEAKNESSES: Guilty of youthful habits, including overextending his upper half or dropping his eye level before contact ... needs to continue strengthening his lower body ... speed-to-power moves will jar him backward when he can't drop his weight in time ... his hands can be wild and late at times ... uses his length to engage, but his target can bounce off his reach and he doesn't show the power to control the point of attack ... responsible for 14 total penalties the last two seasons ... was scheme protected in the Oklahoma offense and will need to adjust to more of a vertical dropback attack against wide-nine NFL speed.

SUMMARY: A two-year starter at Oklahoma, Harrison lined up at left tackle in offensive coordinator Jeff Lebby's up-tempo, RPO-based scheme. He became a starter as a sophomore and developed into one of the better left tackles at the college level. Harrison not only displays the slide quickness to mirror speed, but he also times his body movements appropriately based on the pass rusher he is facing. While he has the active hands to divert pass rushers, his technique and strength must improve to consistently control his target. Overall, Harrison isn't a simple evaluation because of the Sooners' scheme, but he has the movement patterns of a much smaller player and generally recovers well thanks to his athleticism and length. Although there will be a learning curve, he has the tools to become a long-term NFL starter.

GRADE: 2nd Round (No. 50 overall)

5. MATTHEW BERGERON | Syracuse 6052 | 318 lbs. | 4SR Victoriaville, Quebec (Thetford) 2/26/2000 (age 23.17) #60

BACKGROUND: Matthew Bergeron, who is one of four children, is a native of Canada who was born in Montreal, Quebec, and raised in Victoriaville by his mother (Annie). His first language is French and he learned English over time. He grew up playing hockey (as a defenseman) and soccer before switching to basketball, which became his favorite sport. But Bergeron started to gravitate toward football when he was 12 because of his size. Bergeron enrolled in youth football in the sixth grade where he played on the offensive line and continued playing in high school. In Quebec, students have three years of high school before attending a pre-university (CEGEP) for two years. Bergeron enrolled at Cégep de Thetford where he played left tackle and was named the team's MVP both of his years there (2017 and 2018). In his final season, he was named the division's 2018 offensive player of the year.

A three-star recruit, Bergeron was the No. 80 offensive tackle in the 2019 recruiting class and the No. 2 recruit from Quebec. After his first season at Thetford, he had zero recruiting interest and was hoping to play college football in Canada for a program like Laval in Quebec City. But he attended a camp at Syracuse in June 2018 and drew the attention of several FBS coaches. Based on that camp, Buffalo offered Bergeron on the spot and he also received an offer from Rutgers, but he committed to Syracuse the moment they offered in July 2018. He became the first player in Thetford history to receive a scholarship to an NCAA Division I program. His family was unable to see him play in person for two years because of the COVID pandemic restrictions (Syracuse is a five-hour drive from Victoriaville). Bergeron opted out of the Orange's 2022 bowl game and accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl.

PRO DAY	6052	317	33 3/4	9 1/2	81	-	-	-	-	-	4.66	7.38	29 (no runs – choice)

STRENGTHS: Solidly built with adequate length ... efficient snap quickness and setup out of his stance ... shifts his weight well in space with the hips to redirect ... displays the hand/grip strength to control the chest of defenders when his placement is on time ... has the technical approach to become an above-average run blocker ... gets consistent movement in the run game when his pad level is right ... finishes with grit and won't take his foot off the pedal once engaged ... able to cover up and overwhelm linebackers at the second level or on stretch plays ... named a team captain as a senior and seen as a team leader in the locker room ... a four-year starter, including a stretch of 38 straight starts.

WEAKNESSES: Mediocre movement and recovery skills ... can be bullied or knocked off balance by long-armed rushers ... will over-set in pass protection and struggles to answer secondary moves ... must be quicker to shoot his hands into rushers instead of reacting to pass-rush moves ... inconsistent dropping his anchor versus power rushers ... his play strength is more average than above average ... doesn't play with the natural power to displace defenders ... needs to do a better job scooping in the run game ... missed one game as a senior because of injury ... was a tackle only in college and doesn't have experience at guard or center.

SUMMARY: A four-year starter at Syracuse, Bergeron was the starting left tackle in former offensive coordinator Robert Anae's scheme. Lightly recruited out of Quebec, he learned on the fly (both the game of football and the English language) as a true freshman and developed into one of the ACC's top tackles over his four seasons with the Orange. With his on-field demeanor and approach, Bergeron can generate movement in the run game and control pass rushers when his hands, feet and eyes stay on the same page. However, his inconsistent weight distribution leads to issues in pass pro and he doesn't have repeatable hands, which were tough issues to mask against the better opponents on the schedule (Clemson, Notre Dame, Florida State). Overall, Bergeron is very efficient in his movements and grades well as a run blocker, but his inconsistent base and hand placement are gateway issues that disrupt his rhythm and ability to finish, especially in space. He has NFL starting talent, although his skills might be maximized inside as a zone-blocking guard.

GRADE: 2nd Round (No. 54 overall)

6. DAWAND JONES | Ohio State 6082 | 374 lbs. | 4SR Indianapolis, Ind. (Ben Davis) 8/6/2001 (age 21.73) #79

BACKGROUND: Dawand Jones, who is an only child, was born and raised in Indianapolis. Basketball was his first love since the age of 5. He attended Ben Davis High School where he focused on basketball and dabbled in football. Jones started playing varsity football as a junior in 2017 and played left and right tackle. He helped Ben Davis to a 14-0 season and won the 6A state title. As a senior, Jones started to blossom on the football field, primarily as the starting right tackle. Still, basketball was his main focus in high school. As a junior, Jones averaged 13.4 points and 6.9 rebounds per game, helping his team to a 21-win season and a deep run in the playoffs. He improved his numbers to 17.0 points and 9.0 rebounds per game as a senior and helped Ben Davis reach the Class 4A state final. Jones was selected to play for the Indiana All-Stars basketball squad and helped sweep the Kentucky All-Stars in June 2019.

A three-star recruit, Jones was the No. 86 offensive tackle in the 2019 recruiting class and the No. 13 recruit in Indiana. He always saw himself as more of a basketball recruit and received scholarship offers from several Division I programs including Ball State, Bowling Green and Cleveland State. At the start of his senior year, Jones was ready to commit to Kent State to play basketball, but his coaches encouraged him to be patient because they believed football offers would soon arrive. During the season, Mississippi State was his first big offer followed by several national powers like Florida State and Michigan. He considered signing with USC during the early signing period in December 2018, but decided to wait until signing day in February. Jones had a final five of Florida, Indiana, Ohio State, Penn State and USC and ended up picking the Buckeyes. Among the 17 recruits in Ohio State's 2019 class, Jones was the lowest ranked. He accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl but missed most of the week with an injury.

PRO DAY	6084	-	36 1/2	11 5/8	87 3/4	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	(no weight or workout – choice)

STRENGTHS: Extraordinary frame and mass with the wingspan of a Boeing 747 ... his initial movements at the snap are well timed and repeatable ... smooth mover for his size ... doesn't have rangy feet, but he compensates with his wide body and mile-long arms to reposition/outposition rushers ... uses full extension to escort rushers wide of the pocket ... he loves to snatch and bury defenders who try to rush down his middle ... his pass-blocking balance looks much improved from his 2021 tape ... doesn't allow his length to go to waste in the run game ... engulfs in the run game and drives defenders where he wants with his mauling hands ... was always a basketball player first, and it has taken time for him to fully dedicate himself to football, but the Ohio State coaches say his energy improved each year ... Wisconsin pass rusher Nick Herbig called Jones the best blocker he faced (Herbig: "That guy is a monster.") ... has clear upside with his age (young for a fourth-year senior) and background as a basketball-first athlete who has now embraced football.

WEAKNESSES: High cut and sets tall, which leads to leverage breakdowns ... ends up on the ground when he overextends and needs to shed the bad habits ... gets in his own head and is late to anticipate/counter inside moves, allowing rushers to attack his inside half ... tries to get a head start in pass pro, and his sheer size makes it easier for officials to spot when he leaves early (five false starts in 2022) ... grabby hands ... occasionally leans on blocks in the run game instead of controlling them ... would like to see more "nasty" to his finish ... his discipline is a work in progress (16 total penalties the last two seasons as a starter) ... managing his weight and body composition will be imperative in the NFL (refused to weigh in at the Ohio State pro day) ... NFL scouts grade him as a scheme-specific right tackle only.

SUMMARY: A two-year starter at Ohio State, Jones lined up at right tackle in head coach Ryan Day's zone/RPO-based offense. Although it took time for his mentality to change from "I'm a basketball player" to "I'm a football player," he showed improvements each year in Columbus, including an All-American senior season in which he didn't allow a single sack. As a run blocker, Jones flashes the heavy hands to steer and create movement and uses his natural size to cave in defenders on down blocks. As a pass blocker, he is effective when he can quick-set, eliminate space and get his hands on his target before they get into their rush, but covering up inside on wide-nine NFL speed is a different animal. Overall, Jones needs continued refinement with his decision-making and reaction skills, but he is a masher in the run game and his rare size/length and improved balance in pass pro have him on the trajectory to be an NFL starter. He will be valued higher by NFL teams that covet size and run blocking at right tackle.

GRADE: 2nd Round (No. 62 overall)

7. TYLER STEEN | Alabama 6060 | 321 lbs. | 5SR Miami, Fla. (St. Thomas Aquinas) 6/24/2000 (age 22.84) #54

BACKGROUND: Tyler Steen, who is the oldest of three boys, was born and raised in Miami in a military family. His father (Daris), who played football as a walk-on at LSU, is a retired marine. Tyler's maternal grandfather (Sgt. Rodney M. Davis) enlisted with the Fifth Marine Division in California and served in the Vietnam War where he made the ultimate sacrifice by throwing himself on a live enemy grenade. For his bravery, he was posthumously awarded the Medal of Honor. Steen first played football at the youth level (often coached by his father) and continued playing at Doral Academy in middle and high school, primarily on the defensive line. Prior to his senior year, he transferred to football powerhouse St. Thomas Aquinas High School in Fort Lauderdale where he was teammates with several future NFL players, including Elijah Moore (Browns), Asante Samuel (Chargers) and Nik Bonitto (Broncos). In his final prep season, Steen started at left tackle and defensive end/tackle and helped Aquinas to a 12-3 record and a regional championship.

A three-star recruit, Steen was the No. 112 offensive tackle in the 2018 recruiting class and the No. 180 recruit in Florida. He started to receive scholarship offers after his junior season, with some programs projecting him as an offensive lineman while others saw him on defense. Steen verbally committed to Louisville at the start of his senior season but kept his recruitment open. Playing at St. Thomas Aquinas raised his recruiting profile and he added scholarship offers from Duke, Kentucky, Wake Forest and Virginia. After taking an official visit to Vanderbilt in December 2017, Steen decommitted from Louisville and committed to the Commodores. He signed as a two-way player and started his college career on the defensive line in 2018 before transitioning to offensive tackle full time in 2019. After four seasons at Vandy, Steen entered the transfer portal in January 2022 and took official visits to Alabama, LSU and NC State before committing to the Tide. He graduated with his degree from Vanderbilt (May 2022) before enrolling at Alabama. His younger brother (Blake), who also played at St. Thomas Aquinas, is a guard at Virginia. His younger brother (Dylan) is a 2026 football recruit and already holds a scholarship offer from Kentucky. Steen accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl.

PRO DAY	6057	321	32 1/2	10 3/4	80 1/2	-	-	-	-	-	4.50	7.78	- (no runs – choice)

STRENGTHS: Good-looking frame with excellent lower-body/bubble thickness ... packed on 20 pounds between his junior and senior seasons and it showed in a positive way on his 2022 film ... efficient mover and usually gains proper depth to close space on rushers ... uses bend to roll into contact with leverage ... his hands stay ready for accurate strikes and don't weigh him down ... displays grip strength once his massive hands lock on ... uses his initial quickness to scoop, reach and seal ... pays close attention to his run-blocking angles ... processes well and his eyes don't fool him ... durable and started 46 consecutive games (every game the last four seasons) ... has experience at left and right tackle (he only played tackle in college, but his skill set suggests position versatility at guard).

WEAKNESSES: His foundation in pass protection tends to break down quickly ... has a tough time sitting down and controlling power opponents ... needs to do a better job repositioning his feet to answer different types of rushers ... needs to better protect himself against inside moves ... finds himself in awkward spots when he lunges and gets his upper half overextended (five holding penalties in 2022) ... struggles to get defenders moving in the run game ... inconsistent making the back-side cutoff block ... discouraging batting average when climbing to the second level ... want to see him become more of a finisher ... didn't take a single snap inside at guard or center in college.

SUMMARY: A one-year starter at Alabama, Steen filled the shoes of Evan Neal at left tackle in former offensive coordinator Bill O'Brien's balanced offense. Initially a defensive lineman at Vanderbilt in 2018, he moved to the offensive line for the Commodores before transferring to the Tide, adding good weight and earning all-SEC honors in 2022. Steen shows range in pass protection and works hard to stay connected because of his active hands and reset skills. However, he tends to encounter mechanical breakdowns in his attempts to sink or control his target, leaving him off balance. Overall, Steen tends to forget his feet mid-engagement, but he moves well and looks like a capable NFL player when his hands and feet match up. He projects as a position-versatile NFL backup with potential to be more (a better version of Bobby Hart).

8. NICK SALDIVERI | Old Dominion

6062 | 318 lbs. | SSR

Waxhaw, N.C. (Parkwood)

#64

BACKGROUND: Nicholas "Nick" Saldiveri (Sal-duh-very), who has one older brother, was raised by his mother (Jennifer Townsend) after his father died when Nick was age 2. Saldiveri grew up south of Charlotte and attended Parkwood High School. After playing on JV and as a backup his first two years, Saldiveri became the starting left tackle on varsity as a junior. He played both ways as a senior and earned first team All-Conference in 2017. Saldiveri also was a center on the basketball team and lettered in track, setting personal bests in the discus (91-4) and shot put (33-8).

A two-star recruit, Saldiveri was the No. 199 offensive tackle in the 2018 recruiting class and the No. 76 recruit in North Carolina. Saldiveri was late on the recruiting trail and received offers from Old Dominion and Richmond during his junior season. Though several Power 5 programs like Duke, North Carolina and NC State showed interest, Saldiveri committed to Old Dominion (recruited by assistant coach Arick Forrest) after his junior year and shut down his recruitment, staying loyal to the first program to pursue him. He graduated with his degree in sport management. Saldiveri has a lab puppy (Winnie). He accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl.

STRENGTHS: Stout, square frame with functional length and large hands ... efficient setup quickness to get into position and center himself to rushers ... agile footwork to redirect or handle gap shooters ... mobile and can make the frontside reach block ... well-timed extension to keep rushers at bay ... able to chop down defenders once they get into his frame ... keeps his head on a swivel pre- and post-snap with the vision to pass off and pick up blitzes/stunts ... voted a senior captain and isn't afraid to fire up the troops or bring positive energy to the huddle ... has functional starting experience at both tackle and guard and took reps at center during Senior Bowl week.

WEAKNESSES: Needs to unlock his hips to generate more torque with his lower body ... not a consistent drive blocker and loses balance on down blocks ... eager and thoughtful hands, but his placement can be sporadic (career-high three holding penalties in 2022) ... caught lunging when attempting to connect versus explosive rushers post-contact ... might not have the range to stay outside at tackle versus NFL speed ... the suddenness in his recovery is average ... inconsistent sink when tasked with anchoring against power ... needs to improve his break-down skills to adjust at the second level.

SUMMARY: A three-year starter at Old Dominion, Saldiveri primarily played right tackle in head coach Ricky Rahne’s balanced offense. A late bloomer in high school, his college tapes got better and better, and he was a bright spot (didn’t allow a sack in 2022) for an offense that averaged under 20 points per game last season. With his anticipation and lower-body balance, Saldiveri has the reactive quickness to mirror rushers and “lose slowly” because of his counter measures. Though he has technical focus with his hands, feet and eyes, he tends to get high on drive blocks and will overextend himself against shifty rushers. Overall, Saldiveri needs to refine his aiming points and recovery skills to combat NFL strength, but his mental approach and athletic body control will keep his head above water. He is a scheme-diverse NFL prospect capable of backing up multiple positions on the line.

GRADE: 3rd-4th Round (No. 96 overall)

9. CARTER WARREN | Pittsburgh 6054 | 311 lbs. | 6SR Paterson, N.J. (Passaic Tech) 1/19/1999 (age 24.27) #77

BACKGROUND: Carter Warren, who is one of two children, grew up in Paterson (north of Newark) where he started playing sports as a child. He attended Passaic County Technical Institute where he was a four-year varsity letterman. After a part-time role as a freshman and sophomore, Warren started at left tackle as a junior, missing four games because of an arm injury. Still, he was a key reason Passaic Tech posted a 10-2 record and won the North 1, Group 5 state championship, the school’s first title since 2001. As a senior, he earned First-Team All-State and All-Group honors at left tackle, leading the program to a nine-win season and the group title game. Warren also added starting defensive tackle duties to his resume as a senior, posting 36 tackles, three tackles for loss and a forced fumble.

A three-star recruit, Warren was the No. 48 offensive tackle in the 2017 recruiting class and the No. 9 recruit in New Jersey. As a junior, he received his first offer from Rutgers, which was followed by several high-profile programs reaching out with scholarships like Michigan, Penn State and Tennessee. With 20 total offers, Warren narrowed down his choice to Maryland, Pittsburgh and Virginia Tech and committed to head coach Pat Narduzzi midway through his senior year. He took advantage of the extra year of eligibility due to the pandemic and returned to Pitt for a sixth season in 2022, but his campaign was cut short by injury. He has two cousins who played college football: Darnell Carter was a linebacker at Virginia (2006-10), and Keith Lumpkin was an offensive lineman at Rutgers (2011-15). Warren graduated with his degree in administration of justice (May 2021) and is pursuing a second major in communication (he wants to be in law enforcement after football). He accepted his invitation to the 2023 East-West Shrine Bowl but did not practice because of his knee injury.

STRENGTHS: Thick-framed blocker with a broad chest and engulfing wingspan ... shows the ability to stay coordinated as a pass blocker when he frames his wide shoulders ... controls his lateral movements to mirror outside speed ... creates leverage for himself when he locks out and relies on his length advantage ... keeps his hands in a ready position to access his punch ... his hands aren’t consistently powerful, but he plays with the core strength needed to slow down rushers ... keeps his hands and hips in sync to create vertical displacement in the run game ... voted a senior captain for the 2022 season and has played a lot of football (39 starts the last four seasons).

WEAKNESSES: His weight tends to favor his outside foot, creating issues against inside moves ... his hands often land outside and he struggles to sustain and control his man ... needs to sharpen his depth points to keep up with NFL rush speed ... doesn’t have ideal body control on the move as a puller or climber ... combined for 11 penalties over his last 15 games in college, including eight false starts ... an older player; already 24 years old ... all of his starting experience came at left tackle (though he also lined up as an inline tight end in 2021) ... suffered a season-ending meniscus tear in his left knee (September 2022), missing the final nine games of his final season and most of the pre-draft process.

SUMMARY: A four-year starter at Pittsburgh, Warren was a mainstay at left tackle in offensive coordinator Frank Cignetti’s balanced scheme. Considered a likely Day 3 draft pick after the 2021 season, he returned to Pitt for his “super senior” season, which was cut short by a knee injury. As a pass blocker, Warren is efficient in his setup and displays effective use of independent hands mid-engagement. He creates vertical displacement in the run game (when he wants to), but his inconsistent leverage and hand technique lead to negative reps. Overall, Warren’s average athletic profile and timing might keep him from being a steady NFL starter, but he has a ready-made frame with long arms, body control and play strength in his pass sets. He has the tools to carve out a swing tackle role.

10. BRAEDEN DANIELS | Utah 6035 | 294 lbs. | 5SR Carrollton, Texas (Hebron) 8/22/2000 (age 22.68) #71

BACKGROUND: Braeden (BRAY-den) Daniels, who is an only child, grew up in Texas, just north of Dallas. He played multiple sports throughout childhood, including baseball, basketball, karate and soccer. Daniels started playing football on the defensive line in middle school, including a stint in Deion Sanders’ Truth Select sports league. He attended Hebron High School in Carrollton where he moved to the offensive line and was a four-year letterman, seeing varsity action as a freshman. As a junior starting left tackle, Daniels earned First-Team All-District honors and led Hebron to the 2016 district championship. He earned unanimous First-Team All-District honors as a senior, playing both left and right tackle. His offensive line coach at Hebron was also the shot-put coach on the track team and recruited Daniels to join the track team. He threw javelin, discus and earned all-district honors in the shot put, finishing fourth at regionals with a personal best of 51’1.25.”

A three-star recruit, Daniels was the No. 62 offensive guard in the 2018 recruiting class and the No. 199 recruit in Texas. He started to receive FBS scholarship offers after his junior season, initially from Tulsa, Texas State, Arkansas State and Houston. Daniels received only two Power 5 offers, from Illinois and Utah, and he committed to head coach Lovie Smith and the Illini prior to his senior year in August 2017. However, Utah continued to recruit him, and Daniels decided to flip and sign with Utah during the early signing period. His mother (Yronica) played college basketball at McNeese State University and earned First-Team All-Southland honors in 1987, averaging 9.8 rebounds per game. Daniels accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl.

PRO DAY	6036	307	33 5/8	9 3/8	82 5/8	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	- (no bench press – right shoulder)

STRENGTHS: Adequate frame, bulk and length for NFL work ... has the timing out of his stance to jump-set quick pass rushers ... displays flexibility and knee bend in his lateral shuffle ... shifts his weight well on his inside foot to answer cross-face blockers ... strong, heavy hands to stay connected in the run game (wasn't flagged for holding in 2022) ... rolls his hips into contact to initiate leverage, especially on combos ... his coaches and NFL scouts agree that his intelligence is a strong selling point ... started double-digit games at three different positions in college ... the Utah coaches say he has five-position versatility (snapped the ball at center in practice) and was the vocal leader of the offensive line (head coach Kyle Whittingham: "He's the guy that everyone looks to.") ... didn't miss a game the last four years.

WEAKNESSES: Inconsistent recovery skills in pass protection because of untrustworthy reaction technique and recognition ... needs to shore up his footwork and consistently bring his feet with him to avoid lunging ... doesn't have ideal blocking range on the edges to consistently win races to the corner ... mediocre anchor strength and can be long-armed onto his heels ... his fundamentals have improved each year, but they aren't yet at an NFL level ... needs to drive his feet to create more of a steady push in the run game ... if his hands aren't precise, they fall off pretty quickly ... added 13 pounds between the Combine and his pro day.

SUMMARY: A three-year starter at Utah, Daniels moved to left tackle as a senior in offensive coordinator Andy Ludwig's scheme. He didn't play offensive line until high school (he credits his shot-put training for developing his blocking techniques) and became a five-position blocker for the Utes, moving from left guard to right tackle to left tackle (zero sacks allowed in 2022). Over the last four seasons, Daniels has been an ascending blocker as he learned how to properly use his body flexibility and active hands at multiple positions. His balance deteriorates once engaged when his feet or technique aren't on time, but his mistakes become less and less frequent with each game. Overall, Daniels will require development time to refine his footwork and consistency to match up with NFL rushers, but he has the athletic twitch and versatility to boost an offensive line depth chart in the NFL. His experience at multiple positions is a plus and he grades as a swing tackle/guard with down-the-road starting upside.

11. JAELYN DUNCAN | Maryland 6055 | 306 lbs. | SSR New Carrollton, Md. (St. Frances) 7/8/2000 (age 22.80) #71

BACKGROUND: Jaelyn Duncan had a challenging upbringing and didn't have the resources to play sports growing up. He attended Northern High School in Calvert County where he was introduced to football at age 14. Duncan played travel football as a freshman for the Patuxent Rhinos 15-U team. He joined the varsity team at Northern as a sophomore and junior, starting at left tackle. As a senior, Duncan transferred to St. Frances Academy, a Catholic high school in Baltimore. He joined a team that included several high-profile recruits like Eyabi Anoma (Alabama) and Chris Braswell (Alabama). Starting at left tackle, Duncan helped St. Frances to a 13-0 season and earned First-Team All-Metro and Under Armour All-American honors.

A four-star recruit, Duncan was the No. 11 offensive tackle in the 2018 recruiting class and the No. 6 recruit in Maryland (second-ranked offensive lineman in the state behind Rasheed Walker). His recruitment took off as a junior, and he collected offers from several SEC (Florida, LSU, Tennessee) and Big Ten (Michigan, Ohio State, Penn State) programs. But his desire to stay close to home led him to Maryland. Duncan accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl.

STRENGTHS: Impressive athletic gifts with a tall, moldable frame ... has the lateral foot quickness and patient hands to cut off arc speed unstressed ... loose in his movements to quickly reset/respond versus spins and shakes ... flexible hips to adjust once he latches to prolong engagement ... improved understanding of blocking angles ... effective catch technique on kick-outs ... mobile blocker to execute challenging move/reach blocks and various pulls ... when he stays under control, he looks comfortable picking off and burying linebackers in space ... four-year starter (39 starts in college).

WEAKNESSES: Upright pass setter and struggles versus length and power ... wide, tardy hands, often giving up his chest and allowing rushers to bully him ... struggles to counter versus long-arm techniques who attack his body ... his balance and footwork fall apart when attempting to recover ... his poor leverage negates any power ... below-average fire into his blocks and not a drive finisher ... underwhelming strength in his hands/grip ... easily reaches the second level, but below-average connect rate and has too many missed assignments in the run game ... finicky motor and doesn't always fight through the whistle ... his compete levels fluctuate from snap to snap, lacking the finishing aggression coaches desire (NFL scout: "You have to push him, keep him motivated.") ... flag magnet in college, drawing 20 penalties over his final two seasons in college ... was a left tackle only in college and doesn't have experience at other positions ... suffered a concussion during Senior Bowl week (February 2023) ... added 16 pounds between the Combine and his pro day.

SUMMARY: A four-year starter at Maryland, Duncan was a mainstay at left tackle in head coach Mike Locksley's balanced offense and should be the first Maryland offensive lineman drafted since 2010. He became a starter as a redshirt freshman and showed improvements each season. However, his senior year fell short of expectations with six of his seven sacks allowed coming against the top opponents on the schedule (Michigan, Ohio State and Penn State). Duncan has the big-man athleticism to fluidly reach his landmarks in both pass protection and the run game. But his leverage, anchor and mechanics fall apart quickly at contact and hurt his ability to sustain, especially against long-armed, powerful rushers who can turn him into a turnstile (he did show some improvements in those areas during Senior Bowl practices). Overall, Duncan has desirable athletic tools, but the continued issues with his technique, balance and competitive makeup (especially for a four-year starter) are worrisome for his NFL transition. His projection might be best inside to guard in a zone-based scheme.

GRADE: 4th-5th Round

12. WANYA MORRIS | Oklahoma 6053 | 307 lbs. | 4SR Grayson, Ga. (Grayson) 10/10/2000 (age 22.55) #64

BACKGROUND: Wanya (WAHN-yay) Morris, the third of four children, was born in Savannah and started playing football at age 5. His mother (Bennetta Johnson-Morris) moved the family to the metro Atlanta area when Morris, who was named after the Boyz II Men band member of the same name, was in elementary school. At age 9, he joined the Gwinnett Chargers youth football team where he was coached by Kenyatta Watson Sr., who became a "father figure" to him. Living in the east Atlanta suburb of Loganville, Morris enrolled at Grayson High School, which had one of the top football programs in the state (and was where Watson Sr. served as the director of football operations). After playing on varsity as a 230-pound freshman offensive tackle and defensive end, he helped Grayson to a 14-1 record and the 2016 7A state championship. Lined up at left tackle, Morris led Grayson to double-digit wins in each of his final two seasons. As a senior in 2018, Morris helped Grayson average over 35 points and nearly 200 rushing yards per game, earning First-Team All-American and All-State honors. He also lettered in track as a freshman where he put up personal bests of 37'0" in the shot put and 84'4" in the discus.

A five-star recruit, Morris was the No. 6 offensive tackle in the 2019 recruiting class and the No. 5 recruit in Georgia. Grayson had 13 football players from the 2019 recruiting class sign with Division I programs, led by Morris and linebacker Owen Pappoe, who were both five-stars and ranked in top 30 nationally. Morris' recruitment heated up during his sophomore year when he earned his first offers from Boston College and Syracuse, which were followed by SEC offers like Auburn and LSU. He initially committed to Florida State in April 2017 but reopened his recruitment six months later. The summer before his senior year, Morris received an invitation to Nike's "The Opening" and was named MVP among the offensive linemen. He didn't consider Tennessee until Jeremy Pruitt was hired as head coach prior to the 2018 season. Morris went back and forth between Auburn and Tennessee (silently committing to both) before choosing the Volunteers on signing day. He was the No. 2 recruit in Tennessee's 2019 class, one spot behind Darnell Wright and one spot ahead of Henry To'oTo'o. With Pruitt on his way out amid recruiting violations, Morris entered the transfer portal in January 2021 and signed with Oklahoma (over Texas A&M and USC) a week later. He opted out of the 2022 bowl game and accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl.

PRO DAY	6050	317	35 1/2	10	84 1/4	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	- (no workout – right hamstring)

STRENGTHS: Exceptional size and athleticism ... above-average arm length and one of the longest wingspans of any prospect in the class ... quick out of his stance and moves well to get into position ... above-average body control in his pass sets, bending his knees and extending his reach to mirror rushers ... shifts his weight well to recover after initially overextending himself ... flashes natural shock in his hands when his punch is on schedule ... looks to finish with physicality ... uses his lateral agility in the run game to reach three-techniques and execute on the move ... rangy puller with good vision to find his fit ... has starting experience at both left and right tackle.

WEAKNESSES: Continuous leverage problems ... his base narrows versus power, negating his anchor ... uses a giant hop back when attempting to settle bull rushers, constricting the pocket ... his punch is often tardy or wide, leaving his hands outside the blocker's frame ... rushers are able to set him up and he struggles to stay balanced versus rush sequencing ... inconsistent body balance after contact ... needs to rely more on his body to shield run lanes ... suffered a partially torn labrum in his hip in high school and had surgery following his freshman season at Tennessee (January 2020); left the TCU game and his left arm was in a sling postgame (October 2020); suffered a grade 2 right hamstring injury when running the 40-yard dash at the combine (March 2023) ... NFL teams will examine his minor off-field incidents: was named as the defendant in a small-claims dispute after he was evicted from his apartment (August 2022); was caught on camera punching a field-storming TCU fan after a game (October 2022); served a two-game suspension to start the 2022 season (academics).

SUMMARY: A one-year starter at Oklahoma, Morris lined up at right tackle in offensive coordinator Jeff Lebby's up-tempo, RPO-based scheme. A former five-star recruit and left tackle at Tennessee, he served as Anton Harrison's backup at left tackle in 2021 before becoming the starter on the right side in 2022. An above-average athlete for his size, Morris displays outstanding body control and weight distribution in his movements (both pass sets and run blocking). However, his rhythm starts to fall apart at contact because his upper and lower halves are often doing two different things at the same time, leaving him off-balance. Overall, Morris has NFL starting talent with his frame, length and athletic traits, but he looks like a completely different player when his leverage and technique fall apart. If he learns to become more fundamentally sound, he can lock down a swing tackle role in the NFL and eventually become a starter.

GRADE: 4th-5th Round

13. BLAKE FREELAND | BYU 6077 | 302 lbs. | 4SR Herriman, Utah (Herriman) 5/3/2001 (age 21.98) #71

BACKGROUND: Blake Freeland, who has four sisters, was a multisport athlete growing up. He played quarterback as a youth and was an avid basketball player, including on the AAU circuit where he played on the same team as BYU wide receiver Puka Nacua. Freeland attended Herriman High School where he was a four-year letterman on varsity and played a variety of positions. After helping the program to the 2015 5A state championship as a freshman, he was the starting quarterback as a sophomore and junior and combined for 1,314 passing yards, 53 rushing yards and 15 total touchdowns. For his final season, Freeland moved to tight end and defensive line and earned All-State honors with 13 receptions for 167 yards and one touchdown. A standout track athlete, he earned All-State honors six times and was named the 2019 Gatorade Utah boys track athlete of the year (becoming the first in school history to win the award). Freeland swept the shot put (64’6”), discus (165’2”) and javelin (186’7.25”) at the 2019 state championships and his shot put was fifth in the nation. His personal best in the javelin (188’4”) set a 6A state record. Freeland was also a multiyear captain and the starting center on the Herriman basketball team, earning Honorable Mention All-State honors as a junior with 8.6 points and 6.0 rebounds per game.

A three-star recruit, Freeland was the No. 105 athlete in the 2019 recruiting class and the No. 9 recruit in Utah. He grew up a devout BYU fan (his parents met at BYU and were dual-sport college athletes) and committed to the Cougars after his sophomore season (June 2017) when he was still playing quarterback. He visited the University of Utah and strongly considered flipping to the Utes, especially after coaching changes at BYU. But his heart led him to Provo, and he signed with the idea that he would be moving to the offensive line for the first time. Freeland is a member of the Church of Latter Day Saints but did not serve a religious mission before enrolling at BYU. His father (James) played linebacker at Ricks College and BYU (1994-95) and threw for the Cougars’ track team. His mother (Debbie) was a dual-sport athlete at BYU (1991-95), playing volleyball and earning All-American honors in basketball. His older sister (Sierra) was on the BYU track team (2017-22) and participated in the shot put, discus, javelin and hammer throw. Freeland accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl.

PRO DAY	6074	302	33 3/4	9 5/8	82 1/4	-	-	-	-	-	4.42	7.34	25 (stood on Combine runs and jumps)

STRENGTHS: Exceptional body length with hard-earned lean muscle mass on his frame ... light movements with the feet of a basketball player ... state-champion thrower in high school and that explosiveness translates to the football field ... shows the reactive athleticism to occupy rushers racing to the corner (his 1.69 10-yard split, 37-inch vertical and 10’0” broad jump were No. 1 among all offensive linemen at the combine) ... has improved his hand work and can tie up defenders once he engages ... comfortable on the move to quickly position his long pulls ... gets defenders moving on down blocks when he pumps his feet at contact ... fluid enough to swing his hips and seal outside runs ... one of the least-penalized left tackles in 2022 (two false starts, zero holding penalties) ... worked hard to add 120 pounds over the last six years ... offers functional experience at both left and right tackle with 41 career college starts.

WEAKNESSES: High hipped and plays tall, which disrupts his balance ... can be jarred by power and needs to continue developing his body/base strength (has the frame to comfortably carry 325-330 pounds) ... sets hard on his outside foot, leaving his inside leg vulnerable (struggles to answer inside rush moves) ... the depth of his steps and timing of his hands are still very raw (BYU offensive line coach Darrell Funk: “Blake is just a baby ... he knows he has a lot to learn.”) ... tends to duck his head at contact, and NFL coaches will be tasked with shedding his bad technical habits ... uses excessive lean as a run blocker to compensate for his height and falls off his target ... his communication can improve to better handle stunts.

SUMMARY: A four-year starter at BYU, Freeland lined up at left tackle in offensive coordinator Aaron Roderick’s zone-based scheme. A 6-foot-7, 190-pound sophomore quarterback in high school, he moved to the offensive line in college and showed improvements each season (zero sacks allowed and only two penalties in 2022). With his family genes, Freeland has an impressive athletic background for his size and is still figuring out how to unlock his natural gifts. However, he is raw as he struggles to sustain blocks or drop his pad level to strengthen his base, often leaving him on the ground. Overall, Freeland’s inexperience and the lesser-developed aspects of his game (leverage points, play strength, etc.) will be exposed by NFL talent, but he has the feet, length and upside to warrant being a mid-round draft pick. He is a work in progress who should eventually compete for an NFL team’s No. 3 tackle spot and potentially more.

14. ASIM RICHARDS | North Carolina 6042 | 309 lbs. | 4SR Philadelphia, Pa. (Haverford) 10/2/2000 (age 22.57) #72

BACKGROUND: Asim (AH-sim) Richards was born and raised in Philadelphia and started playing football at age 8. He considered himself more of a basketball player growing up and into high school. Richards attended The Haverford School, a private all-boys school, and was a two-sport standout. In football, he was a four-year varsity letterman and spent the majority of his time as a tight end and defensive end. As a junior, Richards was named Second-Team All-Conference on defense with 51 tackles, 10 tackles for loss, four sacks and a forced fumble. He finished his prep career with 133 tackles, 31 tackles for loss, 13 sacks and three forced fumbles. Midway through his senior year, he moved to offensive tackle where he started four games and earned First-Team All-USA Pennsylvania and All-Conference honors. Richards also earned letters all four seasons as a center on the basketball team.

A three-star recruit, Richards was the No. 74 offensive tackle in the 2019 recruiting class and the No. 17 recruit in Pennsylvania. He started to receive attention from FBS programs after his sophomore season, receiving offers from Rutgers and West Virginia. Richards received 13 total offers and narrowed that down to a top six of Boston College, Duke, Maryland, North Carolina, Tennessee and Virginia. Prior to his senior season, he committed to former head coach Larry Fedora and the Tar Heels. After Mack Brown replaced Fedora a few months later, Richards kept his commitment and signed as part of Brown’s first recruiting class in his return to Chapel Hill. Richards is set to graduate with his degree in May 2023. He accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl.

STRENGTHS: Thick, long-armed build ... plays on his feet and quickly gets into his blocks ... functional kick slide movements on the edge ... adds a little spice to his punch with a decent recoil ... has worked to build up his core strength ... able to lock on and nudge bodies in the run game ... shows measured steps on the move as a reacher, scooper, puller and climber ... has a good feel for sealing the edge on play-side runs ... his technique showed positive progress as a senior compared to what he put on film as an underclassman ... rarely came off the field (1,050 offensive snaps in 2022) ... durable, playing in every game the last three seasons, including 34 straight starts to finish his college career.

WEAKNESSES: Upright out of his stance and late to answer inside moves ... tardy adjusting his angles and needs to do a better job repositioning his hands/feet for improved control once engaged ... his run-blocking reps are very inconsistent (see 2022 Notre Dame tape) and defenders can break his sustain ... struggles to refit underneath his blocks once defenders reach his chest ... needs to get his hips engaged to fully unlock his drive block potential ... his blocking instincts are still a work in progress ... offers marginal experience anywhere except left tackle and looked much more comfortable at tackle than guard during Senior Bowl practices ... only did position drills at the combine because of a right hip injury (March 2023).

SUMMARY: A three-year starter at North Carolina, he lined up at left tackle in former offensive coordinator Phil Longo’s multiple run scheme. He didn’t start playing offensive line until midway through his senior year of high school, but adapted well in Chapel Hill, protecting the blind side of Sam Howell and Drake Maye the last three seasons. Richards appears more comfortable in pass protection where he uses his basketball background and length to square up and occupy rushers. However, his subpar lower-body flexibility and reactive athleticism will be tested versus savvy NFL rushers. Overall, Richards needs development time to become more of a leverage-and-sustain blocker, but things appeared to slow down for him as a senior and he is trending in the right direction. With his traits, a good offensive line coach should be able to turn him into a capable NFL backup or swing tackle.

GRADE: 5th-6th Round

15. WARREN MCCLENDON | Georgia 6041 | 306 lbs. | 4JR Brunswick, Ga. (Brunswick) 4/11/2001 (age 22.04) #70

BACKGROUND: Warren McClendon Jr., who has a sister (Mila), grew up on the southeast coast of Georgia near the Florida border. He started playing football in elementary school, often lining up at quarterback. McClendon soon outgrew the position, however, and moved to the offensive line for good in the fifth grade. He enrolled at Brunswick High School where he started out on JV before getting called up to varsity as a freshman. McClendon became the starting right tackle as a sophomore and earned All-State honors as a junior. He played both left and right tackle as a senior and took home First-Team All-Region and All-State honors. McClendon also lettered in basketball, leading Brunswick to the 6A state championship game as a sophomore.

A four-star recruit, McClendon was the No. 20 offensive tackle in the 2019 recruiting class and the No. 25 recruit in Georgia (No. 5 offensive line recruit in the state). His first offer came from Alabama shortly after his freshman season and was followed by dozens of other major schools. McClendon had a final five of Auburn, Florida, Georgia, South Carolina and Tennessee before naming Georgia and South Carolina as the finalists. He was close to committing to the Gamecocks because his cousin (Bryan), who played wide receiver at Georgia (2002-05), was South Carolina’s offensive coordinator. But McClendon always dreamed of playing in Athens and committed to Georgia the summer before his senior year, becoming the latest McClendon to play football for the Bulldogs. Warren’s uncle (Willie), who is Bryan’s father, played running back at Georgia and was a third-round NFL Draft pick (No. 66 overall) in 1979, playing four seasons with the Chicago Bears. Warren’s other uncle (Tyrone) was a defensive lineman at Georgia. Days after Georgia’s national championship in January 2023, McClendon was involved in a fatal car accident that killed two, including Devin Willock, who was his teammate, roommate and close friend. McClendon elected to skip his senior season and enter the 2023 NFL Draft. He accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl but pulled out after the second practice (knee).

PRO DAY	6041	304	34 1/2	9 3/4	82 1/2	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	20 (position drills and bench only – choice)

STRENGTHS: Adequate slide and vertical set quickness to reach his landmarks and answer wide-nine speed ... long-armed blocker with accessible hands ... only two holding penalties in 28 starts the past two seasons ... able to control rushers with resistance when he stays inside with his two-hand strike ... his timely jabs are able to knock rushers off balance ... creates movement in the run game when he rolls his hips into the point of attack ... works well in tandem on double-teams before peeling off ... keeps his head on a swivel and adjusts well to delayed blitzes or stunts ... saw live reps at left tackle in a handful of games in 2022 ... three-year starting right tackle with 37 career starts.

WEAKNESSES: Plays with high hips, long legs and a narrow base ... often late to drop anchor and can be put in reverse ... doesn’t have desired fluidity in his lower half for smooth redirects/reaches ... average mobility and late to swing his hips on outside toss plays ... inconsistent breakdown and angles at the second level ... prefers to two-hand strike, which limits his margin for error when his timing/placement is off ... had two personal-foul penalties on his 2022 tape ... suffered a minor MCL injury in the 2022 SEC Championship Game (December 2022), missing the Ohio State game and coming off the bench against TCU; suffered minor injuries after he was “knocked out” in a tragic car crash (January 2023) that killed his teammate (Devin Willock) and a Georgia staffer (Chandler LeCroy); suffered a knee injury during the second Senior Bowl practice and missed the rest of the week (February 2023) and the combine (March 2023).

SUMMARY: A three-year starter at Georgia, McClendon was entrenched as the right tackle in former offensive coordinator Todd Monken’s balanced scheme. While not as praised as Georgia’s left tackles (Jamaree Salyer and Broderick Jones) the last two seasons, he didn’t allow a sack in 2021 or 2022 and was an important part of the Bulldogs’ back-to-back national titles. McClendon displays functional quickness off the ball with the initial steps and hand exchange to tie up rushers or fit his run blocks. However, he can be late to drop anchor and plays with below-average flexibility in his lower half, which creates soft edges for rushers when his two-hand strike doesn’t land. Overall, McClendon sees things quickly and plays with strong, physical hands. But with only average recovery balance, he has a small margin for error with his set points and technique. He is an average-twitch position blocker with little upside, but a chance to be a versatile tackle-guard backup.

GRADE: 6th Round

16. JOHN OJUKWU | Boise State 6056 | 309 lbs. | 6SR Boise, Idaho (Boise) 1/9/1999 (age 24.30) #70

BACKGROUND: John “OJ” Ojukwu (oh-JOO-koo) was born in the Atlanta area before moving to Boise in the fourth grade. He wrestled and ran track growing up, but his mother (Dawn) didn’t want him to get hurt playing football (his father is a surgeon in Nigeria). In the eighth grade, she gave in and allowed him to join the football team. Ojukwu enrolled at Boise High School and became a varsity starter as a sophomore, playing both ways as an offensive tackle and defensive lineman. He added weight prior to his senior season and had his best season in 2016, earning First-Team All-State and All-Conference honors. Ojukwu also lettered in wrestling and track.

A three-star recruit, Ojukwu was the No. 149 offensive tackle in the 2017 recruiting class and the No. 3 recruit in Idaho. At only 185 pounds as a junior left tackle, he realized that a football scholarship was a realistic possibility and added almost 100 pounds over the next nine months. Along with intensive weight training, he increased his calorie intake, including drinking a gallon of milk every day, to reach 275 pounds. Ojukwu didn’t have any offers after his junior season until he attended a Boise State camp in the summer of 2016 and earned a full-ride offer from former head coach Bryan Harsin almost on the spot. He took advantage of the extra year of eligibility and returned to Boise State for his sixth season in 2022. Ojukwu graduated with his degree in kinesiology and interned for Boise State’s sports performance department. He accepted his invitation to the 2023 East-West Shrine Bowl.

PRO DAY	6055	304	34 1/2	10 5/8	84 1/8	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	(stood on Combine testing)

STRENGTHS: Checks all the size boxes with his height, arm length and wingspan ... shuffles his feet to maintain his posture as a positional blocker ... gets out in space or reaches the second level in a hurry ... efficiently targets his landmarks and has an understanding of pass-set depth ... relies on his body strength and physical hands to create movement in the run game ... named a team captain in 2022 ... described as a “relentless worker and competitor” by his teammates and is “wired in a way that separates himself,” according to Boise State head coach Andy Avalos ... logged 51 starts over his career with experience at both left and right tackle.

WEAKNESSES: Plays tall with inconsistent lower-body bend ... susceptible to balance breakdowns when attempting to make quick adjustments ... predictable in his approach and needs to mix up his steps/punch ... savvy pass rushers take advantage of his irregular hand placement ... his anchor will have a tough time answering speed-to-power moves in the NFL ... plays with range, but his technique deteriorates the farther he travels ... already 24 years old ... offers plenty of on-field experience, but didn’t play guard in college.

SUMMARY: A five-year starter at Boise State, Ojukwu was a mainstay at left tackle in former offensive coordinator Tim Plough’s up-tempo RPO scheme. He closed out his run at Boise with 43 straight starts and posted triple zeroes as a super senior in 2022 (zero sacks allowed, zero false starts, zero holding penalties). Ojukwu reaches his landmarks in pass protection and patiently extends his arms to meet rushers, but his aiming points must become more consistently accurate. He plays with the competitive edge to seal run lanes and create movement on drive blocks. Overall, Ojukwu’s tape shows a workable frame, athletic movements and spurts of strength, but improved balance and body control will be crucial for him to carve out an NFL career. His best long-term position might be inside as a zone-blocking guard.

GRADE: 6th Round

17. EARL BOSTICK JR. | Kansas 6056 | 309 lbs. | 6SR Barnwell, S.C. (Barnwell) 12/31/1998 (age 24.33) #68

BACKGROUND: Earl Bostick Jr. (BOH-stick) grew up in a big family in a small town in the lower-west region of South Carolina. He was raised by his mother (Evelyn) and his father (Earl), who passed away from a brain tumor in May 2016. Bostick attended Barnwell High School where he played both ways as a defensive lineman and tight end. After earning All-Region honors as a junior, he had his best season as a senior, leading Barnwell to a 12-2 record and advancing to the 2017 2A state semifinals. Bostick earned All-Area and All-Region honors in 2017 and finished his senior year with 80 tackles, 17 tackles for loss, eight sacks, four forced fumbles and one interception, adding seven receptions for 247 yards and four touchdowns on offense. He also lettered in basketball and track at Barnwell, setting personal bests in the shot put (44’2.5”) and discus (125’8”).

A two-star recruit, Bostick was the No. 212 offensive tackle in the 2017 recruiting class and the No. 43 recruit in South Carolina. He entered his senior year unranked by most recruiting services, but he played alongside offensive tackle Marcus McKethan at Barnwell, which got him more attention. (A three-star recruit, McKethan played at North Carolina and was a fifth-round pick (No. 173 overall) of the New York Giants in 2022.) A 270-pound high school tight end, Bostick was viewed as a potential offensive tackle and picked up an offer from Appalachian State. He committed to the Mountaineers, but Kansas stumbled upon his high school film and gave him a late offer. Bostick visited Lawrence and flipped to the Jayhawks a few days before signing day. He took advantage of the extra year of eligibility due to the pandemic and returned to Kansas for his sixth season in 2022. Bostick accepted his invitation to the 2023 East-West Shrine Bowl.

PRO DAY	6054	310	33 7/8	9 3/8	81 3/4	-	-	-	-	-	4.63	7.60	21 (stood on Combine runs and jumps)

STRENGTHS: Big, athletic frame with functional length ... his lateral quickness allows him to make cut-off/reach blocks or mirror rushers to the corner ... displays above-average body control and weight transfer in his movements ... gets rolling downhill to deplete defenders on pulls ... his punching hands look more and more confident with each game ... strains his frame to adjust and stay connected ... his rangy eyes are always searching for his next victim ... added 40 pounds when he made the transition from tight end to offensive tackle in 2019 ... returned for a sixth season at Kansas to “be part of the change” in the program ... durable, finishing his career with 29 straight starts and experience at left and right tackle.

WEAKNESSES: Upright, narrow blocker and still learning the importance of body posture ... needs to continue adding bulk and strengthening his core ... undisciplined hand usage and raw technique make his job harder ... too many inefficiencies when he pops out of his stance as a run blocker ... needs to play with better control on the move and at the second level ... tends to predetermine set points instead of reading pass rushers ... needs to better utilize his lower-body flexibility to redirect and respond to inside moves ... lacks the lower-body girth to easily drop his anchor to answer power rushers ... only three years of playing experience on the offensive line and will turn 25 during his rookie season.

SUMMARY: A three-year starter at Kansas, Bostick lined up at left tackle in offensive coordinator Andy Kotelnicki’s multiple scheme. Playing for eight different position coaches in his six seasons in Lawrence, he made the full-time move from tight end to offensive tackle in 2019, and his return in 2022 helped Kansas to its first bowl game in 14 years. Bostick is long and athletic with the movement skills to answer speed in his pass sets or show off his range in the run game. However, his shaky anchor, false steps and unpolished technique lead to negative reps. Overall, Bostick moves with the slide quickness and athletic body control expected of a former tight end, but his play strength and timing aren’t currently on an NFL level, especially in the run game. He has the developmental tools that will give an NFL team optimism.

18. JAKE WITT | Northern Michigan 6071 | 302 lbs. | 5SR Bruce Crossing, Mich. (Ewen Trout) 2/7/2000 (age 23.22) #65

BACKGROUND: Jacob “Jake” Witt, who has one younger sister, was born and raised in Bruce Crossing, a small community on the Upper Peninsula of Michigan. His town didn’t have a pee-wee football program and he started playing basketball in the second grade. Witt attended Ewen Trout Creek High School where he graduated as the valedictorian of his 16-student class. He was a four-year starter on the basketball team and was named Upper Peninsula Mr. Basketball as a senior, averaging 27 points and 18 rebounds per game. He finished his basketball career with over 1,000 points and 1,000 rebounds. As a junior, Witt joined the football team, which was the first time he had ever played organized football. In his two seasons on the football field, he was a 235-pound wide receiver at Ewen Trout Creek, which played in an eight-man football league. Witt also lettered in track (sprints, relays and throws) and set personal bests in the 100 meters (12.88), 200 meters (25.47), shot put (45’11”), discus (162’0”) and long jump (15’7.25”).

A no-star recruit, Witt wasn’t well known on the recruiting trail, but he received plenty of attention from Division II programs in both basketball and football. He was leaning toward playing football in college, but he had a productive senior year in basketball and that became his focus. His final decision came down to Michigan Tech for basketball, Northern Michigan for football or a preferred walk-on opportunity at Central Michigan. Witt chose Michigan Tech basketball and he averaged 6.4 points per game as a freshman in 2018-19. While Michigan Tech was known for its engineering department, he decided to become a health sciences major and transferred to Northern Michigan prior to the 2019 school year. He didn’t play sports that year and “enjoyed just being a regular student.” He started training at a local gym and they convinced him to try playing football again. Witt joined the football team as a tight end at Northern Michigan in the spring of 2020 just weeks before the pandemic shut things down. After the 2020 season was canceled, he played tight end for the first eight games of the 2021 season until halftime against Ferris State when the coaches asked him to move to right tackle out of necessity because of injuries. He started the final two games of the season at right tackle and, the following year, moved to left tackle at 280 pounds. Witt graduated with his degree in applied exercise science and health and also received his certification as a personal trainer. He received an invitation to the 2023 College Gridiron Showcase but declined as he continued to add weight.

STRENGTHS: Tall, athletic frame with functional length ... had an “outstanding” pro-day workout, according to NFL scouts in attendance ... displays above-average lateral agility on inside/outside zone ... his slide quickness in pass protection allows him to mirror and stay centered against pass rushers (his basketball background is evident) ... impressive lower-body explosion (his 10’3” broad jump would have ranked the best among all offensive linemen at the combine over the last 10 years) ... keeps his hands ready to go at all times with a competent punch ... added 40 pounds of good weight over the last 18 months and his conditioning/training speaks for itself ... tested well mentally with NFL scouts and exhibits the processing skills and desire of a quick learner ... a former basketball coach described him as “super humble.”

WEAKNESSES: His inconsistent tape reflects his marginal football and offensive line experience ... will require extensive technique and muscle memory work ... needs to stay under control in his pass sets to avoid lunging with his upper half ... gives up his “square” too quickly, creating short corners ... has the hip flexibility to sink mid-stride, but lacks girth in his lower half and often plays tall, negating his base strength ... his pad level, hand leverage and angle blocking in the run game are works in progress ... needs to continue strengthening his core to better steer his target and match up with NFL power ... plays with natural athletic instincts, but his positional awareness and timing aren’t NFL ready ... only faced Division II competition (although that includes Ferris State’s Caleb Murphy).

SUMMARY: A one-year starter at left tackle at Northern Michigan, Witt made the transition from tight end to tackle in the Wildcats’ pro-style scheme. One of the wildest prospect backstories in this draft class, he was a little-used tight end in 2021 before he flourished at tackle when he was pushed to the offensive line by injuries. With only 13 career starts on the offensive line, his tape is understandably inconsistent, and he played much lighter than his current weight. However, Witt’s pro-day workout created a buzz among NFL scouts because of his remarkable testing numbers and movement skills in the positional drills. Overall, Witt is on the basement level in terms of his development on the offensive line. But with his athletic traits and natural talent, his ceiling for a patient coaching staff might be the penthouse. He is a draft-and-stash prospect worth a dart throw.

19. RYAN HAYES | Michigan 6063 | 298 lbs. | 5SR Traverse City, Mich. (West) 2/28/2000 (age 23.16) #76

BACKGROUND: Ryan Hayes, who is one of three children, grew up in Northern Michigan where he was active in youth sports throughout his childhood. He attended Traverse City West High School (the alma mater of former Bengals’ second-round pick and lineman Jake Fisher) where he was a three-sport star. Hayes became a varsity starter as a sophomore tight end and defensive end while also handling the punting duties. He recorded 20 receptions for 311 yards as a junior. As a senior, Hayes led West to a 9-2 record and the 2017 conference championship. He finished his final season with 24 catches for 515 yards and five touchdowns, adding 26 tackles, six tackles for loss and 1.5 sacks to earn All-State and All-Conference honors. Hayes was a three-year starter on the basketball team and as a senior was named the conference’s player of the year, averaging 15.2 points and 10.4 rebounds per game. He was standout baseball pitcher as well, posting a 4.75 earned run average with 102 strikeouts in 59 innings to earn the league’s pitcher of the year honors.

A four-star recruit, Hayes was the No. 23 offensive tackle in the 2018 recruiting class and the No. 5 recruit in Michigan (Aidan Hutchinson was No. 1 and Jalen Mayfield was No. 4). Thanks to some family connections, Central Michigan was his first scholarship offer during his junior season. He collected several national offers like Cal, TCU and Virginia, but he was focused on three nearby schools: Michigan, Michigan State and Notre Dame. Prior to his senior year, Hayes committed to the Wolverines, who also discussed the possibility of him joining the Michigan baseball team. Despite not playing offensive line in high school, he knew a position change was likely once he enrolled. His father (Mike) played offensive guard at Central Michigan (1987-89). His mother (Susan) was an All-American basketball player at Central Michigan (1987-90) and still holds 43 school records. She ranks second on the school’s all-time scoring list (1,938) and was inducted into CMU’s Hall of Fame in 2001. Ryan’s older brother (Connor) was a standout lineman at West and redshirted at Pittsburgh in 2014 before leaving the program. Hayes accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl.

PRO DAY	6065	305	32 7/8	9 7/8	79 1/4	-	-	-	-	-	4.68	7.49	- (stood on Combine runs, jumps)

STRENGTHS: A high school tight end who did a nice job filling out his frame (only 255 pounds as a high school senior) ... solid linear athleticism with light feet in his kick slide ... efficiently reaches his landmarks to set up shop ... quick into his blocks in the run game and plays stout when his hands stay controlled ... running back Blake Corum benefited from his left tackle’s feel for run angles when sealing the edge ... moves with good pacing on combos and as a climber to engage defenders at the second level ... only six career penalties over the last four seasons (2,114 total offensive snaps), including one as a senior.

WEAKNESSES: Disproportionate arm length for his height ... below-average core strength and often slow to drop his hips/anchor ... late replacing his hands in pass protection and will give up his chest because of flailing arms ... forced to lunge when attempting to cut off inside swims ... inconsistent leverage and tall pads once engaged, getting up on his toes ... appears stiff and narrow in his lower body when attempting to recover ... starts strong in the run game, but his sustain is inconsistent ... all 30 of his college starts came at left tackle and has limited experience at the other four positions.

SUMMARY: A two-year starter at Michigan, Hayes started at left tackle in head coach Jim Harbaugh’s power-spread offense. A high school tight end and defensive end, he made the transition to the offensive line in Ann Arbor and was the starting left tackle of the offensive lines that earned back-to-back Joe Moore Awards. Hayes didn’t allow a sack in 2022 and is efficient in his slide and setup, but his balance is often disrupted by speed, especially on the inside. He plays too narrow and struggles to access any power from his base to sustain blocks in the run game or counter pass rushers who control him with force. Overall, Hayes is quick, well coached and looks to play angles, but play strength is imperative in the NFL and that is an area in which he really struggles. He is a potential NFL backup if he learns to better compensate for his lack of ideal length and core strength.

GRADE: 7th Round

20. RICHARD GOURAIGE | Florida 6050 | 306 lbs. | 5SR Tampa, Fla. (Cambridge) 10/15/1998 (age 24.53) #76

BACKGROUND: Richard Gouraige (gur-AHJ), who is the oldest of three children, was born in Florida, but his mother (Kerlange) was pregnant with him when she immigrated from Haiti to give her unborn son a better life. He started playing football at age 5 and started to take it more seriously as he outgrew the other players. For his freshman year of high school, Gouraige enrolled at Cambridge Christian School, a small private school in Tampa. He was a four-year letterman on varsity and played both ways as an offensive and defensive lineman. As a senior left tackle, Gouraige led Cambridge Christian to a nine-win season and a conference championship, becoming the first player from the school to earn Under Armour All-American honors. On defense, he added 51 tackles and six sacks in 2017, giving him 210 tackles, 23.5 sacks, seven forced fumbles and two blocked field goals in his prep career. Gouraige also lettered in basketball, averaging 6.4 points per game in his final season.

A four-star recruit, Gouraige was the No. 7 offensive tackle in the 2018 recruiting class and the No. 18 recruit in Florida (No. 3 offensive lineman in the state behind close friend Nicholas Petit-Frere at No. 1). Gouraige was the No. 81 overall recruit nationally. Despite playing at a smaller high school, he started receiving major college offers after his freshman season. Gouraige finished with over three-dozen scholarship offers, including major programs like Alabama, Auburn, Florida State, Georgia, LSU, Michigan, Ohio State, Penn State, Texas and USC. He narrowed his final choice to Clemson and Florida and picked the Gators because they were close to home. Because of a coaching change, Gouraige didn't sign during the early period, but he stuck with the Gators and was the No. 2 recruit in head coach Dan Mullen's first recruiting class in Gainesville. He graduated with his degree in sociology (May 2022). Gouraige accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl.

STRENGTHS: Size and length that will translate well to the pro ranks ... adequate timing off the ball and into contact ... adjusts well on the move to neutralize edge quickness ... solid contact balance to withstand jolts and replace his hands ... aggressive in the run game, fitting his hands and running through contact ... appears to understand angles to wide run lanes ... well-timed from the point of attack to the second level ... his head stays on a swivel, limiting surprises ... NFL scouts describe him as a "humble, all-business" individual ... started 42 games in the SEC, initially at left guard and then outside at left tackle.

WEAKNESSES: Subpar footwork, body control and overall range ... doesn't have agility to reach and cut off the three-technique ... guilty of overreaching and holding as a result of inconsistent knee bend ... slow to releverage his hips/hands versus power rushers ... flashes natural strength in his base, but doesn't consistently tap into it, relying on his upper half as a run blocker ... struggles to consistently sustain on kick-out and down blocks ... only did the bench press at the combine because of a right ankle injury (March 2023)

SUMMARY: A four-year starter at Florida, Gouraige lined up at left tackle in head coach Billy Napier's zone-blocking scheme. After starting two seasons at left guard, he kicked outside to left tackle for the Gators and was an unassuming presence, which is a compliment for an offensive lineman. Gouraige is a sound, coachable player who might not appear sudden or twitchy, but he is coordinated in his movements. However, he lacks the lower-body flexibility to leverage his blocks and can be pulled off balance too easily. Overall, Gouraige boasts NFL size and has several tools to work with, but his lack of a true distinguishing trait could restrict his path to a full-time NFL role. He is a potential NFL backup.

GRADE: Priority Free Agent

21. DALTON WAGNER | Arkansas 6080 | 320 lbs. | 6SR Spring Grove, Ill. (Richmond Burton) 10/5/1998 (age 24.56) #78

BACKGROUND: Dalton Wagner, who is one of four children, grew up in Spring Grove, Ill., which is northwest of Chicago near the Wisconsin border. He enrolled at Richmond Burton High School where he was a three-year varsity starter on the offensive line (he grew five inches between his freshman and senior seasons). Playing right tackle for a triple-option offense, Wagner helped the team to a 9-2 record as a junior and was named First-Team All-Area in 2015. As a senior, he earned All-State, All-Area and All-Conference honors and again led Richmond Burton to the playoffs. Wagner also saw snaps on the defensive line and finished with 14 tackles as a senior. He was named a U.S. Army All-American.

A three-star recruit, Wagner was the No. 61 offensive tackle in the 2017 recruiting class and the No. 11 recruit in Illinois. After his junior season when he started to attend camps, the offers started rolling in, including Illinois, Indiana, Louisville, Purdue, Syracuse and Utah. But he was drawn to Arkansas because of the SEC and Bret Bielema, whom Wagner looked up to when he was developing offensive linemen as the head coach at Wisconsin. Wagner took advantage of his extra year of eligibility and returned to the Razorbacks for his sixth season in 2022. His father (Brad) played on the offensive line at Western Illinois (1987-91) and currently serves as the Vice President of Operations of a construction and paving company. Dalton's older brother (Bryce) played on the offensive line at Southern Illinois (2014-18), originally as a walk-on until he earned a scholarship as a junior. Wagner accepted his invitation to the 2023 East-West Shrine Bowl.

STRENGTHS: A large human with his taller stature and long arms ... flashes strength in his hand presence to strike with pop in his pass sets and grip and rip in the run game ... physical at contact to mash and move bodies from the lane ... able to settle down against the power rush to create a solid base ... stays on his schedule in pass protection to meet and mirror initial movements ... his coaches speak highly of his mental and physical toughness (head coach Sam Pittman: “He’s tougher than an ol’ billy goat.”) ... voted a 2022 team captain ... was a veteran presence in the Arkansas locker room and someone that his teammates relied on ... played in 53 games in college, including 40 starts versus SEC competition.

WEAKNESSES: Doesn’t have ideal body coordination and lower-body flexibility ... struggles to stay centered versus shifty counters in space ... his feet get clunky and his base narrows when on the move ... will panic at times in space and gets too far out in front of his feet ... his upright style will make it tougher to anchor versus NFL rushers ... doesn’t stray too far from the line of scrimmage as a downfield blocker ... missed three games as junior because of a broken finger that required surgery (October 2011); was limited during 2022 spring practices with a back injury.

SUMMARY: A four-year starter at Arkansas, Wagner was entrenched at right tackle in former offensive coordinator Kendal Briles’ zone-based scheme. He returned as a super senior and team captain in 2022 and had his best season, also signing an NIL deal with WWE (with his long hair and size, professional wrestling could be in his future). Wagner is a long positional blocker with the strength in his hands to latch and drive or get into the chest of defenders before they can enter their rush. However, his sustain skills are shaky and he can too easily get off schedule in space. Overall, Wagner is an experienced, well-schooled, strong blocker, but his upright pads and below-average athleticism will create balance issues against NFL talent. He projects as a potential backup right tackle in the NFL for a power-run scheme.

22. CONNOR GALVIN | Baylor

6065 | 293 lbs. | SSR

Katy, Texas (Katy)

#76

BACKGROUND: Connor Galvin, who has a brother, started playing football at age 5 and was always an offensive lineman. Galvin attended Katy High School where he was a three-year varsity letterman on the offensive line. Playing both left and right tackle, he earned All-District honors as a sophomore and junior, helping Katy to a 10-win season in 2016. As a senior, Galvin earned Third-Team All-State honors and helped Katy to a 12-1 record, with the lone loss coming to Lake Travis in the 2017 state playoff semifinals.

A four-star recruit, Galvin was the No. 24 offensive tackle in the 2018 recruiting class and the No. 46 recruit in Texas. Following his sophomore season, he received offers from Colorado, Houston, Indiana and SMU. After his junior year, Baylor, Boston College, Florida, Oregon State, TCU, Texas Tech and UCLA extended offers. Shortly before his senior season, Galvin committed to Baylor and signed during the early period. He took advantage of the extra year of eligibility due to the pandemic and returned to Waco for his fifth season in 2022. He graduated with his degree. Galvin accepted his invitation to the 2023 East-West Shrine Bowl.

STRENGTHS: Athletic frame with room to add more muscle ... efficient out of his stance with adequate mirroring quickness ... controlled in his movements to keep his punch tight and centered ... uses his lower-body quickness to cut off the back side or accelerate into his run fits, staying attached with his stubborn hands ... always mindful of his blocking angles on the move to impede defenders ... functional out in space or at the second level ... gets his body strength behind his hands in the run game to create a step or two of movement ... team captain as a senior and considered a “program guy” by his coaches ... logged 58 games played over his time at Baylor.

WEAKNESSES: Below-average arm length for an NFL tackle ... struggles to anchor versus power ... doesn’t have ideal body twitch to easily answer quick-developing stunts ... his punch is generally well timed, but he has small hands and needs to load more ammo into his delivery instead of catching ... well-paced rushers will take advantage of his tendency to overstride ... lacks the hand power to overwhelm defenders with bully blocks ... will fall off blocks when he plays on his toes and creates body lean ... missed four games as a sophomore because of a knee injury (October 2019) ... only played left tackle in college and doesn’t have experience at any of the interior positions.

SUMMARY: A five-year starter at Baylor, Galvin was a mainstay at left tackle in offensive coordinator Jeff Grimes’ wide-zone offense. He set the school record for career starts (50) and was named the Big 12 Offensive Lineman of the Year in 2021, although he appeared to take a step back in 2022 (see the Oklahoma State tape). Galvin is efficient off the ball to reach his landmarks and position his blocking angles. He looks to get his hands involved, but he will struggle to combat powerful and long-armed rushers who can disrupt his rhythm when his timing isn’t perfect. Overall, Galvin doesn’t have desired length or play strength for the NFL level, lowering his margin for error, but his foot quickness and hand technique will be attractive for zone-based schemes. While he might be drafted as a tackle, his best long-term position is inside at guard.

SUMMARY: Kadeem Telfort, who has one older sister and eight younger sisters, didn't play much football growing up until he went to Norland Senior High. For his senior season, he transferred to Booker T. Washington and was an All-Conference left tackle. A four-star recruit, Telfort committed to his hometown school of Miami before flipping to Florida but was suspended in 2017 for his role in a credit-card fraud scheme. He went the juco route before transferring to UAB and earning the starting left tackle job. Telfort is a massive human with remarkable length, and rushers have a tough time getting around the surface area that he covers. He exhibits upper-body strength, especially in the run game, but his lateral movements are choppy and he struggles to redirect/recover when out of position. Overall, Telfort must become a more balanced blocker, but his gargantuan size and wingspan help mask his issues. NFL offensive line coaches will want to tinker with all his tools.

SUMMARY: Alex Palczewski (pal-CHESS-key), who is one of three boys, is the son of Polish immigrants who came to the U.S. in the mid-1980s. At Prospect, he was a four-sport letterman (football, track, water polo, wrestling), although he missed most of his junior season with a fractured vertebra. He was a starting senior right guard in Prospect's option offense. A three-star recruit, Palczewski committed to Illinois where he set a Big Ten record with 65 career starts across three different positions (finished his career with 4,390 offensive snaps). He has physical, insistent hands at the point of attack and stays after his blocks to spring runs. Although he plays with quickness, his footwork gets sloppy in his pass sets and he finds himself out of control at the second level. His wide hands invite rushers to bully him. Overall, Palczewski has played a lot of football with experience at both tackle and guard, but he can too easily be knocked off balance and struggles to sustain.

SUMMARY: Quinton Barrow grew up outside of Detroit and was a two-year varsity starter at Romulus High (right tackle as a junior and left tackle as a senior). A two-star recruit, he had several MAC offers and verballed to Bowling Green before decommitting and signing with Division II Grand Valley State. He earned the starting left tackle job as a redshirt freshman and started every game there the last three seasons. He was the runner-up for the 2022 Gene Upshaw Award (given to the top Division II lineman). Barrow has a unique body type with a heavy midsection and bubble and plenty of strength behind his hands. Despite a stiff lower body, he is quick footed on reaches/combinations. His inconsistent knee bend hurts his ability to sit and reset his anchor versus power or react against inside counters. Overall, Barrow looks the part with his length, quicks and drive strength in the run game, but his body control and instincts must improve to hold up in pass protection.

SUMMARY: Kilian Zierer (ZEER-rer), who is one of three children, grew up in Munich, Germany, and played soccer throughout childhood. At age 16, he tried football and played mostly wide receiver and tight end. He received one scholarship offer and moved to the offensive line at the College of Canyons. A three-star juco recruit, he committed to Auburn (over Florida, TCU and USC) but missed 2020 as he rehabbed a torn ACL. After he was a part-time player in 2021, he became the full-time starting left tackle as a senior. Zierer looks the part in pads but is still piecing everything together. He has the range to reach his landmarks and close space on rushers, but he tends to forget his feet and lose control through engagement. He must strengthen his core and anchor to match up in the NFL. Overall, Zierer has inconsistent tape full of youthful, inexperienced mistakes, but he is a fluid mover with the foot quickness and functional length worth developing on the practice squad.

SUMMARY: Trevor Reid didn’t start playing football until his sophomore year at Spalding County High and saw time at both left tackle and defensive tackle. Being underdeveloped, he attended Georgia Military College to add weight (enrolled at 245 pounds) and hone his skills. A three-star juco recruit, he signed with Louisville in 2020. He continued adding weight and became the Cardinals’ starting left tackle the past two seasons. Reid has added 75 pounds since high school, filling out his long frame without sacrificing his quick-twitch body movements. Thanks to his lower-body agility, his sink, slide and redirect look very smooth. He isn’t a technically sound blocker because of inconsistent timing/placement with his hands. He also needs to play with better body angles and overall control. Overall, Reid is one of the most athletic linemen in the 2023 draft class, but he is still a ball of clay who requires molding. He’s more toolsy than polished as a blocker right now.

SUMMARY: Demontrey “Trey” Jacobs played multiple sports growing up, and his mother (Venessa) has been the head volleyball coach at Southern the last 10 years. He played both ways as a senior at East Ascension High, but at 250 pounds, he was primarily known as a pass rusher. He signed with FCS Grambling and transitioned to offensive line. Once the pandemic hit, he transferred up to South Florida and the FBS level prior to the 2020 season. He started at both left and right tackle over his final two seasons and combined for only two penalties. Jacobs has elite arm length and hand size with adequate strength once in position. However, he struggles to maintain knee bend in his pass sets, which leads to immediate balance and control issues. He will need to shed multiple bad habits to stick in the NFL. Overall, Jacobs has a tough time keeping his upper and lower halves on the same page, but his movement potential and size/length could land him on an NFL practice squad.

1. PETER SKORONSKI | Northwestern 6040 | 313 lbs. | 3JR Park Ridge, Ill. (Maine South) 7/31/2001 (age 21.74) #77

BACKGROUND: Peter Skoronski, who is the youngest of three children, grew up just north of Chicago, where he played multiple sports including soccer and flag football. However, his parents didn't allow him to play tackle football until sixth grade, at age 12 (and he missed most of his seventh-grade year because of a torn ACL). He enrolled at Maine South High School and played on the sophomore team as a freshman before a late call-up to varsity for the team's 2016 state title run. Skoronski earned a starting role on varsity as a sophomore, started at left tackle (he also saw time at guard) and announced himself as a top recruit. As a junior captain in 2018, he was the only returning starter on the offensive line and earned All-State honors. Skoronski was again a captain and All-State honoree as a senior, leading Maine South to back-to-back conference titles. He finished his three-year varsity career with 173 pancake blocks. After two seasons on the JV squad, Skoronski played two years of varsity basketball as a junior and senior. He also lettered in track and set personal bests in the shot put (57 feet 3 inches) and discus (139-2), earning All-State honors. Skoronski set a school record with the combined weight of his squat, clean and bench press (1,190).

A four-star recruit, Skoronski was the No. 3 center in the 2020 recruiting class and the No. 3 recruit in Illinois (Texas A&M DB Antonio Johnson was No. 1). His first season as a varsity starter put him on the recruiting radar, and he received his first offers from Illinois and Western Michigan. Skoronski also considered offers from Iowa, Michigan, Notre Dame, Penn State, Stanford and a few others. But he became a Northwestern fan in high school and committed to head coach Pat Fitzgerald after his junior year. Skoronski was the highest-ranked recruit in Northwestern's 2020 class. His father (Bob Jr.) was an All-Ivy League defensive tackle at Yale (1974-77). His grandfather (Bob Sr.), who died in 2018 at age 84 after battling Alzheimer's, was a left tackle at Indiana and drafted in the fifth round (No. 56 overall) of the 1956 NFL Draft. After serving two years in the Air Force, Bob Skoronski Sr. played at offensive tackle for eight seasons for Vince Lombardi and the Green Bay Packers (1959-68), winning five NFL Championships and the first two Super Bowls. Peter grew up a Green Bay Packers fan because of his "dziadzi" ("grandpa" in Polish). Peter had two great uncles who played at Harvard: Gene Skowronski (1962-64) and Ted Skowronski (1966-68) – there is a "w" in their last names unlike their brother (Bob Sr.), because Indiana enrollment officials invertedly forgot the "w" when they signed Bob Sr.'s full scholarship. Peter's maternal grandfather (Nate Walton) played running back and safety at St. Ambrose of the NAIA. Skoronski decided to forego his senior season and enter the 2023 NFL Draft.

STRENGTHS: Thick, wide frame with a powerful core ... explodes out of his stance with quick, controlled feet ... stays balanced in his pass sets to consistently reposition against pass rushers ... recovers well vs. cross-face rushers because of his recognition and body control ... deploys a stiff, fierce punch ... stays patient with his handwork in pass pro to slap away the reach of rushers or catch their hands/wrists ... processes things very well and does a great job answering whatever rushers throw at him (Northwestern DL Adetomiwa Adebawore: “Going against that kind of guy every day in practice, it’s like I’m playing chess.”) ... excellent movements as a run blocker to short pull, long pull or trap ... above-average play strength and uses body positioning to drive block ... clamps down with his hands once he makes contact to control the point of attack ... outstanding finisher without sacrificing his balance ... very smart on and off the field (finished in the top-1 percent of his graduating class in high school) ... voted a 2022 team captain ... NFL scouts call his work ethic “elite,” and his coaches describe him as “humble” and not a self-promoter ... started every game at left tackle for the Wildcats over the last three seasons.

WEAKNESSES: Doesn’t have desired measurements for offensive tackle, including short arms ... long-armed defenders consistently make first contact and enter his frame ... needs to improve his strike timing to protect his chest and breast plate ... occasionally struggles to sit down vs. bull rushers who have a few steps of momentum ... penalized a career-high five times in 2022 (three false starts, two holds) ... only played left tackle in college (played some guard in high school but doesn’t have any center experience aside from practice).

SUMMARY: A three-year starter at Northwestern, Skoronski was inserted at left tackle as a true freshman after Rashawn Slater opted out in 2020 and started every game in offensive coordinator Mike Bajakian’s run-based scheme. He had a dominant 2022 season as the only offensive tackle in college football with 830-plus snaps and six or fewer pressures allowed, becoming both the first unanimous All-American and first winner of the Big Ten’s Rimington-Pace Offensive Lineman of the Year in school history. As both a pass blocker and run blocker, Skoronski is quick off the ball and does a great job keeping blocks centered, sustained and rarely in a compromised position. Although his lack of ideal size shows vs. long, powerful rushers, he takes pride in mastering the details, which allows him to default to his technique and mask deficiencies. Overall, Skoronski falls below the arm-length threshold to stay at tackle for several NFL teams, but he is a technician with impressive balance and strength to reposition his hands/feet mid-engagement. Though he should get a chance to stay outside in the NFL, he is an immediate NFL starter inside at guard/center with a Pro Bowl ceiling.

GRADE: 1st Round (No. 7 overall)

2. O’CYRUS TORRENCE | Florida 6053 | 330 lbs. | 4SR Greensburg, La. (St. Helena Central) 1/20/2000 (age 23.27) #54

BACKGROUND: O’Cyrus “Cybo” Torrence, one of four children, was born in Hammond, La. and grew up further north in Greensburg (close to the Mississippi border), living in a trailer with his mother (Demetrice), grandmother and siblings. His mother gave him the nickname “Cyborg” when he was young, which eventually evolved into “Cybo.” He played a few years of youth football, but it wasn’t love at first sight and he stopped playing in middle school. Torrence attended St. Helena Central High School and decided to give football another try, mostly because his weight (420 pounds at the time) was out of control and he wanted to get in better shape. After seeing some action as a freshman, he became a full-time starter as a sophomore and played both ways as the right tackle and nose tackle. As a junior, Torrence helped St. Helena Central to a 13-win season, playing right tackle and defensive tackle, and earned first team All-State and All-District honors. As a senior, he again played both ways and earned All-State and All-District honors.

A three-star recruit, Torrence was the No. 145 offensive tackle in the 2019 recruiting class and the No. 64 recruit in Louisiana. Coming from a smaller area, he wasn’t highly recruited, but schools started to take notice during his junior season. Torrence received offers from Louisiana Tech, Middle Tennessee State, South Alabama and Southern Miss, but no coaching staff recruited him more than Louisiana’s did. Towards the end of his senior season, Torrence received an offer from Georgia (to play on the defensive line), which was his only Power 5 scholarship offer. But Torrence was comfortable with Louisiana head coach Billy Napier and signed with the Ragin’ Cajuns. He was expecting to redshirt as a freshman, but an injury to a teammate in the 2019 season opener immediately thrust him into the starting lineup. After starting his first three seasons at Louisiana, he decided to enter the transfer portal as a senior and took visits to Auburn and LSU (he almost signed with LSU to stay closer to home). However, the opportunity to reunite with Napier, who accepted the Gators’ coaching job after the 2021 season, and offensive line coach Rob Sale, who coached Torrence at Louisiana for two years before spending the 2021 season with the New York Giants, drew him to Gainesville for the 2022 season. Torrence opted out of the 2022 bowl game and accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl.

STRENGTHS: Thick, wide-framed blocker with a massive wingspan ... large boxing gloves for hands to bounce defenders around ... bends well for his size to work himself under defenders on drive/down blocks ... shows the rotational strength to create torque and displace in the run game ... stays balanced on the move ... tough for defenders to escape once his vice grips latch on ... able to refit his hands and sit down to gain leverage in pass protection ... walks the fine line of playing aggressive while staying disciplined (zero penalties in 2022) ... his coaches rave about his competitive mentality and innate wiring as a worker (Florida assistant coach: “I wish all of our guys were as genuine and coachable learners as Cybo.”) ... weighed over 420 pounds when he started high school and completely changed his nutrition and life habits to carry a comfortable weight ... started 47 games over the last four seasons, including double-digit starts at both guard spots ... fifth offensive lineman to earn consensus All-American status in Florida history.

WEAKNESSES: Inconsistent connection rate on the move and at the second level ... only average range as a puller ... tends to be a tick late sliding and adjusting to stunts ... guilty of over-leaning as a pass blocker vs. lateral quickness, making him susceptible to arm-over/swim moves ... must continue developing the timing and precision of his pass-pro punch ... can get knocked back by defenders who enter his frame ... missed two games in 2021 and battled through a strained MCL as a senior (October 2022).

SUMMARY: A one-year starter at Florida, Torrence played right guard for the Gators in head coach Billy Napier’s zone-blocking scheme. As a freshman at Louisiana, he played at a high level on the same offensive line as three future NFL Draft picks (Robert Hunt, Kevin Dotson, Max Mitchell), and his play didn’t drop off vs. better competition in the SEC in 2022 (he didn't have to transfer to be a high draft pick but wasn't afraid of the challenge). A massive but lean-muscled blocker, Torrence has above-average inline power and physicality in the run game to quickly gain control and drive defenders from their spot. In pass protection, he sets wide, strikes with authority and plays with the reactive quickness to recover and reposition his hands vs. quick pass rushers (zero sacks allowed in 1,501 career pass-blocking snaps). Overall, Torrence will struggle at times picking off targets in space (climbing or pulling), but he boasts the play strength, body control and competitive appetite to win his matchups. He is a plug-and-play zone starter in the NFL.

GRADE: 1st-2nd Round (No. 37 overall)

3. STEVE AVILA | TCU 6034 | 332 lbs. | 5SR Arlington, Texas (South Grand Prairie) 10/16/1999 (age 23.53) #79

BACKGROUND: Esteban “Steve” Avila (AH-vee-la) grew up in Arlington and started playing football at the youth level. He enrolled at South Grand Prairie High School, where he was teammates with teammates with cornerback Jeff Okudah. Avila became the starting left tackle as a sophomore and was recognized as one of the top blockers in the district. He earned first team All-Conference as a junior while also playing at defensive end. Avila again earned All-Conference as a senior and led South Grand Prairie to the playoffs, where they ran into Allen, the eventual state champions.

A three-star recruit, Avila was the No. 44 offensive guard in the 2018 recruiting class and the No. 151 recruit in Texas. After his junior season, he picked up offers from Kansas State, North Texas, TCU and Utah. But Avila credited the “family” atmosphere in Fort Worth as the reason he committed to former head coach Gary Patterson in March 2017. Avila was part of the same TCU recruiting class as Trevon Moehrig, Ar’Darius Washington, and his high school teammate Atanza Vongor. He graduated with his bachelor’s degree (May 2022). Avila accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl.

PRO DAY	6033	332	33 3/4	9	79 7/8	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	(position drills only – choice)

STRENGTHS: Big-bodied blocker and engulfs rushers at the point of attack ... doesn't allow his base to narrow and pulls rushers into his tractor beam ... shows off his brick hands to create knockback when his punch connects ... uses his body quicks to mirror and ride pass rushers away from the play (zero holding penalties in 2022) ... showed improvements with his ability to reset or make adjustments mid-engagement ... has the processing to identify delayed blitzes or stone stunts ... shows power in his hands to latch and move bodies in the run game ... mobile enough to seal backside pulls and execute short pulls ... always looking for work and plays with attitude ... started at least one game at four different offensive line positions over the last three seasons (every spot except left tackle) ... most of his college snaps came at center, and he has legitimate position flexibility ... didn't give up a sack in 2022.

WEAKNESSES: Efficient in his setup but not explosive ... has a tendency to forget his feet once engaged with his upper half ... plays tall at times and needs to use better sink to access his leverage points ... modest arm length and longer-armed defensive linemen will be able to access his chest ... defenders feel his bruising hands, but he must improve his placement to better control the point of attack ... his break-down ability as a puller and second-level blocker need improvement ... flagged three times for false starts as a senior.

SUMMARY: A three-year starter at TCU, Avila started all 15 games at left guard as a senior in former offensive coordinator Garrett Riley's RPO-based offense. A left tackle in high school, he played every offensive line position except left tackle at TCU, moving from center to left guard in 2022 and leading the team in snaps (1,020). He was an unsung hero on an offense that reached the National Championship Game. A wide-based and powerful blocker, Avila collects a body count with his heavy hands to make early contact in pass pro or drive block in the run game. Though he stays controlled in his initial mirror, his countering footwork and handwork will be the keys to his next-level success. Overall, Avila needs to better understand his biomechanics to access his explosive power, but he plays with a strong base to anchor and control at either guard or center. He fits both zone and gap schemes and should be an immediate starter as an NFL rookie.

GRADE: 2nd Round (No. 40 overall)

4. CODY MAUCH | North Dakota State 6050 | 302 lbs. | 6SR Hankinson, N.D. (Hankinson) 1/15/1999 (age 24.28) #70

BACKGROUND: Cody Mauch (mouck), the second oldest of eight children, was raised on his family's 5,500-acre, fourth-generation farm just outside Mantador in southeast North Dakota. He grew up bailing hay and helping grow corn, soybeans, beans and sugar beets. Mauch attended Hankinson High School (enrollment of 120 total students in grades 7 through 12), where he was a four-sport letterman, including a three-year starter (and two-time team captain) in 9-man football. He played primarily tight end and defensive end while also seeing time at quarterback. As a senior, Mauch recorded 24 receptions for 474 yards and a school-record 13 touchdowns, earning All-State honors and leading Hankinson to the 2016 regional championship. He also added 398 rushing yards and four rushing scores on the ground, 273 passing yards and four passing scores through the air, and a school-record 18.5 sacks on defense in 2016. He finished his career with school records for touchdown catches (24) and sacks (38). Mauch also lettered in baseball, basketball (earned All-Conference and All-Region honors) and track (qualified for states in the javelin). He was named the region's Senior Athlete of the Year in 2016-17.

A no-star recruit, Mauch wasn't ranked by recruiting services out of high school. As a 220-pound tight end, he received a scholarship offer to Division II Minnesota State Moorhead and preferred walk-on spots at North Dakota and North Dakota State. Having grown up an hour south of Fargo, Mauch opted to walk on at North Dakota State and switched to defensive end while he redshirted in 2017. As he gained weight (added 40 pounds in his first year on campus), Mauch moved to the offensive line full-time during 2018 spring practices and was later put on scholarship. He has one older brother (Carter), two younger brothers (Damon and Walker) and four younger sisters (Jasmin, Kya, Ireland, Destiny). Mauch graduated with his degree in ABEN (Agriculture and Biosystems Engineering) and plans to return to the farm after his football days are over. He accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl.

STRENGTHS: Superb athletic tools ... natural foot quickness and balance to cover up speed rushers as a pass blocker ... patiently works his independent hands to stay in rhythm ... works hard to achieve angles ... lean lower body, but his anchor technique and grip strength helps him sit down and slow power rushers ... great job refitting in the run game ... explosive puller with the body control to execute difficult combinations and the range to drive defenders off the screen ... always pounding his feet once engaged and uses his hands to strain/steer defenders ... plays with an attacking mindset and won't wait on second-level blocks ... has never played a passive snap and consistently finishes opponents to the ground ... has the dogged work ethic expected of a player who grew up on a farm (added 85 pounds since high school) ... voted a senior captain in 2022 ... finished eighth in the voting for the 2022 Walter Payton Award (top offensive player in FCS) ... has experience at both tackle positions and started every game at left tackle the last two seasons.

WEAKNESSES: Short-armed blocker and will struggle vs. length ... unusual body type and lacks ideal girth in his lower half ... needs to continue strengthening his core to combat more powerful rushers ... occasionally late off the snap ... overeager punch, leaving himself susceptible to getting swiped ... will get upright and narrow as a drive blocker ... drops his eye level and leaves his feet too often when looking for the kill shot in the run game ... known to be overzealous as a finisher and needs to play smarter without losing his edge (flagged twice for personal fouls in 2022) ... older prospect (recently turned 24) ... has only one career start vs. an FBS opponent (Arizona in 2022).

SUMMARY: A three-year starter at North Dakota State, Mauch manned the left tackle position in offensive coordinator Tyler Roehl's run-heavy, gap-power scheme. A 220-pound walk-on tight end, he morphed into a 300-pound left tackle, which has been a smooth transition because of his natural athleticism and unrestrained intensity (had his two front teeth knocked out during a seventh-grade basketball game and doesn't plan to have them replaced until he is done with football). Although he wasn't often challenged on an island in pass protection, Mauch has the foot quickness and body control to comfortably operate in space and skillfully maneuver from block to block. His technical approach needs continued refinement, but he is a sticky blocker in the run game, using his hands to latch, create leverage and reset engagement. Overall, Mauch doesn't have ideal length or sand in his lower body, but he has outstanding movement skills, fierce handwork and innate competitiveness to become a starter early in his NFL career. He should get a look at tackle first but also projects well inside, reminiscent of Mitch Morse.

GRADE: 2nd Round (No. 45 overall)

5. CHANDLER ZAVALA | NC State 6034 | 316 lbs. | 6SR Boynton Beach, Fla. (Forest Park) 4/2/1999 (age 24.07) #64

BACKGROUND: Chandler Zavala, who has a younger sister, played multiple sports while growing up in Boynton Beach but always leaned towards basketball. His parents divorced when he was age 5, and he and his sister split time between the two households in different areas of the country. Zavala didn't originally play football when he enrolled at Forest Park High School in Woodbridge, Va. The football coaches convinced him that the gridiron might be his best chance at earning a scholarship, and he joined the team as a junior offensive and defensive lineman. However, Zavala suffered a fractured ankle prior to the season and also battled a broken finger, limiting his on-field play in 2015. His grandparents also died during his junior year, and he wanted to dedicate the next season in their memory. He returned healthy as a senior and started at right tackle. Zavala also lettered in basketball at Forest Park.

A no-star recruit, Zavala had one season of high school football and weighed only 250 pounds as an offensive lineman. He received interest from Division I programs as a walk-on, but all his scholarship offers came from the Division II level. He visited Fairmont State (Fairmont, W.Va.) in January 2017 and signed a few weeks later. After three years with the program as a left guard, the 2020 season was canceled because of the pandemic and Zavala elected to enter the transfer portal. He received offers from Charlotte, East Carolina, Toledo, Virginia and Western Kentucky, but NC State showed the most interest plus his mother (Brandi) lived in Raleigh. After his 2021 season was cut short because of a back injury, Zavala had several petitions for one more season of eligibility denied by the NCAA. After missing spring practice because of the looming decision, he prepared for a potential late workout for NFL teams prior to the 2022 NFL Draft when (after hiring a lawyer) Zavala was finally ruled eligible for one more NCAA season. His father (Demetrio), who had emergency surgery in December 2021 when his appendix and intestine ruptured, is an executive chef and has opened six restaurants. Demetrio also has made numerous appearances on Food Network, including "Guy's Grocery Games" and twice winning "Chopped." Chandler's sister (Chase) serves in the U.S. Army and spent two years in South Korea. Zavala earned his undergrad at Fairmont State and earned his master's degree in adult and community college education. He accepted his invitation to the 2023 East-West Shrine Bowl.

STRENGTHS: Wide, sturdy build and looks the part with his broad chest and thick thighs ... above-average core strength ... displays the upper-body torque to latch, turn and dump his target ... works well laterally and uses a skip-pull technique to execute reach blocks ... takes efficient tracks as a puller and works well on the move to jolt and kick out his target ... uses his reach to maintain spacing between himself and the defender ... pounds the grass to power his base, allowing him to catch his balance when resetting his anchor ... smoothly handles stunts and communicates well with his neighbors ... speaks the language well for a player late to offensive-line play ... competes with an authoritative demeanor and puts defenders on their backs any chance he gets ... zero holding penalties in 17 starts at NC State ... looked comfortable at both left and right guard during East-West Shrine Bowl practices.

WEAKNESSES: Lacks desired arm length ... throws his hands early and gets himself overextended ... his base can widen out, hindering his ability to redirect and opening his frame ... falls off blocks when he dips his head into contact ... would benefit with more knee bend to be more consistent with his pad level ... has reps at other positions, but all of his starts came at left guard ... will be 24 on draft weekend ... his medical evaluations will be crucial after he missed the second half of the 2021 season because of a back injury (October 2021), which required season-ending surgery; also missed most of his junior season in high school with a fractured ankle (August 2015).

SUMMARY: A two-year starter at NC State, Zavala was the left guard in former offensive coordinator Tim Beck’s wide-/tight-zone scheme. He went from the Division II level to blocking next to Ikem Ekwonu for the Wolfpack and more than looked like he belonged (zero sacks allowed, only two penalties in his 17 games at NC State). With his lateral agility and body power, Zavala is effective on the front and backside of wide-zone runs and uses his stout base to seal or cut off three-techniques. He gets himself in trouble when he lunges as a pass blocker but usually plays with enough balance to re-leverage himself and stay attached. Overall, Zavala’s medical history might be a hurdle and he will need further development time, but he has NFL size, play strength and movement skills to grow into a starting role. He has the mauling attitude and alertness that will help him adapt quickly.

6. ANTHONY BRADFORD | LSU 6040 | 332 lbs. | 4JR Muskegon, Mich. (Muskegon) 4/28/2001 (age 22.00) #75

BACKGROUND: Anthony “Tony” Bradford, who is the middle child of three (has an older sister and younger sister), was raised in Muskegon by his mother (Latoya). He attended Muskegon High School and put his name on the recruiting radar as a sophomore right tackle, blocking for quarterback Kalil Pimpleton. As a junior, Bradford helped Muskegon to an undefeated 14-0 record and the 2017 state championship. As a senior, he led the team to a 13-1 record, its third straight division title and third straight trip to the state championship game (where Muskegon suffered its only loss of 2018, snapping a 27-game win streak). In his final season, Bradford earned first team All-State and All-Conference honors for the third straight year. He also played basketball at Muskegon and lettered in track, setting personal bests in the shot put (52-10.75) and discus (144-6).

A four-star recruit, Bradford was the No. 13 offensive guard in the 2019 recruiting class and the No. 6 recruit in Michigan. His first offer arrived the spring after his sophomore season from Georgia, which really got the ball rolling with his recruitment. Several national programs like Alabama, Michigan State and Ohio State soon followed, although Michigan never offered the in-state product. After his junior season, Bradford took a visit to Baton Rouge after he received his LSU offer, and he committed a few weeks later in May 2018. He was recruited by former LSU offensive line coach James Cregg, who is now the assistant offensive line coach with the San Francisco 49ers. Bradford was part of the same 2019 recruiting class as cornerback Derek Stingley Jr. and several prospects in the 2023 NFL Draft class, including wide receiver Trey Palmer and nose tackle Siaki Ika. Bradford elected to skip his senior season and enter the 2023 NFL Draft.

STRENGTHS: Broadly built and carries impressive mass ... springs out of his stance and immediately casts a wide shadow with his size (posted an elite 1.66-second 10-yard split at the combine) ... above-average strength in the run game to displace and drive objects from their spot ... locks down defenders once he clamps on, putting them on their backs if given the chance ... able to settle down and neutralize mash defenders ... has the foot speed to get on the move as a puller and lead up through holes ... anchors versus power in pass pro when he stays square to his target ... keeps busy and is a nasty finisher one on one ... played primarily at right tackle in high school, then saw action at both right guard and left tackle at LSU.

WEAKNESSES: Tends to play heavy ... can be caught leaning into contact, leaving him overextended and falling off blocks ... needs to do a better job establishing first meaningful contact with his hands ... defenders can break contact when his placement is off ... tardy lateral slides as a pass blocker and his hands usually respond before his feet ... struggles to redirect versus counter moves ... looked out of place at left tackle (see: 2022 Tennessee tape) with questionable range to play outside in the NFL ... missed the second half of the 2021 season because of injury, which kept him out of 2022 spring practices ... only 17 career starts in college.

SUMMARY: A two-year starter at LSU, Bradford played primarily at right guard in offensive coordinator Mike Denbrock’s zone-based scheme. The first recruit out of Michigan to sign with the Tigers in over 10 years, he played sparingly his first two seasons and became a starter as a sophomore and junior, moving around as LSU played musical chairs on its offensive line because of injuries. Bradford is a heavy player, but he isn’t a slug and explodes off the snap with the core strength and girth to control defenders in the run game. However, he is fundamentally a work in progress and needs to play with better balance and lower-body bend to adjust to moving targets in his pass sets (spends too much time on the ground). Overall, Bradford offers tackle experience, but he is at his best in confined quarters, where he can trust his wide frame and move bodies with sheer force. Although he might not be ready from the get-go, he offers intriguing NFL potential that can be cultivated.

GRADE: 3rd-4th Round

7. EMIL EKIYOR JR. | Alabama 6024 | 314 lbs. | SSR Indianapolis, Ind. (Cathedral) 1/22/2000 (age 23.26) #55

BACKGROUND: Emil (eh-MEAL) Ekiyor (ECK-ee-or) Jr. grew up just outside downtown Indianapolis, where he was introduced to various sports at a young age. He enrolled at Cathedral High School, a private Catholic school and started all four years on varsity. After earned the starting left guard job as a freshman, Ekiyor moved to right tackle as a sophomore. He then moved to left tackle as a junior and helped Cathedral to the state playoffs, earning first team All-League honors. Ekiyor again led the program to a postseason bid as a senior in 2017 after moving to center, his fourth position change in four years. He became the first U.S. Army All-American in Cathedral’s history. Ekiyor also lettered in basketball.

A four-star recruit, Ekiyor was the No. 3 center in the 2018 recruiting class and the No. 1 recruit in Indiana (just ahead of Cameron McGrone and Ekiyor’s Cathedral teammate Markese Stepp). He was the highest-ranked offensive line recruit to come out of Indiana since 2011. Ekiyor received an offer from Michigan after his freshman season, followed by multiple high-level offers like Georgia, LSU, Oklahoma, Tennessee and USC. He officially committed to the Wolverines midway through his junior season but continued to visit programs like Alabama and Florida State. Midway through his senior season, Ekiyor decommitted from Michigan and flipped to Alabama. His father (Emil Sr.), who came to the U.S. from Nigeria at age 15, played defensive end at UCF (1991-95) and went undrafted in the 1996 NFL Draft. He was signed by the Buccaneers and played six seasons in the NFL for the Colts, Falcons and Raiders before settling in Indianapolis, where he runs a foundation and also coaches high school football (was an assistant coach for his son at Cathedral). Ekiyor’s mother (Andrea “Nikki” Ekiyor) played college basketball at Indiana State and Tennessee State. Ekiyor graduated with his degree (August 2022). He accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl.

PRO DAY	6023	315	33 1/2	9 1/4	83	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	(position drills only – choice)

STRENGTHS: Owns proportionate thickness on his body with long arms ... balanced footwork and stays under control on pulls and combos ... displays knee bend and functional play strength to leverage the point of attack ... latches on and runs his feet to physically move defenders when his hand timing is on point ... alert to twisting linemen and processes moving parts quickly to make split-second adjustments ... consistently finishes as if his job depends on it and always looks for work when not attached ... durable and plays through pain (Evan Neal: “Emil’s a real tough dude ... (the) kind of guy you want playing next to you.”) ... didn’t miss a game the last three seasons and played his best football as a senior.

WEAKNESSES: Overaggressive puncher, leaving him leaning and lunging when he doesn’t connect ... needs to introduce more patience in his pass sets and keep his weight back ... can be walked backwards by long-armed linemen when he gives away his chest ... his weight will drift out in space at times, and he needs to do a better job with his balance to adjust to shifty linebackers ... battled through numerous college injuries: missed 2021 spring practices because of hernia surgery; underwent a knee scope (July 2021); separated his left shoulder in the Cotton Bowl (December 2021) ... played all five positions in high school but was almost exclusively a right guard in college (95.6 percent of his career snaps at Alabama came at right guard).

SUMMARY: A three-year starter at Alabama, Ekiyor was a staple at right guard in former offensive coordinator Bill O’Brien’s balanced offense. After an uneven junior season, he put above-average play on his 2022 tape (zero penalties) and separated himself as one of the best offensive linemen in the SEC. As both a run blocker and pass protector, Ekiyor quickly establishes leverage with his low pads and upward blows, driving his feet through engagement with his stubborn hands. Though he plays with outstanding awareness and finish, he will get himself in trouble when he overextends, and savvy NFL defensive tackles will use his impatience against him. Overall, Ekiyor finds himself in compromised positions when his punch hands get off-schedule, but he moves well with the processing and core strength to be effective in multiple schemes. He has NFL starter talent with guard-center versatility.

8. JORDAN MCFADDEN | Clemson 6022 | 303 lbs. | SSR Spartanburg, S.C. (Dorman) 11/16/1999 (age 23.45) #71

BACKGROUND: Jordan McFadden, the youngest of two children (has an older sister), grew up in Spartanburg (20 miles south of the North Carolina border), which is where he started playing basketball and football. Always in the gym or playing on the AAU circuit, he thought of himself as more of a basketball player and made the junior varsity team as a freshman at Dorman High School (alma mater of former Clemson offensive lineman Brandon Thomas). However, it soon became clear that football was his best long-term future. As a sophomore, McFadden became a varsity starter at right tackle and helped Dorman to a 10-win season. After moving to left tackle as a junior, he led Dorman to the 2017 state championship game with a 12-3 record and was named the 2017 Lineman of the Year in South Carolina. McFadden also was a three-year letterman in basketball, leading Dorman to back-to-back regional championships.

A three-star recruit, McFadden was the No. 66 offensive tackle in the 2018 recruiting class and the No. 14 recruit in South Carolina. His first offer arrived from Duke during his junior season in September 2016, followed by offers from Michigan State, Mississippi State and North Carolina. McFadden committed to Virginia Tech in the summer prior to his senior year, but he grew up a Clemson fan and eventually flipped to the Tigers after head coach Dabo Swinney offered McFadden during his senior year. His father (Ronald), who was a deacon, died in August 2011 from congestive heart failure after a lengthy illness. Jordan’s uncle (Charles) played on the offensive line at Morgan State. McFadden graduated with his degree in sociology (May 2022). He accepted his invitation to the 2023 East-West Shrine Bowl.

COMBINE	6022	303	34	9 1/2	81	4.99	2.92	1.74	28 1/2	-	4.81	7.70	- (no broad jump or bench press – choice)
PRO DAY	6021	303	33 3/4	9 1/4	81 1/2	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	24 (stood on Combine testing)

STRENGTHS: Broad-framed with outstanding length ... showcases above-average short-area quickness and flexibility in his lowers ... his 4.99-second 40-yard dash was No. 1 among all guards at the combine ... plays with low pad level and peppery hands to establish leverage wins ... strong upper half to cave in the defensive end ... plays to his arm length and maintains spacing with his hands ... plays well in tandem and smartly uses angles to pin, seal or wall off ... strains and drives his legs once engaged with defenders ... voted a team captain in 2022 (head coach Dabo Swinney: “Football is very important to him.”) ... started all 39 games over the past three seasons with double-digit starts at both left and right tackle.

WEAKNESSES: A tad high-cut with lean lowers ... opens his chest and allows rushers to make first contact ... can be late redirecting to secondary moves and inside counters ... excessive leaning and doesn’t consistently bring his feet into contact (three holding penalties in 2022) ... his average anchor will be challenged by NFL bull rushers ... needs to introduce more patience into his pass blocking ... gets upright and too willing to sacrifice his balance at the second level or out in space on screens ... suffered a strained MCL and PCL in his right knee in his final high school game (December 2017) ... doesn’t have any playing experience inside at center or guard.

SUMMARY: A three-year starter at Clemson, McFadden protected the blindside in former offensive coordinator Brandon Streeter’s balanced scheme. After starting at right tackle as a sophomore, he moved to left tackle for his final two seasons and was awarded the 2022 Jacobs Blocking Trophy as the ACC’s top blocker (as voted on by the conference’s head coaches and defensive coordinators). Although shorter than ideal height, McFadden has disproportionately long arms with heavy hands, upper body strength and body leverage to neutralize speed/power. He has made substantial improvements with his technical approach but needs to play with better timing in pass pro and improve his reset skills to avoid compromised positions. Overall, McFadden’s balance breaks down late into his reps, especially when rushers get inside his body, but he has the play traits and functional skill to compete for early NFL playing time. He projects best inside as a guard who can kick outside to tackle in a pinch.

9. SIDY SOW | Eastern Michigan 6046 | 323 lbs. | 6SR Bromont, Quebec (Lennoxville) 6/8/1998 (age 24.89) #62

BACKGROUND: Cheikhe “Sidy” (sih-tee) Sow (rhymes with cow), who has two sisters, grew up in the Quebec area and played hockey when he was younger (the Montreal Canadiens were his favorite NHL team). He started playing football at age 10, primarily on the defensive line with experience at tight end as well. Sow attended Joseph-Hermas Leclerc High School, where he also played handball and competed in Olympic weightlifting (110 kilos). He played football at Champlain College Lennoxville and posted 30 tackles, 13.0 tackles for loss and 6.0 sacks as a junior in 2015. Sow was a senior captain and also competed for Team Quebec and Team Canada, helping the former to the Canadian Cup Championship. He played in the 2016 International Bowl for Team Canada at AT&T Stadium in Arlington, Texas.

Coming from Canada, Sow wasn’t originally on the FBS recruiting radar and wasn’t ranked by the online recruiting services. During his senior year in 2016, Sow and around 40 of his teammates boarded a bus and attended various recruiting camps across the United States, hoping to get noticed. He drew the attention of Eastern Michigan head coach Chris Creighton, who offered him on the spot. A defensive lineman and tight end most of his life, Sow made the move to the offensive line after he arrived in Ypsilanti. He committed to the 2023 NFLPA Collegiate Bowl.

PRO DAY	6047	324	33 1/4	10 1/2	81	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	27 (stood on combine testing)

STRENGTHS: Thickly-built and naturally carries bulk on his well-proportioned frame ... physical and strong in the run game and credits his Olympic weightlifting in high school for developing his strength ... aggressive into contact and drives his legs to widen the gap ... pounces out of his stance and is comfortable on the move to pull/trap ... anchors well in his pass sets with large hands and well-schooled, rapid-punch action ... adequate lateral quickness to square half-man defenders ... only one penalty (false start) as a senior in 2022 ... played a lot of football in college with 55 career starts, including 49 straight to finish his career ... has double-digit career starts at both left tackle and left guard.

WEAKNESSES: His hands are persistent and physical, but his placement needs to be more accurate ... appears heavy when climbing or attempting to make quick direction changes ... spotty balance at the second level ... inconsistent lower body sink as a pass blocker, leaving him hunched at the waist ... would by improved leverage to aid his recovery quickness ... needs to better anticipate rush sequencing to answer counter maneuvers ... relies more on his upper body power over positioning his frame to shield ... inconsistent locating blitzers from depth.

SUMMARY: A five-year starter at Eastern Michigan, Sow played left guard in head coach Chris Creighton’s duo-heavy offense. Primarily a defensive lineman growing up in Quebec, he moved to the offensive line when he arrived at EMU and became the all-time leader in games played (57) and games started (55) in school history. Patient and stout in pass protection, Sow is built-well with long arms and effective strike timing to answer the initial movements of rushers. He is able to latch-and-drive defenders in the run game, but needs to tighten his angles to stay connected. Overall, Sow needs further development with his sustain and recovery skills to maintain engagement, but his body type, play strength and functional movements are solid foundational traits of developmental blocker. He projects as a day three draft-and-develop prospect.

10. JON GAINES II | UCLA 6040 | 303 lbs. | 5SR Wauwatosa, Wis. (Marquette) 5/24/2000 (age 22.93) #57

BACKGROUND: Jon Gaines II, the youngest of three children, grew up in the Milwaukee suburbs and started playing football at age 5. He attended Marquette University High School, a private all-boys Catholic school in Milwaukee. Gaines played on the freshman team in his first season and the JV team as a sophomore before joining the varsity as a junior. He started at left tackle and on the defensive line and earned All-Metro honors in 2016. As a senior captain, Gaines helped lead Marquette to the 2017 playoffs and was named honorable mention All-State and second team All-Area at left tackle. He also lettered in track (shot put and discus) and was Marquette’s student body president as a senior.

A three-star recruit, Gaines was the No. 152 ranked offensive tackle in the 2018 recruiting class and the No. 12 recruit in Wisconsin. He initially committed to Northern Illinois prior to his senior year but decommitted midseason. Gaines received a dozen offers, including California, Purdue and Iowa, but he committed to Princeton after his senior season (his choice was based academics first, football second). A few weeks before signing day, UCLA and newly hired head coach Chip Kelly reached out with an offer. Gaines flipped to the Bruins on signing day and was the second lowest-rated recruit in UCLA’s 27-player class. His father (Jon) was diagnosed with kidney cancer and had both kidneys removed in 2019. He required dialysis treatment twice a week until August 2022, when he underwent successful kidney transplant surgery. Gaines graduated with his degree in political science (May 2021) with a minor in African American studies (graduated in only three years). He graduated with his master’s degree in UCLA’s transformative coaching and leadership program. Gaines accepted his invitation to the 2023 NFLPA Collegiate Bowl and was also a late call-up to the East-West Shrine Bowl.

PRO DAY	6040	308	33 1/2	10 1/8	80 3/4	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	19 (bench press and position drills only)

STRENGTHS: Possesses an NFL frame with outstanding length and hand size ... fluid out of his stance to gain lateral ground ... rangy mover on pulls/screens and looks comfortable picking off targets in space (his 7.31 three-cone and 4.45 short shuttle were No. 1 among offensive linemen at the combine) ... anchors at shallow depth to absorb and position himself versus nose tackles ... energetic and a great locker room guy (NFL scout: “With his attitude, this is the type of kid who is going to be successful in whatever he wants to do.”) ... highly intelligent on and off the field (31 ACT and was highly recruited by Ivy League schools before graduating in only three years at UCLA) ... versatile experience across the line and finished his career with 29 straight starts.

WEAKNESSES: Has some bad weight on his frame and doesn’t play with consistent bend ... unpredictable striking skills with hands that land high and wide, leading to balance breakdowns ... struggles to keep long-armed defenders from controlling/pulling his chest ... rushers are able to play off his blocks ... not a consistent drive blocker and needs to better explode into contact in the run game ... improved pad level will help his ability to reset his hands when leveraging blocks ... guilty of early movements as he attempts to get a head start (six false starts over the last two seasons).

SUMMARY: A three-year starter at UCLA, Gaines settled in at right guard as a senior in head coach Chip Kelly’s diverse run offense. He started at four different positions (right guard, left guard, center, right tackle) over the last four years and helped the Bruins average over 200 yards rushing for three straight seasons. Gaines is a rangy run blocker with the big-man fluidity to execute both short and long pulls. He is quick in his setup as a pass blocker to position himself against defenders, but his hands tend to wander, and his lunges create softened edges. Overall, Gaines’ inconsistent technique is a gateway to strength and balance breakdowns mid-rep, but his length, foot quickness and mental capacity give him intriguing upside. His position-versatile experience should help him find an NFL home as an interior backup.

GRADE: 4th-5th Round

11. NICK BROEKER | Ole Miss 6043 | 305 lbs. | 4SR Springfield, Ill. (Sacred Heart-Griffin) 10/7/2000 (age 22.56) #64

BACKGROUND: Nicholas “Nick” Broeker (BRO-kurr), who has one older brother, grew up in central Illinois and attended Sacred Heart-Griffin High School, a Catholic school in Springfield. He was a three-year letterman on the football team and played for head coach Ken Leonard, who became the winningest head coach in Illinois history in 2018 and retired after the 2022 season with a 419-81 career record. As a sophomore, Broeker added weight and started at right tackle, helping SHG to the 2016 6A state championship game (lost to Prairie Ridge). As a junior, he earned All-Metro and All-Conference honors (played both left and right tackle) while also making plays on the defensive line. As a senior, he was named All-State, All-Metro and All-Conference and didn’t allow a sack (again playing both left and right tackle). He also started at defensive end and saw reps at tight end (52-yard touchdown catch), because the coaches said he had the best hands on the team. Broeker also was a four-year letterman on the basketball team and led the squad to a 20-win season as a senior, earning All-State honors with 16.7 points and 9.5 rebounds per game.

A three-star recruit, Broeker was the No. 35 offensive tackle in the 2019 recruiting class and the No. 5 recruit in Illinois. He grew up in Big Ten country (attended Iowa and Northwestern games throughout his childhood) and received early offers from Illinois, Michigan State, Minnesota and Purdue. But he was drawn to the coaches and environment at Ole Miss and committed in June 2018, prior to his senior year. Ohio State made a late push, including head coach Ryan Day attending one of Broeker’s basketball games, but he stayed loyal to his Ole Miss pledge. His father (John) played defensive end at Northwestern (1987-90). Nick’s older brother (Jack) was a walk-on offensive lineman at Illinois (2015). Based on feedback from NFL teams about his lack of length, Broeker moved from left tackle to left guard as a senior in 2022. He accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl.

PRO DAY	6042	307	32	9 7/8	77 1/2	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	23 (no jumps – choice)

STRENGTHS: Adequate timing off the ball and shows functional flexibility and foot quickness to fit his blocks ... sturdy and works to stay centered at contact ... anticipates rush moves and catches the hands of rushers ... achieves proper angles in the run game ... has the grip strength to sustain when he keeps his lower body active ... owns a competitive demeanor and blocks like someone pissed in his Cheerios ... his penalties dropped from 10 in 2021 to just three in 2022 ... voted a senior captain and has strong work habits, according to his coaches ... durable and played in every game the last four seasons, including 36 straight starts (every game the last three seasons) ... has outside and inside experience.

WEAKNESSES: Has very little body fat on his frame but plays short-armed with a very average power base ... doesn't have the size measurements NFL teams covet ... inconsistent anchor strength and can be blown backwards by explosive defenders ... over-sets at times and loses his balance, lacking the redirect skills in his body for quick recoveries ... can be a tad late switching off blocks and adjusting ... needs to reposition his feet once engaged as a run blocker to keep lanes clear ... needs to be more consistent at the second level and has too many whiffs in space.

SUMMARY: A three-year starter at Ole Miss, Broeker was primarily a left tackle most of his career until he moved to left guard as a senior in head coach Lane Kiffin's offense. He helped block for an offense that ranked No. 3 in the FBS in rushing yards per game (256.6) in 2022 and became the fourth Rebel ever to win the Kent Hull Trophy (awarded to the top offensive lineman in Mississippi). A fundamentally-focused blocker, Broeker maneuvers well and competes with the play strength and demeanor required at the next level. However, his balance can be too easily disrupted in pass protection, and his lack of ideal length hurts his ability to sustain and control in the run game. Overall, Broeker doesn't wow with his explosiveness or power, especially in recovery mode, but he is strong and understands his responsibilities, which helps him execute when his technique and leverage stay on point. He projects as a potential NFL backup on the interior, in either a zone or gap scheme.

GRADE: 5th Round

12. MCCLENDON CURTIS | Chattanooga 6057 | 324 lbs. | 6SR Chattanooga, Tenn. (Central) 9/16/1999 (age 23.61) #52

BACKGROUND: McClendon Curtis grew up in the Chattanooga area and moved a lot throughout his childhood, at one point even living in a shelter with his mother (Angelina). He started playing basketball and football at age 4 and continued playing through various youth levels. For high school, Curtis originally attended McCallie School, an all-boys prep school, where he primarily lined up as a nose tackle. He played on varsity as a sophomore but decided to give up football after the 2014 season because of "hurtful" things said to him by the head coach. Curtis transferred to Chattanooga Central High School in 2015 but didn't play football as a junior. He decided to return to football as a senior and moved to the offensive line. Starting at left tackle, Curtis earned honorable mention All-State honors. He also saw snaps on the defensive line, posting 17 tackles and 5.0 tackles for loss in 2016. He played basketball all four years of high school, at both McCallie and Central.

A two-star recruit, Curtis was the No. 205 offensive tackle in the 2017 recruiting class and the No. 69 recruit in Tennessee. After not playing football as a junior, he wasn't well-known on the recruiting radar, but he turned heads at camps the summer before his senior year. Curtis finished with 10 total scholarship offers, including from FBS programs like Appalachian State, Georgia Southern, Middle Tennessee State and Ohio. However, he didn't want to move too far away and committed to his hometown Chattanooga over Tennessee-Martin. Curtis had an invitation to walk on to the Chattanooga basketball team, too, but decided to focus on football. He took advantage of the extra year of eligibility granted because of the pandemic and returned to school for a sixth season in 2022. Curtis graduated with his degree in sport management (May 2021) and is pursuing his master's in school leadership. He accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl.

PRO DAY	6057	325	35	10 1/8	83 7/8	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	- (position drills only – choice)

STRENGTHS: Broad-bodied blocker with elite length/wingspan ... flashes the ability to establish leverage when he rolls his hips, working low to high ... not shy throwing haymakers to jar defenders off their spot or create an avalanche on down blocks ... owns the core power to stall rushers at contact and drop anchor in his sets ... efficient out of his stance to jump set or get on the move ... makes a beeline to his target when pulling ... tipped the scale north of 360 pounds when he enrolled but maintained a trim 325 pounds in college ... known for his strong personal character ... earned a 4.0 GPA over the last three years and was appointed to the NCAA Division I Oversight Committee in September 2021 ... logged 38 career starts, at three different positions.

WEAKNESSES: Needs to use more consistent knee bend in pass sets to keep his taller stature from sapping his leverage ... more of a pusher than latch-and-control blocker in the run game ... often finds his upper half overextended, giving blockers a chance to pull him to the ground (see: 2022 Illinois tape) ... effective on short pulls, but his range will be limited in some schemes ... his hands can get crazed at times, and he needs to better reset once defenders get inside his frame ... needs to improve his anticipation to understand where pressures are coming from ... almost all of his college experience came against FCS competition.

SUMMARY: A four-year starter at Chattanooga, Curtis played multiple positions in offensive coordinator Joe Pizzo’s wide- and inside-zone scheme. Although not nearly as refined or pro-ready as former teammate Cole Strange (No. 29 overall in the 2022 NFL Draft), Curtis’ senior-season tape (zero sacks allowed) showed a future NFL player. Although he displays some heavy movements in space, Curtis is a road grader in the run game and shows promise in pass protection because of his natural frame and length. However, he is raw in several areas and will find out quickly that he can’t overpower everyone at the next level. Overall, Curtis has down-the-road NFL starting ability but needs to learn how to trust his technique and best utilize his biomechanics to maximize his ability, which will take time. He fits best in a power scheme.

GRADE: 5th-6th Round

13. JOEY FISHER | Shepherd 6041 | 296 lbs. | 6SR Hagerstown, Md. (Clear Spring) 11/11/1997 (age 25.46) #76

BACKGROUND: Joseph “Joey” Fisher, who has a younger sister and brother, was born in Prince George’s County, Md. before moving north to the Hagerstown area in elementary school. He started playing football in third grade at the pee-wee level. Fisher attended Clear Spring High School and was an immediate starter at defensive end, posting 12.5 sacks as a freshman. He played through a torn labrum in his shoulder as a sophomore, which required offseason surgery (May 2014), and he missed his entire junior season in 2014. As a senior, Fisher earned All-State and All-County honors at defensive end with 15.0 sacks, a Tri-State and Clear Spring record. He was a four-year letterman in basketball and helped lead Clear Spring to the 2015-16 Regional Championship. Fisher also played baseball as a freshman and lettered in track, finishing runner-up at the 2016 state championships in the shot put (47-9).

A three-star recruit, Fisher was the No. 103 strongside defensive end in the 2016 recruiting class and the No. 48 recruit in Maryland. Coming from a smaller 1A program (around 450-student enrollment), he wasn’t highly recruited and then missed his junior season because of injury, which further hurt his recruitment. Maryland took notice, though, offered him a scholarship. Fisher committed to head coach Randy Edsall in April 2015 and was expecting to be part of Maryland’s 2016 recruiting class. However, Edsall and his staff were fired a few weeks before signing day. New head coach D.J. Durkin wasn’t high on Fisher and wanted him to move to tight end. So, Fisher decommitted from Maryland instead and signed with Towson of the FCS as a defensive end in March 2016. But Fisher didn’t feel comfortable at Towson and left the school before the season started. He took the 2016 season off and worked for his father (Jim) as a locksmith. Division II Shepherd (20 miles from his hometown) reached out with a scholarship offer and Fisher joined the program prior to the 2017 season. Two seasons later, he finally suited up for the Rams as an offensive lineman. His younger brother (Dustin) is a rising junior tight end at Shepherd. Fisher accepted his invitation to the 2023 NFLPA Collegiate Bowl and was a late call-up to the Senior Bowl but was unable to participate because of a broken knuckle. He was also selected in the 2023 USFL Draft (No. 18 overall) by the Houston Gamblers.

STRENGTHS: Well-strapped together with proportionate thickness ... stout at the point of attack with a wide base to answer power ... delivers pop in his punches to create knockback ... moves well in short areas to reestablish leverage himself and stay connected ... gets his strong hands on defenders to secure and strain when drive blocking ... efficient on short pulls and unloads on his target ... has a defensive background, and it shows with his combative playing attitude ... senior captain and was highly decorated at the Division II level ... overcame numerous adversities to reach this point, and his football journey has already been a success ... started 43 games over three seasons at Shepherd.

WEAKNESSES: Short-armed blocker and often finds himself lunging for contact ... his aiming points need to be tighter as he adjusts to NFL quickness ... long-armed defensive lineman will have better success prying open his chest than his college opponents ... limited overall range ... appears heavy on sharp lateral angles and when working up to the second level ... gets his hips opened too early in pass protection and footwork is tardy to recover ... will turn 26 as an NFL rookie ... only played right tackle (practiced at left tackle) in college and guard will be a new position for him ... did not play during the 2017 and 2018 seasons; broke his knuckle and was unable to participate at the Senior Bowl (February 2023).

SUMMARY: A three-year starter at Shepherd, Fisher was the starting right tackle in the Rams’ RPO spread offense. As a senior in high school in 2015, he was headed to Maryland as a pass rusher but numerous twists and turns led him to the Division II ranks, where he turned himself into an NFL prospect as an offensive lineman. With his core strength and tenacity, Fisher looks to overwhelm his opponent as both a run blocker and pass protector with his bully hands. His age, medical history and lack of top-tier experience all will work against him on draft weekend, but he more than held his own during NFLPA Collegiate Bowl practices. Overall, a major uptick in competition awaits Fisher at the next level, but his coordination, play strength and finishing mentality will not look out of place vs. NFL competition. He is a practice-squad candidate as he transitions inside to guard.

14. T.J. BASS | Oregon

Deming, Wash. (Mount Baker)

#56

BACKGROUND: Travis “T.J.” Bass, who is one of three children, was raised north of Seattle by his mother (Angie) and father (Travis). He attended Mount Baker Senior High School and was a three-year letterman, playing on both sides of the ball as a defensive end and tight end. As a junior, Bass posted 82 tackles, 16.5 tackles for loss and 10.0 sacks, earning first team All-State and All-Conference honors. He also caught 13 passes for 227 yards and three touchdowns and was a productive blocking tight end. As a senior, Bass finished his senior season with 23.5 tackles for loss, 13.0 sacks and three forced fumbles and was named the conference’s co-MVP in 2017. He also lettered in track and set personal bests in the shot put (50-1.5) and discus (128-10).

A no-star recruit, Bass originally enrolled at Idaho and grayshirted in 2017 because of academics. He then transferred to Butte College in northern California and started for two seasons at left tackle. Bass earned All-League honors as a freshman and was a juco All-American as a sophomore in 2019. He also participated in the shot put at Butte. A three-star juco recruit, he was the No. 1 guard and No. 21 overall juco recruit in the 2020 recruiting class. Bass collected offers from several Power 5 programs, including Arizona State, Auburn, Kansas State, TCU, UCLA, Utah, Washington State and West Virginia. He committed to the Ducks and enrolled in January 2020. Bass graduated with his degree in general social science (June 2022). He accepted his invitation to the 2023 NFLPA Collegiate Bowl.

PRO DAY	6044	321	31 7/8	9 1/2	79 1/4	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	(no bench press – left pec)

STRENGTHS: Broad-chested and plays wide ... his feet stay on the move as a base blocker ... sets low for a well-leveraged response versus power ... knocks rushers off-schedule with strong, well-timed hands ... flashes the grip strength to lock and load and ride the bull ... stays under control into initial contact in the run game, creating movement from his hips and lower body ... calms his feet to be effective on downfield and second-level blocks ... excellent awareness on combos ... fierce finisher and doesn’t play complacent ... started 34 straight games the last three seasons (13 at left guard followed by 21 at left tackle).

WEAKNESSES: Lacks ideal length and long-armed rushers can access his frame ... inconsistent pass-set depth with his initial steps and late to react versus explosiveness in his gaps ... lower-body stiffness hurts his lateral range and mirror ... his pad level tends to rise at contact, allowing his base to narrow ... appears comfortable catching and absorbing rushers, but he won’t get away with that in the NFL ... has a slight hitch in his giddy-up on pulling plays ... can get the job done at the second level but is often tardy reaching his target ... three false start penalties on 2022 tapes studied ... will be 24 on draft weekend.

SUMMARY: A three-year starter at Oregon, Bass lined up at left tackle in former offensive coordinator Kenny Dillingham’s scheme. After cutting his teeth at the juco level, he started every game since arriving in Eugene and earned All-Pac-12 honors all three seasons. Bass struggled at times against aggressive edge rushers (see: 2022 Washington or 2022 Georgia tapes), but his lack of ideal length and responsive quicks should be easier to mask inside at guard. He has the body thickness and force behind his well-placed punch that’s desired for interior work. Overall, Bass doesn’t have high-level reactive athleticism to easily counter and keep blocks centered, but he gives as good as he gets because of his heavy hands and desire to finish. He projects as a rotational guard in a gap scheme.

GRADE: 5th-6th Round

15. ANDREW VORHEES | USC

6060 | 310 lbs. | 6SR

Kingsburg, Calif. (Kingsburg)

#72

BACKGROUND: Andrew Vorhees (VORE-heez) grew up in Kingsburg (20 miles south of Fresno), where he was unable to play football in elementary school because he exceeded the weight limit. Instead, he joined the wrestling team in second grade and won several youth state championships. Vorhees finally got his chance to play organized football in seventh grade (after dropping his weight under the 180-pound limit). He attended Kingsburg High School, where he was a three-year varsity letterman and played on the JV team as a freshman. After earning a starting job as a sophomore, Vorhees was the left tackle on offense and accounted for 38 tackles on the defensive line, earning second team All-State honors. He collected numerous awards as a senior, including All-American, All-State and All-Star and was named the conference’s lineman of the year. Vorhees finished the 2016 season with 32 tackles, 4.0 sacks and his first career touchdown on a fumble recovery. He lettered in wrestling at Kingsburg and qualified for states as a sophomore. Vorhees also lettered in track and placed first at the 2016 championships in the shot put (54-1).

A three-star recruit, Vorhees was the No. 36 offensive tackle in the 2017 recruiting class and the No. 41 recruit in California. His recruitment ramped up during his junior year, when he picked up several Pac-12 offers like Arizona State, Colorado, UCLA and Utah. The summer before his senior year, Vorhees committed to USC and was the third-highest-ranked tackle in the Trojans’ 2017 class (behind Austin Jackson and Alijah Vera-Tucker). He took advantage of the NCAA extra year of eligibility granted because of the pandemic and returned to the Trojans for his sixth season in 2022. Vorhees graduated with his degree in business administration (May 2019) and is working on his master’s degree in communications management/sociology. He married his wife (Samantha) in March 2018. Vorhees accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl.

PRO DAY	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	(no workout – right ACL)

STRENGTHS: Wide-base blocker with strength in his upper and lower halves ... uses choppy slide steps and firm strikes to create knockback at contact ... credits his agility and handwork to his wrestling days in high school ... willing to absorb power in his run and pass anchors ... moves with enough knee bend and foot quickness, executing backside and frontside ... functional pulling range ... aware vision to locate delayed blitzes and pass off stunts ... plays with the timing and awareness of a five-year starter ... well-known on campus for his weight-room feats (led all combine participants with 38 bench-press reps) ... has overcome multiple injuries and there aren't any concerns about his mental or physical toughness ... has starting experience at both guard positions and left tackle.

WEAKNESSES: Waist-bender and gets his upper-half over extended ... his punch is quick, but short, which leads to a lot of body-to-body blocks ... his hands tend to get wide, allowing defensive linemen to target his chest ... mediocre redirect skills because of his upright style ... guilty of over-setting against explosive gap penetrators, and his feet are late to respond to counters ... extensive medical history, including a torn ACL in his right knee (March 2023) during on-field combine workouts; suffered a left foot injury (September 2019) and underwent season-ending surgery; suffered a "slight" tear of his meniscus and had offseason cartilage surgery (April 2018), causing him to miss spring practices; spent time in concussion protocol (December 2017).

SUMMARY: A five-year starter at USC, Vorhees played left guard in his final season in head coach Lincoln Riley's balanced spread scheme. After starting his college career as the starting right guard for quarterback Sam Darnold, Vorhees learned under four different offensive line coaches in his six seasons, finishing as an All-American and recipient of the 2022 Morris Trophy as the top blocker in the Pac-12 (as voted on by the conference's defensive linemen). Vorhees plays with a strong core and decent balance to fit his blocks with a finishing mentality. Though he is well-schooled, he would benefit from tighter hands and improved movement control to maintain his engagement. Overall, Vorhees tends to get top-heavy and will find recoveries much tougher versus NFL rushers, but he is a physical, blue-collar competitor with the toughness and alertness of a capable NFL positional blocker. His recent ACL injury at the combine puts a discount sticker on his draft tag.

GRADE: 6th Round

16. ATONIO MAFI | UCLA 6025 | 329 lbs. | 5SR Shoreview, Calif. (Junipero Serra) 10/20/2000 (age 22.52) #56

BACKGROUND: Atonio "Nio" Mafi (MA-fee), the youngest of two boys, grew up in the San Francisco area with his Tongan-born mother (Fanganui) and father (Petelo). The family moved around the Bay Area (almost double-digit times) throughout Mafi's childhood, but he primarily grew up in Shoreview, where he developed a love for football by watching the 49ers. Mafi attended Junipero Serra High School, an all-boys Catholic school in San Mateo and the alma mater for several high-profile athletes like Tom Brady, Barry Bonds, Lynn Swann and David Bakhtiari. He was a three-year letterman and played on both the offensive and defensive lines (he spent his sophomore year in Tonga). As a senior, he started at left guard and defensive tackle and helped Junipero Serra to a 13-2 record and the Open Division II championship. Despite an Achilles injury prematurely ending his final season, Mafi earned first team All-State and conference MVP honors in 2017. He also has played rugby for most of his life and lettered in track at Junipero Serra, setting personal bests in the shot put (42-8.5) and discus (108-8).

A three-star recruit, Mafi was the No. 88 defensive tackle in the 2018 recruiting class and the No. 130 recruit in California. He planned to move to Tonga year-round after high school and begin his professional rugby career. However, his football recruitment picked up after his junior season, when he received his first offer, from Hawaii. He added offers from Air Force, San Jose State and Yale before committing to California in June 2017. Mafi decommitted six months later, though, and flipped to UCLA on early signing day. Mafi signed with the Bruins as a defensive tackle, and he played defense for two seasons before suggesting a move to the offensive line to the UCLA coaching staff in 2020. His cousin (Devin Asiasi) played tight end at UCLA (which helped draw Mafi to the Bruins) and was a third-round pick (No. 91) of the New England Patriots in the 2020 NFL Draft. Mafi graduated with his degree in political science and is currently pursuing his master's degree. He accepted his invitation to the 2023 East-West Shrine Bowl (was elected a team captain during the week).

PRO DAY	6025	329	32 5/8	10 3/8	79 3/4	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	21 (no testing – calf strain during training)

STRENGTHS: Big-bodied blocker with proportionate thickness and in-line power ... showcases anvil hands to deliver stiff strikes and create knockback ... displays the lateral footwork to stay out in front and execute reach/hook blocks ... enough mobility to stretch frontside on outside zone ... improved field vision to sort through exotic rush packages ... unloads on bodies out in space, removing defenders from their feet and burying them ... gets after defenders with a competitive spirit that comes naturally to him ... he "radically" changed his diet to maintain his weight (peaked at 411 pounds earlier in his career) ... tied a school record with 56 games played over his career, seeing action at both left and right guard.

WEAKNESSES: Former college defensive lineman and still a work in progress with his technique and awareness ... hungry for contact, leaving him lunging and overextended at the waist ... will drop his head and wait for contact instead of rolling his hips into defenders ... needs to improve his independent hand usage for more efficient resets ... inconsistent body angles and leverage points ... late to pick up delayed pressures and needs to anticipate loopers ... three false starts on the 2022 games studied ... his conditioning and weight will need to be closely monitored ... suffered an Achilles injury that prematurely ended his senior year of high school.

SUMMARY: A one-year starter at UCLA, Mafi plugged in at left guard as a senior in head coach Chip Kelly's diverse run offense. Recruited as a defensive lineman, he played two seasons at defensive tackle before transitioning to the offensive line in 2020. He made incremental improvements with each game the last two seasons at guard. Mafi has a rugby background with better-than-expected foot quickness, which allows him to fit his targets on the move with his length and body control. He relied on his stout base and strong hands/core to help mask his lack of refinement, both fundamentally and instinctually in college. Overall, NFL defenders will expose the raw areas of his game, but Mafi is a promising, heavy-handed mauler who looks to create movement with in-line power. Although he might need time on a practice squad, he has the talent worth developing in a power-based scheme.

GRADE: 6th-7th Round

17. SALA AUMAVAE-LAULU | Oregon 6054 | 317 lbs. | 6SR Hilo, Hawaii (Liberty) 5/25/1999 (age 23.92) #71

BACKGROUND: Malaesala (Muh-lie-saul-uh) “Sala” Aumavae-Laulu (Ah-moo-VYE Law-oo-loo) grew up in Palmer, Alaska (small town 40 miles north of Anchorage). He originally attended Palmer High School as a freshman before his family relocated to Las Vegas in 2014, partly to give Aumavae-Laulu a better chance of being recruited. He enrolled at Liberty High School in Henderson, where he was a three-year letterman on the offensive line. Lining up primarily at left guard as a junior, he earned first team All-League and second team All-State, leading Liberty to an 11-2 season (lost in the playoffs to eventual state champs Bishop Gorman). As a senior, Aumavae-Laulu moved to right guard and repeated as second team All-State. Liberty finished 12-2 in 2016 but again fell to Bishop Gorman, the eventual state champions.

A no-star recruit, Aumavae-Laulu received interest from programs, but he was forced to go the juco route to get his academics in order. He enrolled at Navarro College in Corsicana, Texas and earned honorable mention All-Conference honors in his second year. A four-star juco recruit, Aumavae-Laulu was the No. 1 offensive tackle among juco recruits in the 2019 class and the No. 5 recruit overall. He had no shortage of admirers and collected an impressive offer sheet that included national powers like Alabama, Florida, Florida State, Oklahoma, Tennessee, Texas A&M and USC. But he knew early on that he wanted to go to Oregon and committed to the Ducks in June 2018. Aumavae-Laulu originally declared for the 2022 NFL Draft but reversed course and took advantage of the extra year of eligibility granted by the NCAA because of the pandemic, returning for his sixth season in 2022. He accepted his invitation to the 2023 East-West Shrine Bowl.

STRENGTHS: Big-boned with solid mass, long arms and large hands ... showcases the upper-body torque and punching hands to displace defenders ... able to redirect with power and remove defenders from their feet ... forklifts his target with a step of acceleration ... shows footwork and functional mobility on counter bash (head coach Dan Lanning: “He can do some things you aren’t meant to do at that size.”) ... sets with a wide base to absorb contact and take the charge ... collapses the line on down blocks ... takes pride in his physical brand of football and is a competitive finisher in one-on-one matchups ... rarely left the field and played in every game the last two seasons.

WEAKNESSES: Sloppy, top-heavy tendencies that leave him hunched at the waist ... heavy-legged with below-average recovery quickness ... his pads rise and body control weakens as the play progresses ... overeager to make first meaningful contact and sacrifices his balance early in the rep ... his grabby, sporadic hands lack precision (combined for 18 total penalties over the past two seasons) ... appears a tick late digesting and reacting to twists/stunts ... has just enough range to climb and leak into space, but shows below-average execution at the second level ... will be a 24-year-old NFL rookie ... saw some snaps at guard at Oregon, but all of his starts were at right tackle.

SUMMARY: A three-year starter at Oregon, Aumavae-Laulu was entrenched at right tackle in former offensive coordinator Kenny Dillingham’s scheme. After originally declaring for the 2022 NFL Draft, he changed his mind and returned to Eugene for the 2022 season, then led Oregon in snaps (902) and earned All-Pac-12 honors. A big and long blocker, Aumavae-Laulu generates a surge in the run game with his upper-body strength to turn and dump defenders. His undisciplined fundamentals often leave him off-balance, but the blocking edge and finishing toughness are redeeming qualities. Overall, Aumavae-Laulu is an unrefined player with plenty of bad habits that require breaking, but his booming hands and natural power are traits worth developing. He is a practice-squad candidate with the upside of a rosterable NFL guard.

18. MARK EVANS II | Arkansas Pine Bluff 6024 | 303 lbs. | 5SR Houston, Texas (C.E. King) 10/11/1999 (age 23.54) #78

BACKGROUND: Mark Evans II, one of four children, was raised by his mother (Janice D. Perry). He had trouble playing football in his early days because of pee-wee weight limits and only played one season of youth football after his family relocated to the Houston area. More of a basketball player growing up, Evans gave football another chance in the seventh grade and continued playing into high school. He enrolled at C.E. King High School but didn’t move up to varsity until his junior year. Evans was a two-year starter at right tackle, but his senior season was disrupted by Hurricane Harvey in 2017. His home was destroyed by the flooding and his family was displaced, spending time at the George R. Brown Convention Center until they found shelter at a friend’s house.

A no-star recruit, Evans wasn’t ranked by the online recruiting services. There were a number of reasons why he was behind the eight-ball as a recruit: he didn’t start playing varsity until his junior year, didn’t attend many camps, played on a team that won only four combined games his final two seasons and his senior year was disrupted by the aftermath of Hurricane Harvey. Evans was noticed by several juco programs and committed to Navarro College (a three-hour drive north of Houston). However, Arkansas Pine Bluff of the FCS offered him late (after signing day) and he committed. His younger brother (Jessie) played defensive end at Prairie View A&M. Evans graduated summa cum laude (3.8 GPA) with his degree in biology (May 2022). He accepted his invitation to the East-West Shrine Bowl.

STRENGTHS: Sets up efficiently for quick engagements ... functional slide movements to reach landmarks and prevent easy wins for rushers ... flashes the hand strength to work his aiming points and stay centered the best he can ... looks to latch and steer in the run game, driving his feet through the whistle (one of four college linemen chosen for an NIL deal with Denny's for their "All-Pancaker" team) ... caves down on defensive ends to spring runs ... stays controlled in space to jolt second-level defenders ... plays with an understanding of defensive alignments and pressure packages ... has experience at both tackle and guard, and he practiced snapping during practices as a senior to prepare for the possibility of moving to center.
WEAKNESSES: Lacks ideal length and his body composition needs work ... requires technical fixes so he can better access his full-strength potential ... big, eager hands into contact but late to position his feet, leading to compromised angles ... inconsistent pad level negates what should be a natural leverage advantage ... his body control breaks down deep into reps (you'd wish he was a better finisher) ... heavy-legged, and his range won't get him as far as it did in college ... combined for 15 penalties over the last two seasons ... most of his playing time came against FCS competition.
SUMMARY: A five-year starter at Arkansas Pine Bluff, Evans lined up at left tackle in the Golden Lions' up-tempo spread scheme. With only one Division I offer out of high school, he was thrown into the fire at left tackle as a true freshman and showed gradual progress each season, becoming the first Arkansas Pine Bluff player to receive a combine invite since Terron Armstead in 2013. (He is also hoping to be the first Arkansas Pine Bluff NFL draft pick since Armstead.) A mean-spirited run blocker, Evans flashes violent, heavy hands and the fierce demeanor to be a people mover on drive or down blocks. He looks to quickly close space on pass rushers, but he struggles to sustain versus counters (see: 2021 Arkansas and 2022 Oklahoma State tapes). Overall, Evans' technique and balance tend to deteriorate after first contact, but he works hard to stay square and keep defenders occupied. He is a draft-and-develop guard with upside and will continue getting better with NFL coaching.
GRADE: 7th Round

19. JAXSON KIRKLAND | Washington 6067 | 321 lbs. | 6SR Portland, Ore. (Jesuit) 7/30/1998 (age 24.74) #51

BACKGROUND: Jaxson Kirkland grew up in Portland but was raised in a Washington Huskies family because of his father. He started playing football at age 10 and had a chance to learn first-hand from his father, a former offensive lineman. Kirkland enrolled at Jesuit High School, a Catholic school in Portland, where he was a three-year letterman. He required time to grow into his body and spent his sophomore season as a special teamer and backup. He won the starting left tackle job as a junior and earned first team All-State and All-Metro honors while helping Jesuit to a 14-0 record and the 2015 6A state championship. As a senior, Kirkland again earned first team All-State honors at left tackle, as Jesuit finished 12-1, falling in the quarterfinals of the playoffs (Kirkland's only loss as a starter). He also lettered in track (shot put) at Jesuit.

A three-star recruit, Kirkland was the No. 58 offensive tackle in the 2017 recruiting class and the No. 8 recruit in Oregon. After his junior season, he picked up offers from Washington State, Oregon State and Iowa State. Prior to his senior year, Kirkland committed to UCLA. However, when five-star offensive tackle recruit Foster Sarell chose Stanford over Washington, the Huskies reached out to Kirkland a few weeks before signing day to fill the spot. He also picked up a late offer from Oregon and took another visit to UCLA. But Kirkland grew up dreaming of playing for the Huskies and was the final player to sign in Washington's 2017 class. His father (Dean) was a three-year starting guard (1988-90) at Washington, as well as a team captain and All-American on the Huskies' conference championship team as a senior. After initially entering the 2022 NFL Draft, Kirkland discovered that he required surgery to repair his ankle, which would have sidelined him for the draft process. He decided to return to Washington for his sixth season, but he had to go through an appeal process since he'd hired an agent and gone through the early stages of the NFL Draft process. Kirkland was reinstated but ruled ineligible for the 2022 season opener. He graduated with his bachelor's degree (May 2022). Kirkland accepted his invitation to the 2023 East-West Shrine Bowl.

STRENGTHS: Light-footed and aggressively aims for his landmarks ... displays early quickness out of his stance to respond to explosive pass rushers and work off initial blocks ... repositions his feet and plays mindful of staying square mid-rush ... plays with adequate arm length ... delivers a strong inside punch to the chest of defenders and flashes the hand strength to snatch ... his grip control also shows in the run game with his latch-and-drive skills ... voted a team captain in 2022 ... steady locker room guy and graduated from the Chris Petersen school of "why culture matters" ... willing to play through pain ... experienced inside and outside with 15 career starts at left tackle and 34 at guard.

WEAKNESSES: High-cut frame and tends to play narrow ... often hunched at the waist and can be tossed when caught leaning ... struggles to recover after a mis-punch to his target ... inconsistent anchor and reset skills, especially on the move ... his body tightness hurts his ability to swing his hips on stunts/seals and creates break-down issues as a puller ... want to see more grit from him as a finisher in the run game ... will turn 25 before his first NFL training camp ... missed multiple games over his career because of injuries; played through a right ankle injury most of the 2021 season (doctors told him he was about 60-percent healthy), requiring offseason surgery (February 2022).

SUMMARY: A five-year starter at Washington, Kirkland lined up at left guard in offensive coordinator Ryan Grubb’s pro-style spread scheme. After two seasons of uneven tape at left tackle (Kirkland wasn’t at full health in 2021), he returned for a sixth season in 2022 and moved to left guard, where he looked much more comfortable. Kirkland plays much better when he is the aggressor and not asked to react to the defender (better execution with RPOs rather than traditional five-step quarterback drops). Though he has functional foot quickness, there is too much leaning and waist bending in this game. Overall, the keys for Kirkland to secure an NFL roster spot and see the field are controlled, repeatable hands and consistent leverage, because of his upright posture. He projects best inside at guard, where he does a better job keeping defenders centered.

20. BRENT LAING | Minnesota-Duluth 6037 | 304 lbs. | 6SR Lakeville, Minn. (North) 6/3/1999 (age 23.90) #76

BACKGROUND: Brent Laing was raised in Lakeville (25 miles south of Minneapolis) by his mother (Mary) and father (Patrick) and started playing football at age 7. He attended Lakeville North High School and worked his way into the starting rotation as a freshman. After starting primarily at right tackle as a junior, Laing kicked inside to left guard as a senior and led North to a 9-2 record and deep playoff run. He received multiple honors after his final season, including second team All-State, first team All-Metro and first team All-Conference. Laing also lettered in track (indoor and outdoor) and set personal bests in the shot put (51-1.5) and discus (147-5).

A no-star recruit, Laing wasn’t ranked by online recruiting services in the 2017 recruiting class. He started to receive recruiting interest during his junior year at North, but at only 240-pounds, he went overlooked by Division I programs. He received partial scholarship offers from several nearby Division II schools like Augustana and Bemidji State. But Laing made a connection when he visited Minnesota-Duluth, which is located on the shores of Lake Superior near the Wisconsin border. He committed to the Bulldogs and originally practiced at guard before moving out to right tackle as a sophomore. Laing elected to return to school for his sixth in 2022 and considered entering the transfer portal to play Division I, but he chose to stay with his teammates and wanted to be a captain. He graduated with his degree in business (December 2021) and is working on his second degree in finance. He accepted his invitation to the 2023 East-West Shrine Bowl.

STRENGTHS: Athletic off the ball and quick into his blocks ... moves with the controlled mirroring speed to cut off rush angles ... redirects well to respond and pick up inside counters ... plays with enough functional strength to slow interior rushers when he stays centered ... comfortably climbs to the second level and can fit linebackers in space ... pleasant and thoughtful off the field, mean block finisher on the field ... added 65 pounds since high school (515-pound squat) ... stayed loyal to his teammates and coaches instead of leaving for greener pastures in the transfer portal ... practiced at guard as a redshirt freshman before moving out to right tackle for his final three seasons (took snaps at center and guard during East-West Shrine Bowl week).

WEAKNESSES: Unimpressive frame with short arms and average bulk ... doesn’t have a ton of power in his lower body and doesn’t drive defenders off the ball as a run blocker ... tends to wear down after first contact ... sitting down and halting NFL bull rushers won’t be a smooth transition for him ... punctual hands, but his placement and reset skills will need time to catch up to NFL speed ... his feet will panic at times and lead to undisciplined steps ... will be a 24-year-old rookie ... practiced at guard in college, but his starts came at right tackle and he lacks true experience at center ... faces a substantial jump in competition after playing at the Division II level the past six years.

SUMMARY: A three-year starter at Minnesota-Duluth, Laing lined up at right tackle in head coach Curt Wiese’s RPO spread scheme. After his All-American junior season, he considered jumping to Division I via the transfer portal but returned to Duluth in 2022 because he wanted to be a team captain, and he produced another All-American season (zero sacks allowed in 2022). Laing does a nice job in his setup to immediately achieve a low, balanced position with efficient hand strikes to stay after defenders from snap to whistle. However, he struggles to regain control of the rep when he can’t stay centered, which will show up against the explosive speed and power awaiting him at the next level. Overall, Laing faces a substantial jump in competition going from Division II to the NFL, but he has a chance to become Duluth’s first NFL Draft pick since 1990 because of his athletic versatility on the interior and competitive profile. After some time on a practice squad, he has the ability to carve out a career similar to Hjalte Froholdt.

21. TASHAWN MANNING | Kentucky 6031 | 327 lbs. | 6SR Apopka, Fla. (Wekiva) 5/23/1998 (age 24.93) #79

BACKGROUND: Tashawn (TAY-shawn) Manning, who has a sister (Eboni), was born in Charleston, W.Va. and grew up in central Florida. He attended Wekiva High School, where he was a three-year letterman for head coach Kenard Lang, who was a former first-round pick and played 10 seasons in the NFL (1997-2006). Though he played both ways, Manning was best known as a defensive lineman. As a senior in 2015, he was named first team All-State and All-Conference at defensive tackle.

He also lettered in track at Wekiva and set personal bests in the shot put (40-0) and discus (137-6.5). Manning was diagnosed with acute promyelocytic leukemia on Thanksgiving weekend of his senior year and faced eight months of chemotherapy. He was declared cancer-free in July 2016.

A three-star recruit, Manning was the No. 61 defensive tackle in the 2016 recruiting class and the No. 139 recruit in Florida. After his junior season, he attended several camps and collected numerous FBS offers, including from Indiana, NC State, North Carolina, Pittsburgh, Purdue, Syracuse and West Virginia. His Auburn offer arrived the summer before his senior year, and he committed a few weeks later because he wanted to play in the SEC. Manning was on pace to graduate high school early and enroll at Auburn in January 2016, but his cancer diagnosis changed those plans. He focused on his health and his chemo treatments while also taking classes at Valencia Community College in Orlando. Manning enrolled at Auburn in January 2017 and transitioned from defensive line to offensive line during his redshirt year. When his role diminished in 2021 under head coach Bryan Harsin, he entered the transfer portal after the regular-season finale and landed at Kentucky for his sixth season. His father (Curtis or “Buck”) played offensive tackle at Marshall (1993-96) and his mother (Nakia) was a member of Marshall’s women’s basketball team. Manning graduated with his degree in interdisciplinary studies (December 2020) from Auburn and is working on a second degree in sport, fitness and recreation management. He accepted his invitation to the 2023 NFLPA Collegiate Bowl.

STRENGTHS: Looks the part of an NFL guard with his wide frame and long arms ... stout body type and doesn’t easily give ground (see: 2022 Georgia tape) ... able to drive/uproot from his inline steps in the run game ... rugged play style and leans into his hands for maximum power at contact ... finishes his blocks to the ground when he can ... plays with strong hands to secure his fitting ... not a rangy player but showed adequate foot speed on short-area pulls ... mature and tough-minded and has already overcome cancer at a young age ... started double-digit games at both guard spots in college.

WEAKNESSES: Marginal overall athleticism ... inconsistent knee bend and plays with his head past his feet too often ... average in his initial setup and sluggish when attempting to react to pass-rush quickness ... limited redirect skills and can be crossed up easily ... too much wasted motion with his hands, which causes his punch to be late into contact ... upright on the move with subpar body control ... committed two false starts within three plays on the 2022 South Carolina tape ... doesn’t have desired range for outside pulls or screen-game work.

SUMMARY: A one-year starter at Kentucky, Manning locked down the right guard spot in former offensive coordinator Rich Scangarello’s zone-heavy run scheme. His journey since his senior year of high school has included overcoming leukemia, moving from defense to offense and reigniting his NFL chances as a super senior in Lexington. Manning plays wide in pass protection and stays vigilant, always looking to put his heavy hands to good use. However, his pad level and body control leave him in compromised positions and his hand technique lacks the consistency to bail him out. Overall, Manning has the size and makeup that will appeal to NFL teams, but his below-average athleticism and consistency will be tough hurdles to clear versus NFL skill. He projects as a potential swing guard in the NFL.

22. HENRY BAINIVALU | Washington 6056 | 306 lbs. | 6SR Sammamish, Wash. (Skyline) 12/29/1998 (age 24.33) #66

BACKGROUND: Henry Bainivalu (bah-EE-nee-VAH-lu), who was born in Fiji, moved to the United States with his family when he was age 6. His father (Sunia) and mother (Laisa) are both Fijian natives. Bainivalu played basketball and soccer growing up and started playing football in the fourth grade. He played at the youth level through middle school and helped his team win the youth league championship in Washington in eighth grade. He enrolled at Skyline High School and was called up to varsity as a freshman, seeing starting reps in year one. As a sophomore, Bainivalu played both ways as a left tackle and defensive tackle. As a junior, he earned All-State honors on the offensive line, helping Skyline to a 12-2 record and the 4A state championship game (lost to Gonzaga Prep). As a senior captain, Bainivalu earned All-State honors (on offense and defense) and was named the 2016 4A Offensive Lineman of the Year and 4A Defensive Tackle of the Year. He also lettered in wrestling and track (shot put and discus) at Skyline.

A four-star recruit, Bainivalu was the No. 19 offensive tackle in the 2017 recruiting class and the No. 5 recruit in Washington (No. 2 offensive lineman in the state behind Foster Sarell). His recruitment exploded during his sophomore year and, before that 2014 season was over, he received offers from California, Michigan, Oregon, Oregon State, Utah, Washington and Washington State. Towards the end of his senior year, Bainivalu decided to stay close to home and commit to Washington. He took advantage of the extra year of eligibility granted because of the pandemic and returned to the Huskies for his sixth season in 2022. Bainivalu accepted his invitation to the 2023 East-West Shrine Bowl.

STRENGTHS: Outstanding size, length and hands for the position ... uses his long arms to fit into the chests of defenders ... doesn't often get bullied into the pocket, because of his ability to sink his weight and anchor ... uses his girth to stubbornly get into position to wall off run lanes ... functional mobility on short-side pulls ... committed only four penalties (two holding calls, one false start, one unnecessary roughness) in his 31 career starts ... worked his way into the starting lineup at right guard in the final few games of 2019 and didn't give up his spot, finishing with 31 straight starts.

WEAKNESSES: Not an explosive blocker ... aggressive puncher, but he often throws his hands too early or off target, allowing the defender to avoid him ... needs to keep his feet underneath him to avoid being tossed ... spends too much time on the ground ... inefficient movement skills and looks like a fish out of water when asked to execute out in space ... late reaching second-level targets and struggles to break down in space versus athletic linebackers ... inconsistent communication and awareness on blitz pickup and delayed pressures can fool him ... served a three-game suspension to start the 2019 season ... will turn 25 late in his NFL rookie season ... played left tackle in high school but was a right guard only in college.

SUMMARY: A three-year starter at Washington, Bainivalu held down the right guard spot in offensive coordinator Ryan Grubb's pro-style spread scheme. If he hears his name called in the 2023 NFL Draft, he will be just the second Fiji-born player to be drafted (linebacker Freddy Keiaho, who was drafted in the 2006 NFL Draft, was the first). Bainivalu wants to be a power blocker and unload on defenders, but he doesn't consistently displace or overwhelm his man because of fundamental inconsistencies. Although he doesn't offer much position flexibility, he offers proven durability — no other Husky played more snaps (1,892) than he did over the last three seasons. Overall, Bainivalu looks the part with his size and length, but he ends up on the ground way too often because of balance and technique issues that must be cleaned up to survive NFL roster cuts.

SUMMARY: Henry Byrd was a three-sport standout (basketball, football, lacrosse) at Ensworth High, where he played left tackle, right tackle and defensive tackle. His father (William) played football at Vanderbilt in the mid-70s. A two-star recruit, Henry was just 260 pounds and committed to Princeton over Air Force and several other Ivy League programs. He was pushed into action in the final game of the 2018 season at right tackle and then moved to left tackle for his final three seasons, earning All-Ivy League honors each year. Byrd is quick out of his stance with the agility and body control to answer edge speed and adjust to moving targets. His Ivy League education translates to the field in his ability to quickly process and sort everything. He is strong but not always stout, and he needs to make some technical fixes. Overall, Byrd is viewed as a guard/center prospect, but regardless of where he plays, he has the intelligence and athletic tools worth developing.

SUMMARY: Ibrahim "Ilm" (elm) Manning was born and raised in Glendale and was a standout football and track athlete at Apollo High. He started on both sides of the ball and was named regional Player of the Year in 2017. A two-star recruit, he signed with Hawaii (his only FBS offer) and won the starting left tackle job as a true freshman. He became a staple at the blindside for the Warriors, becoming one of the few players in NCAA history to reach 60 career starts at left tackle. Manning is a quick-footed and controlled mover with the hand-fighting skills to keep rushers occupied and in front of him. He will struggle at times versus power and needs to be more efficient with his recovery skills, especially if moving inside to guard/center. In the run game, he looks to grip and drive at contact with a nasty finish. Overall, Manning sacrifices his technique and base strength at times, but he stays light in his movements with the tools to grow into a functional interior blocker.

SUMMARY: Nash Jensen was a three-year starter at Osseo High and helped the program win a state championship in 2015. He played across the offensive line and also lettered in basketball. His father (Russell), who passed away from cancer in July 2022, wrestled at Wisconsin. A two-star recruit, Nash signed with North Dakota State (despite FBS interest) and played in an NCAA-record 70 games, including 55 starts, all at left guard. He committed only two penalties in more than 3,000 career offensive snaps. Jensen has a barrel-chested frame with the upper-body strength to control defenders in the run game. Though there is tightness in some of his movements, he has surprisingly agile feet as a short puller with contact balance to strain once latched. He needs to improve his forward lean on positional blocks. Overall, Jensen will struggle to square and stymie quick-twitch NFL rushers, but his anchor and bulldozing strength in the run game will give him a chance to stick.

SUMMARY: Jerome Carvin was born in Guam and grew up in Louisiana before moving to Memphis when he was age 4. He earned All-Region honors as a junior and senior left tackle at Cordova High, leading the program to 12 wins in 2017. A four-star recruit, Carvin committed to Tennessee over Auburn and worked himself into the starting lineup as a true freshman. He played all three interior-line spots over his 60 games in Knoxville. Carvin moves with adequate foot quickness to get into proper position. Against power, he can engage his core and anchor down at the point of attack when his hands thud inside. However, there is too much wasted motion in his setup, and he struggles to stay centered, both in the run game and as a pass blocker (14 penalties the past two seasons). Overall, Carvin is able to control his man when he stays on schedule, but his chaotic technique leads to balance issues. His versatile experience helps his NFL chances.

SUMMARY: Cooper Hodges prepped at Baker County High (west of Jacksonville) where he lettered all four seasons on the offensive line (and fullback on goal-line runs). He led the program to a 13-2 record as a senior and the school's first trip to the state title game. A two-star recruit, he only had a handful of FBS offers and committed to Appalachian State. He earned the starting right tackle job as a redshirt freshman and started all 51 games there the last four seasons, accumulating over 3,500 offensive snaps in App State's zone scheme. While 99.9 percent of his snaps came at right tackle in college, he looked comfortable at guard during NFLPA practices. He is a square-framed blocker with functional foot speed, but his core stiffness restricts his flexibility. He is a mean dude who won't pass on an opportunity to latch and bury. Overall, Hodges is a college tackle with a potential NFL future inside at guard because of his physical hands, play strength and football IQ.

SUMMARY: Jordan Rhodes was a basketball-focused athlete growing up and didn’t join the football team until his junior year at Creekside High. He became a starter as a senior left tackle and defensive lineman in 2016. A three-star recruit, he signed with South Carolina (same recruiting class as Javon Kinlaw) and became a starter in 2019. He transferred to Ole Miss prior to the 2021 season but saw only one start. He transferred again, to Arkansas State in 2022, and started 11 games at right guard. Rhodes has rare arm length with weighted, strong hands to control the point of attack once he latches onto defenders, although he will struggle sustaining lateral blocks. His foot quickness is adequate but gets heavy when he’s attempting to recover. He had shoulder surgery (November 2022) and didn’t work out pre-draft. Overall, Rhodes is still unrefined in several areas, but he showed enough promise on the 2022 tape to put himself on the radar as a developmental guard.

1. JOE TIPPMANN | Wisconsin 6060 | 313 lbs. | 4JR Fort Wayne, Ind. (Bishop Dwenger) 3/24/2001 (age 22.09) #75

BACKGROUND: Joe Tippmann, who is one of eight children (seven boys, one girl), was born and raised in Fort Wayne and started playing football at the youth level. In the sixth grade, he started working with Bishop Dwenger offensive line coach Jason Fabini, a Fort Wayne native who was a fourth-round pick in the 1998 NFL Draft and played 11 seasons in the NFL (1998-2008). Tippmann became a fourth-generation football player at Bishop Dwenger, a Catholic high school in Fort Wayne. He was the starting left tackle as a 15-year-old sophomore, announcing himself as one of the top players in the area. As a junior, he earned All-State and All-Conference honors at left tackle while adding 68 tackles on defense. As a senior captain, Tippmann led Bishop Dwenger to a 14-1 season and the 2018 Class 4A state championship (four-overtime thriller in the title game at Lucas Oil Stadium). With 102 pancake blocks in 2018, he was named Indiana’s Mr. Football and conference MVP, adding 41 tackles and 3.0 sacks as a defensive tackle. Tippmann also won the Euell A. Wilson Award, which goes to the senior who has the greatest impact athletically and in the community. He lettered in track and set a personal best of 42 feet 2.25 inches in the shot put.

A four-star recruit, Tippmann was the No. 26 offensive tackle in the 2019 recruiting class and the No. 6 recruit in Indiana. He started to collect scholarship offers during his junior season, starting with Ball State and Cincinnati. Tippmann attended a recruiting camp at Wisconsin the summer before his junior year and stayed close with the coaching staff, which finally offered him in November 2017. He committed a month later, becoming the fifth recruit to join the Badgers’ 2019 class. Several schools (Indiana, Iowa, Minnesota, Notre Dame, Purdue) continued to recruit him, but Tippmann stayed loyal to Wisconsin and signed in the early signing period. Part of the Badgers’ recruiting pitch was that they would train him at tackle, guard and center, and Tippmann was open to playing any position. He was born into an athletic family, with multiple siblings and cousins who starred athletically at Bishop Dwenger High School (NFL scout: “There were like 18 players on the 2018 Bishop Dwenger varsity squad from the Tippmann family tree.”). Several of his relatives went on to play college athletics, most recently Jack Tippmann (freshman tight end at Illinois State in 2022) and K.J. Tippmann (freshman running back at St. Francis in 2022). Tippmann opted out of the 2022 bowl game and elected to skip his senior season to enter the 2023 NFL Draft.

STRENGTHS: Fluid, rangy big man with the foot speed to excel on short and long pulls ... quick first step and opens his hips out of his stance to seal pursuit angles as a lead blocker ... has a natural feel for wide-zone footwork (play-side and back-side) ... uses his reach to latch-and-drive defenders out of the play ... resets well in pass protection with the play strength and active punch to stay square ... showcases snap in his hips when he maintains his pad level to displace his target ... locates targets from distance to make appropriate adjustments ... weight-room warrior (635-pound squat, 455-pound bench according to Bruce Feldman’s Freaks List), but his teammates describe him as a “calm” communicator at center ... relates to every player in the locker room and NFL scouts, most coaches give him strong character reviews ... skill set should translate well to guard.

WEAKNESSES: Taller than ideal for the position ... gets upright in space and pad level consistency will be a constant battle for him ... loses balance after first contact when he allows defenders to get into his body ... needs to better reset his hips/hands to stay attached and sustain blocks without straining (flagged four times for holding in 2022) ... was non-contact the last two offseasons as he transitioned to center ... battled through the 2020 season with a damaged right shoulder, which required offseason surgery (missed 2021 spring); suffered a left shoulder injury and missed 2022 spring practices because of his second straight offseason labrum surgery (different shoulder) ... practiced at guard and tackle, but 99.5 percent of his in-game snaps came at center.

SUMMARY: A two-year starter at Wisconsin, Tippmann operated at center in former offensive coordinator Bobby Engram’s run-based pro-style scheme (his first season as a play-caller was in 2022). A tackle in high school, he cross-trained at guard and tackle on the scout team in 2019 and as a backup in 2020 before moving to center for the 2021 and 2022 seasons (had never played the position before). Tippmann is an athletic blocker who shines on pulls, cutoffs and any move-block that shows off his range and eyes. With his bend and flexibility, he is able to play low for a taller player and generate explosive torque through his hips, but he gets off-schedule when his pads rise, often ending up on the ground. Overall, Tippmann must be mindful of his body leverage/balance to match up versus NFL defenders, but his quickness, strength and vision are all plus traits for a starting interior lineman. He projects as an NFL starter (either center or guard), ideally suited for a wide-zone scheme.

GRADE: 2nd Round (No. 43 overall)

2. JOHN MICHAEL SCHMITZ | Minnesota 6034 | 301 lbs. | 6SR Flossmoor, Ill. (HW-Flossmoor) 3/19/1999 (age 24.11) #60

BACKGROUND: John Michael Schmitz Jr., who is one of four children, started playing football (and hockey) when he was age 5 for the Homewood Flossmoor Junior Vikings. Growing up on the South Side of Chicago, he initially attended Marian Catholic High School in Chicago Heights and played defensive end on the freshman team. As a sophomore, Schmitz moved up to varsity and was a two-way starter on the offensive and defensive lines. Wanting to play at a larger program, he transferred to Homewood-Flossmoor Community High School, where he started at left tackle as a junior and senior, helping the team to a 20-3 record over his final two seasons. Schmitz earned All-State and All-Conference honors as a senior. He also played baseball and basketball and wrestled at Marian Catholic, but chose to focus on only football at Homewood-Flossmoor.

A three-star recruit, Schmitz was the No. 16 center in the 2017 recruiting class and the No. 25 recruit in Illinois (fifth-best offensive line recruit in the state). After his junior season, he received his first offer (Buffalo), one of a half-dozen offers from MAC schools. Schmitz initially committed to head coach P.J. Fleck and Western Michigan and planned on shutting down his recruitment. However, Fleck was hired as the new head coach at Minnesota in January 2017 and asked several WMU recruits to follow him, including Schmitz. Dreaming of one day playing in the Big Ten, Schmitz called it an easy decision despite never visiting the Minnesota campus. He took advantage of the extra year of eligibility due to the pandemic and returned to the Gophers for his sixth season in 2022. Schmitz became engaged to his fiancée (Daniella Lucari) on New Year’s Day 2022. He has two older sisters (Gabrielle and Hannah) and one younger brother (Jack). Schmitz graduated with his degree in sport management. He opted out of the 2022 bowl game and accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl.

PRO DAY	6034	305	32 7/8	9 5/8	79 7/8	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	(no 3-cone – choice)

STRENGTHS: NFL-quality frame with adequate mass and play strength ... skillfully uses his hands and grip strength to latch-and-strain in the run game ... generates power from his lower body to drive his man away from the play ... able to angle his hips to seal run lanes ... his hands stay active and fierce in pass protection ... digs in versus bull rushers and stays stout ... enough range to pick off linebackers as a climber ... nasty on-field finisher ... always looking for work and there are zero concerns about his competitive makeup ... his coaches rave about his mental toughness and blue-collar mentality (his father is a carpenter and his mom worked as an electrician) ... logged 35 career starts for the Gophers, missing only two games (one because of injury, one opt-out) the last three seasons.

WEAKNESSES: Lacks desired length and foot quickness ... falls off blocks when he doesn’t maintain his balance through engagement ... upper half and hands tend to react before his lower body, forcing him to lunge or hold ... inconsistent hand placement, timing and sustain versus quick interior rushers ... needs to be more controlled on the move and keep his eyes elevated when pulling in the run game ... smart player, but his eyes can get wild and he will be late picking up stunts or delayed pressures ... will be 24 on draft weekend ... was only a center at Minnesota and didn’t take a snap at guard or tackle (played left tackle in high school).

SUMMARY: A four-year starter at Minnesota, Schmitz was the anchor of the offensive line at center in offensive coordinator Kirk Ciarrocca’s balanced scheme. Despite losing four starters on the offensive line, the Gophers ranked top-15 nationally in rushing offense in 2022 behind Schmitz, who earned All-American status as a senior (first Minnesota All-American on the offensive line since 2005). A physical brawler with a wrestling background, Schmitz is at his best in the run game where his aggressive hands and grip strength allow him to create displacement (Fleck: “It also helps when your best player is your hardest worker.”). However, the main concern for his NFL transition is his tendency to lose his balance, especially vs. quick interior penetrators. Overall, Schmitz must do a better job keeping his feet, hands and eyes on the same page, but he has the play strength and finishing attitude to execute at the NFL level. With improved consistency, he can be a functional pro starter.

GRADE: 2nd-3rd Round (No. 59 overall)

3. RICKY STROMBERG | Arkansas 6032 | 306 lbs. | 4SR Tulsa, Okla. (Union) 11/10/2000 (age 22.46) #51

BACKGROUND: Richard “Ricky” Stromberg, who is the youngest of four children (six years younger than his next oldest sibling), grew up in Tulsa and developed a passion for football at the pee-wee level. He enrolled at Union High School, where he was a three-year letterman. Stromberg became a varsity starter as a sophomore and helped the program to an 11-2 record and the 2016 state championship. He helped lead Union back to the state title game as a junior, but the team suffered its first loss of the season there. As a senior, Stromberg earned district Offensive Lineman of the Year at left tackle, helping Union to a nine-win season and another playoff appearance. He also played on the defensive line in high school.

A three-star recruit, Stromberg was the No. 6 center in the 2019 recruiting class and the No. 8 recruit in Oklahoma. At 265 pounds, he didn't receive a ton of notice from major programs. Tulsa, his hometown college, offered him a scholarship after his junior season and he committed over the summer. Stromberg attended Arkansas' junior day and stayed in touch with the coaches. In December of his senior year, he received that coveted offer from the Razorbacks and decommitted from Tulsa the next day. Arkansas was the only Power 5 program to offer him and Stromberg was part of the same 2019 recruiting class as Treyton Burks, Jalen Catalon and KJ Jefferson. He opted out of the 2022 bowl game and accepted his invitation to the 2023 East-West Shrine Bowl.

PRO DAY	6033	310	33 1/2	9 1/2	80	-	-	-	-	-	4.58	7.50	- (no bench press – choice)

STRENGTHS: Eager play strength and creates knockback on angle-drive blocks ... flashes the upper-body torque to displace and runs his feet through contact ... goes for the TKO and puts defenders on their backs when given the chance ... functional movement skills to cut off back-side shade in zone ... efficient movement patterns when working up levels or blocking in the screen game ... understands protections and alertly adjusts his steps/depth based on defensive alignment ... mentally tough and his coaches say he plays through injuries ... knows when to be the class clown and when to be the leader of the pack ... has starting experience at all three interior line positions, with 44 starts over the last four seasons.

WEAKNESSES: Guilty of dipping his head and waist-bending into contact ... falls off balance versus slippery defenders when his hands/fits aren't precise because of excessive leaning ... his hands start too wide and are often late resetting ... can get walked back or knocked off his base versus length ... often arrives too early or too late as a puller and needs to stay under control on the move ... routinely played through minor injuries, including an MCL sprain to his left knee (August 2021); missed one game because of a concussion (December 2020).

SUMMARY: A four-year starter at Arkansas, Stromberg lined up at center in former offensive coordinator Kendal Briles' zone-based scheme. After splitting his freshman starts at both guard positions, he found a home at center the past three seasons and played his best football as a senior (zero sacks allowed), winning the Jacobs Blocking Trophy as the top lineman in the SEC. Stromberg doesn't care about beauty points and prefers to drag defenders into the muck, especially when creating a surge in the run game. He gets off-schedule at times due to his eagerness to fit-and-finish, but displays a natural feel for blocking angles based on alignments. Overall, Stromberg could stand to play with better body control and posture through engagement, but he gains early positioning, works hard to stay attached and loses slowly. He is a versatile NFL backup with eventual starting potential.

GRADE: 4th Round

4. LUKE WYPLER | Ohio State 6025 | 303 lbs. | 3JR Montvale, N.J. (St. Joseph Regional) 5/3/2001 (age 21.98) #53

BACKGROUND: Luke Wypler (WHIP-ler), who has four half-siblings, was born and raised in New Jersey and grew up playing multiple sports, including baseball, lacrosse and hockey. However, he started to lean toward football as his go-to sport in middle school. After growing up in central New Jersey with his mom, Wypler moved in with his dad in eastern New Jersey when he was 14 so he could enroll at St. Joseph Regional School, a college preparatory school and one of the top football programs in the state. Wypler earned the starting left tackle job as a sophomore and took home first team All-League and second team All-County honors. As a junior left tackle, he led St. Joseph to a 10-win season and the 2018 state championship. After a wrestling injury in the offseason, Wypler moved from left tackle to right tackle for his senior season and was named first team All-State and a 2019 U.S. Army All-American. He also earned letters in lacrosse and wrestling in high school.

A four-star recruit, Wypler was the No. 2 center in the 2020 recruiting class and the No. 2 recruit in New Jersey. He started to receive FBS offers following his sophomore season, picking up scholarships from Rutgers, Florida, Stanford, Notre Dame, Michigan and Ohio State over a one-month span. With two-dozen offers, Wypler took numerous visits before settling on Ohio State and stayed committed after Urban Meyer's retirement. He was the second-highest ranked offensive lineman in the Buckeyes' 2020 recruiting class, behind only Paris Johnson Jr. His father (Al) played linebacker at East Stroudsburg State. After Luke enrolled at Ohio State, Al bought a house in west Columbus that he shares with his son. Luke's mom (Michele Desimone) is a nurse. His parents are divorced. Wypler elected to skip his final two seasons of eligibility and enter the 2023 NFL Draft.

PRO DAY	6025	302	31 7/8	9 5/8	77 1/8	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	- (position drills only – choice)

STRENGTHS: Athletic mover with the first step and joint flexibility to get underneath defenders ... executes well laterally to reach or pull ... highly efficient on combos and climbs to pass off defensive tackles before reaching the second level ... displays patient weight distribution and strong hands to redirect/mirror in his pass sets ... his hands stay accessible for quick resets if he gets swiped ... adjusts well with gap exchanges and his peripheral vision is an asset ... made major strides with his snap/delay penalties between his sophomore and junior seasons ... coachable, high-intangible player with the mental capacity for the NFL game (also adds plenty of dry humor) ... durable player who started all 26 games the past two seasons.

WEAKNESSES: Short arms and can be flattened out if he doesn't initiate first contact ... struggles to regain leverage against power or long-arm moves ... shaky anchor and it will be tougher for him to "lose slowly" versus NFL bull rush ... can do a better job rolling his hips to add explosion at contact ... doesn't consistently drive defenders in the run ... quick to climb, but inconsistent breakdown in space to lock down linebackers ... questionable position flexibility with 100 percent of his snaps coming at center in college.

SUMMARY: A two-year starter at Ohio State, Wypler was entrenched at center in head coach Ryan Day's zone/RPO-based offense. A high school offensive tackle, he made the move inside, where he was the starting center for all 25 of C.J. Stroud's college starts. (Stroud: "Luke is probably one of the smartest people I have ever been around ... the smartest O-lineman I've ever met in my life.") Wypler is a quick, efficient mover with outstanding football IQ and communication skills. However, he labors to sustain if not perfectly square, especially with defenders on his edge, and can be stacked when he isn't in position to break contact. Overall, Wypler is sawed-off and will be force-fed his vegetables as he adapts to NFL power, but his above-average athleticism and handwork help him stay in position. He is ideally suited for a zone team and projects as an NFL backup with potential to be more.

5. ALEX FORSYTH | Oregon 6037 | 303 lbs. | 6SR West Linn, Ore. (West Linn) 2/13/1999 (age 24.21) #78

BACKGROUND: Alexander "Alex" Forsyth (FOR-sythe), who is the youngest of two children, grew up in West Linn (south of Portland) and started playing basketball at age 5. He started playing football in third grade, mostly on the offensive and defensive lines. Through elementary and middle school, his football and basketball youth teams in West Linn were coached by his father (Steve). When Alex was in the eighth grade in December 2012, his father was one of two victims randomly shot and killed at the Clackamas Town Center (a mall 15 minutes from the family home) by a 22-year-old stranger with an assault rifle. Alex's mother (Carla) and sister (Katie Hughes) were both at the mall, but away from the incident. Forsyth enrolled at West Linn High School, where he was a three-year varsity letterman on the offensive line. He was the starting right tackle as a sophomore and earned honorable mention All-League honors. As a junior right tackle, Forsyth earned first team All-State and All-League honors in 2015. As a senior, he led West Linn to an undefeated 14-0 record and the 2016 6A state championship. Forsyth again earned first team All-State and All-League honors (also named the league's offensive lineman of the year) and played on defensive tackle, posting 20 tackles, 4.0 sacks and one forced fumble. He opened holes for running back Elijah Molden, who was Alex's best friend and played defensive back at Washington before he was selected in the third round (No. 100 overall) in the 2021 NFL Draft by the Tennessee Titans.

A three-star recruit, Forsyth was the No. 49 offensive tackle in the 2017 recruiting class and the No. 4 recruit in Oregon (two spots behind Molden). After his junior season, he started to collect several scholarship offers from programs like Colorado State, San Diego State and Oregon State. Growing up, Forsyth attended several Oregon games at Autzen Stadium with his father and dreamed of becoming a Duck. He considered Cal, Michigan and Washington, but he committed to the Ducks shortly after Oregon offered him the scholarship. Forsyth took advantage of the extra year of eligibility due to the pandemic and returned for a sixth season in 2022. He accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl, but had to withdraw because of a shoulder injury.

PRO DAY	6037	303	32 1/2	10	81	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	(position drills only – hamstring)

STRENGTHS: Balanced in his snap-and-step with adequate foot quickness ... his punch is patient and timed right to stay underneath defenders ... able to re-leverage his hands to anchor ... his attention to angles allows him to cut off the pursuit angle of defenders ... his lower-body flexibility and athleticism shows as a puller ... stays controlled on redirect blocks ... very smart and is the key man making line calls ... senior captain and was considered a pillar in the Oregon locker room (was named a finalist for the Jason Witten Collegiate Man of the Year Award) ... all 28 of his college starts came at center, but he also saw backup snaps at left guard, right guard and right tackle as an underclassman.

WEAKNESSES: Lean blocker and lacks girth in his lower body ... doesn't have the leg drive or body power to be a people-mover in the run game ... his hands are precise, but his punch isn't heavy or explosive ... average arm length lowers his margin for error ... inconsistent timing and breakdown at the second level to work off combos or pick off linebackers ... flagged six times for false starts in 2022 ... battled back spasms over the second half of the 2021 season, missing four games (October 2021); missed one game as a senior because of a shoulder injury (November 2022) and also pulled out of the Senior Bowl; limited at the scouting combine because of a hamstring injury (March 2023) ... already 24 on draft weekend.

SUMMARY: A three-year starter at Oregon, Forsyth was the lynchpin of the line in former offensive coordinator Kenny Dillingham's scheme. After cross-training between tackle and guard his first three seasons, he moved to center in 2020 and started 28 games there the last three seasons, not allowing a sack in 2022. Forsyth is a skillful player because of the efficiency of his movements and attention to fundamental details. He uses body angles and patient, independent hands to occupy defenders, but will struggle to uproot or create displacement. Overall, Forsyth must rely on his technique to make up for his lack of explosive power, but he stays light and centered in his movements with the intelligence and grit that teams covet at the position. He has NFL reserve potential.

GRADE: 5th Round

6. JUICE SCRUGGS | Penn State 6032 | 301 lbs. | 5SR Ashtabula, Ohio (Cathedral Prep) 1/19/2000 (age 23.27) #70

BACKGROUND: Frederick “Juice” Scruggs, who is the youngest of four boys, grew up in Ashtabula and looked to follow in his older brothers’ footsteps and play football. However, he exceeded the weight limit in the local youth league and instead played soccer at age 7. Scruggs discovered an indoor youth football league in Erie, Pa., and he and his mother (Karen) made the 50-mile drive for several years. At age 10, he started playing outdoor football and the family decided to move permanently to Erie so Juice could continue to play with the same players and coaches. Scruggs enrolled at Erie Cathedral Prep School, a Catholic all-boys school, where he was coached by Mike Mischler, who also coached him at the youth level. He received varsity reps as a freshman and played at offensive tackle and defensive tackle. After earning All-District and All-Conference honors as a sophomore, Scruggs started at left tackle and posted 31 tackles, 11.0 tackles for loss and 5.0 sacks as a junior, helping Cathedral Prep to a 14-0 record and the 2016 4A state championship. As a senior captain, he led the program to another undefeated season and the 2017 state title. Scruggs was named the 2017 4A lineman of the year and earned multiple All-State honors at left tackle. He also finished with 55 tackles, 11.0 tackles for loss, 4.0 sacks and one interception as a senior.

A four-star recruit, Scruggs was the No. 4 center in the 2018 recruiting class and the No. 8 recruit in Pennsylvania. After his sophomore season, Syracuse became his first scholarship offer, followed by Iowa State, Michigan State and several MAC schools. Several nationally ranked programs also took notice and reached out with offers, including Ohio State, Michigan and LSU. But Scruggs fell in love with Penn State after multiple visits to Happy Valley and he officially committed in August 2017 before the start of his senior season. He was part of the same 2018 recruiting class that produced several NFL players, including Micah Parsons, Jayson (now Odafe) Oweh, Jahan Dotson and Pat Freiermuth. Scruggs earned his nickname “Juice” from his father (Frederick) because he preferred juice over milk when he was a toddler. He graduated with his degree in hospitality management (December 2022). Scruggs accepted his invitation to the 2023 East-West Shrine Bowl.

(shuttle and position drills only – choice)

STRENGTHS: Trim 300-pounder with decent length and big hands ... anchors well in his pass sets because of his sink and body leverage ... his hands stay patient and compact, allowing him to maximize his power potential ... plays on high alert to read stunts/twists ... uses the strength in his arms and upper body to finish in the run game ... shows accurate timing release on combos and second-level blocks ... team captain and was the veteran voice in Penn State’s offensive line room ... started every game the last two seasons after serious injury issues as an underclassman ... functional starting experience at both center and right guard and started at left tackle in high school.

WEAKNESSES: Average movement skills, laterally and out in space ... his base gets too wide and limits his ability to redirect or adjust to gap quickness (see 2022 Ohio State tape) ... his recovery balance will be tested versus NFL size ... doesn’t have the drive power to routinely move defenders from lanes ... needs to tighten his second-level blocking angles ... medical feedback will be crucial after a serious car accident (March 2019); he was thrown from the car through the window and suffered a break of his L3 vertebra. Instead of career-threatening surgery, he opted to allow the injury to heal on its own and required a back brace for a year as he slowly rehabbed back to playing shape.

SUMMARY: A two-year starter at Penn State, Scruggs lined up primarily at center in offensive coordinator Mike Yurcich’s gap/zone scheme. After working his way back from his off-field injury in 2019 and 2020, he started primarily at guard as a junior before moving inside full-time to center as a senior captain. As a pass blocker, Scruggs plays with a low center to root his feet, slow down power rushers and continually reset to stay square. He shows functional movements in the run game, but will find it tough to match the quickness of NFL defensive linemen. Overall, Scruggs needs to overcome his average recovery skills, especially in the run game, but he has the necessary build, strength and football IQ to be a swing interior backup capable of fighting for starting reps.

7. OLU OLUWATIMI | Michigan 6024 | 309 lbs. | 6SR Upper Marlboro, Md. (DeMatha) 8/5/1999 (age 23.73) #55

BACKGROUND: Olusegun (Oh-lu-SHAH-noon) “Olu” Oluwatimi (Oh-lu-wa-TIH-mee), who is the youngest of six children, was born and raised in central Maryland to Nigeria-born parents (mother Yetunde and father Olufemi). Mostly due to financial reasons, he didn’t play sports until seventh grade, when he tried football. He initially began at defensive end before moving to the offensive line. Oluwatimi started his high school career at Archbishop Carroll, where he earned All-American honors as an offensive tackle on varsity. He transferred to DeMatha Catholic for his final three high school seasons and was teammates with several future FBS players, including Chase Young (Ohio State), DeMarrco Hellams (Alabama), Anthony McFarland (Maryland) and Nick Cross (Maryland). Oluwatimi played on both the offensive and defensive lines and earned All-Conference honors at center his junior and senior seasons. He helped lead DeMatha Catholic to an undefeated 12-0 record as a senior in 2016, the school’s fourth-straight WCAC championship.

A two-star recruit, Oluwatimi was the No. 160 offensive guard in the 2017 recruiting class and the No. 48 recruit in Maryland. He was underrecruited out of high school and received only two FBS-level offers, committing to Air Force over East Carolina. However, Oluwatimi decided Air Force wasn’t for him after one season and looked to transfer closer to home. A former high school teammate (Brenton Nelson) recruited him to Virginia and Oluwatimi joined Bronco Mendenhall’s program, initially as a walk-on before earning a scholarship. After four seasons with the Cavaliers, he earned his degree in economics and entered the transfer portal, landing at Michigan for his sixth season (enrolled in January 2022). His older brother (Oluwaseun) was a defensive lineman at Maryland (2016-20). His given first name, Olusegun, means “God is victorious” in the Yoruba language (he used the first name “Victor” in high school). Oluwatimi accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl.

PRO DAY	6023	312	33	8 5/8	79 1/4	-	-	-	-	-	4.68	7.58	- (stood on Combine runs, jumps, bench)

STRENGTHS: Outstanding processor and recall ... his eyes are in the right place, which keeps him from having to spend time searching ... urgent out of his stance with adequate short-area quickness to cut off rush lanes ... able to reposition his feet to stay centered and strengthen his anchor ... flashes the clamp strength to hunker down once he latches in pass pro ... doesn't overextend his hands when attempting to re-leverage ... has the makeup necessary to get every ounce of talent out of his body ... Michigan coaches say he was one of the best workers in the program ... logged 49 career starts and finished with 46 straight starts, often playing through minor injuries.

WEAKNESSES: Unimpressive build with smaller hands ... plays with lackluster power and doesn't displace defenders at contact ... struggles to stay balanced through contact ... inconsistent pad level creates leverage issues and heavy blockers can jar him ... lack of lateral quickness will make it tougher for him to consistently execute reach blocks ... slow to climb on combos or second-level duties ... wasn't a dominant finisher on film ... doesn't have functional playing experience at other positions in college and viewed as a "center only" by NFL scouts ... will turn 24 before his first NFL game.

SUMMARY: A one-year starter at Michigan, Oluwatimi was an ideal fit at center in head coach Jim Harbaugh's power-spread offense. After an All-American junior season at Virginia, he took his talents to Ann Arbor for the 2022 season and stocked his shelves with the Rimington Award (nation's top center), Outland Trophy (nation's top interior lineman) and the Joe Moore Award (nation's top offensive line). Oluwatimi shows a natural understanding of blocking angles and works hard to stay in between ball and defender. However, he doesn't create consistent spacing in the run game and lacks ideal range and sustain skills as a pass blocker. Overall, Oluwatimi doesn't have the position versatility, explosiveness or point of attack power that most NFL teams desire, but he is a cerebral, assignment-sound blocker with A-plus character. He is a potential rotational center in the NFL.

8. JARRETT PATTERSON | Notre Dame 6051 | 306 lbs. | SSR Laguna Hills, Calif. (Mission Viejo) 9/1/1999 (age 23.66) #55

BACKGROUND: Jarrett Patterson, who has an older brother, attended Mission Viejo High School (located midway between Los Angeles and San Diego). He was a four-year varsity letterman on the football team and played for legendary head coach Bob Johnson. Patterson helped the program to a 51-4 record over his prep career. He started primarily at right tackle as a sophomore and helped Mission Viejo to a 16-0 record and 2015 state championship. Patterson moved to left tackle as a junior and senior and led the program to a combined 23-2 record over his final two years. He earned back-to-back first team All-League and All-County honors and also earned first team All-State as a senior in 2017.

A four-star recruit, Patterson was the No. 25 offensive tackle in the 2018 recruiting class and the No. 45 recruit in California. He was the third-highest-ranked recruit for Mission Viejo in the 2018 class behind DB Olajiah Griffin (USC) and WR Austin Osborne (Washington). Patterson initially committed to Arizona State toward the end of his junior year, but reopened his recruitment six months later after head coach Todd Graham, offensive coordinator Billy Napier and offensive line coach Rob Sale were dismissed. He received almost 30 scholarship offers and strongly considered Michigan before narrowing his choice to Notre Dame and UCLA. He surprised his coaches when he chose the Irish over staying closer to home. His older brother (David) played offensive line at Fresno State (2013-17), which was the first program to offer Jarrett a scholarship. He accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl.

STRENGTHS: Passes the eye test with his size and build ... delivers a heavy-handed strike to grapple and control his man ... his base blocks stay wide while still being able to reposition his feet to combat power ... adequate mirroring skills with the awareness to pass off stunts ... the mental mistakes and penalties declined substantially between his junior and senior seasons ... sees things quickly to process angles, speeds and moves ... two-time team captain and buys into coaching messages ... plays hurt and has a high threshold for pain ... logged double-digit starts at both guard and center.

WEAKNESSES: Short-armed blocker, which downgrades the pop in his hands when attempting to reach ... tight-hipped and doesn't have the body control to smoothly recover ... sets tall and allows low rushers to out-leverage and drive him backward ... will misfire his hands and open his chest to defenders ... play strength is very average and he doesn't blow defenders off the ball ... loses his balance too quickly versus long-armed linemen ... not a rangy player ... the injuries piled up over his career: missed final four games of his sophomore season (and 2021 spring practices) because of a Lisfranc fracture in his left foot that required surgery (November 2020); suffered a torn pectoral muscle in his left shoulder during offseason weight training (March 2022) and then a sprained right foot (August 2022), which forced him to miss the 2022 season opener (and play hurt in several other games); suffered a minor hip injury during Senior Bowl week (February 2023) and didn't play in the game.

SUMMARY: A four-year starter at Notre Dame, Patterson played center and guard in former offensive coordinator Tommy Rees’ balanced scheme. A tackle-only in high school, he moved to center in South Bend before kicking out to left guard in 2022, when he learned under legendary NFL and college offensive line coach Harry Hiestand (his penalties dropped from 12 in 2021 to only three in 2022). A two-time team captain, Patterson does a nice job staying square with the active hands and awareness to keep defenders occupied. While his process is sound, he often loses balance after first contact or out in space. Overall, Patterson has alert eyes and strong, stubborn hands from contact to finish, but his lack of ideal length and athleticism showed on his college film and will be even more evident versus NFL competition. His guard-center experience will help his chances of earning an NFL reserve spot.

9. JOVAUGHN GWYN | South Carolina 6017 | 297 lbs. | 5SR Charlotte, N.C. (Harding) 3/18/1999 (age 24.11) #54

BACKGROUND: Jovaughn Gwyn grew up in the Charlotte area and originally attended Phillip O. Berry Academy of Technology, a magnet high school. He played on JV before moving up to varsity as a freshman. Gwyn played offensive tackle and defensive tackle as a sophomore, but suffered a broken foot in September 2015 and missed the remainder of the season. Before his junior season, his family moved and changed school districts and Gwyn enrolled at Harding University High School. He moved from tackle to guard and finished his junior season with 32 pancake blocks. After only five wins in 2016, Gwyn led Harding to a 14-1 record and the 2017 4A state championship as a senior. He earned first team All-State and All-American honors in his final season. Gwyn also lettered in track at Harding. His personal best in the shot put was 40 feet 2 inches and 142 feet 6 inches in the discus.

A four-star recruit, Gwyn was the No. 15 offensive guard in the 2018 recruiting class and the No. 13 recruit in North Carolina. He was the only offensive lineman from North Carolina to be invited to the 2017 Nike “The Opening” finals in Oregon. Gwyn collected an impressive offer sheet that included Duke, Kentucky, Louisville, Tennessee, Virginia Tech, West Virginia and Wisconsin. In the end, he committed to South Carolina over NC State and was the seventh-ranked recruit in the Gamecocks’ 2018 class (just behind cornerback Jaycee Horn and defensive end Kingsley Enagbare). Gwyn graduated with his degree in information science with a 3.4 GPA (May 2022). He accepted his invitation to the 2023 NFLPA Collegiate Bowl and as a late call-up to the Senior Bowl.

STRENGTHS: Broad-chested, sturdy build ... treats the weight room like a playground and that strength translates well to the field ... quick initial steps and plays with excellent reactionary movements to mirror ... fluid lateral range on short and long pulls ... quickly climbs to reach his cutoffs ... leverages his hands to frame up defenders and stay attached ... plays with a stout base and naturally low center of gravity to anchor at shallow depth ... had a disciplined upbringing and that is evident on and off the field (finalist for the William V. Campbell Trophy, which is known as the “academic Heisman”) ... two-time team captain and Strength and Conditioning Award winner as a senior ... durable and dependable, starting 47 straight games to finish his career.

WEAKNESSES: Stubby arms with an undersized, maxed-out body type ... his lack of length will limit his ability to control NFL-level nose tackles ... spends a lot of time hand-fighting without creating movement in the ground game ... tends to get grabby when he falls behind ... has room to improve his balance once he gets out in space ... was almost exclusively a right guard at South Carolina, with only 14 of his 3,195 offensive snaps coming at center ... missed the 2018 season because of a non-football foot injury from high school that required surgery (September 2018).

SUMMARY: A four-year starter at South Carolina, Gwyn lined up at right guard in former offensive coordinator Marcus Satterfield’s balanced scheme. After entering the starting lineup in Week 2 of the 2019 season, he started every game that followed (his 47 career starts rank No. 2 in school history), with 99 percent of his snaps coming at right guard. Gwyn displays above-average discipline and body control in the run game (pulls, seals, angle drives) and in his pass sets (protection slides and mirroring skills). He isn’t well-schooled or experienced snapping the football at center, but did a nice job at the new position during NFLPA Collegiate Bowl and Senior Bowl practices. Overall, Gwyn doesn’t have the desired length or power to match up with NFL size, but he plays with controlled steps and recovery balance to refit his leverage and ride the bull. He is a center-only NFL prospect best-suited in a zone scheme.

GRADE: 6th-7th Round

10. JAKE ANDREWS | Troy 6026 | 305 lbs. | 5SR Millbrook, Ala. (Stanhope Elmore) 11/11/1999 (age 23.46) #55

BACKGROUND: Jacob “Jake” Andrews, who has two sisters, was born in Montgomery, Ala., and was introduced to football by his father (Robert). He enrolled at Stanhope Elmore High School, where he was a four-year varsity lineman. Andrews played primarily on the defensive line over his first two seasons, but was also a key member of the offensive line as a sophomore left guard. He had his breakthrough season as a junior left guard and was named second team All-State and first team All-County and All-Metro in 2016. As a senior, Andrews posted 45 pancakes and again earned All-County and All-Metro honors. He started wrestling in the eighth grade and won the 6A state championship as a junior at Stanhope Elmore in the 285-pound division.

A three-star recruit, Andrews was the No. 105 offensive tackle in the 2018 recruiting class and the No. 37 recruit in Alabama. He was widely underrecruited, but Troy started recruiting him after his sophomore year and officially extended an offer in June 2016. Andrews verbally committed to head coach Neal Brown and stayed loyal to Troy after picking up a few more offers, including Georgia Tech, Illinois, Memphis, Navy, Purdue, Tulane, Western Kentucky and Yale. He was the No. 2-ranked recruit in Troy’s 2018 class. Andrews became engaged to his fiancée the summer before his senior year at Troy. He graduated with his degree in interdisciplinary studies (December 2022). Andrews accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl.

PRO DAY	6026	306	32 1/8	10 1/8	78 5/8	-	-	-	-	-	-	7.77	29 (stood on Combine runs, jumps, shuttle)

STRENGTHS: Compactly built with a solid base ... efficient slides and steps post-snap ... plays with functional lower-body flexibility and redirect skills ... highly detailed with his craft and pays close attention to his strike placement ... proficient in the run game with his clamp hands and stubborn drive skills ... well-developed strength with the ability to re-leverage himself when his feet are right (his wrestling background is an asset to his game) ... works well in tandem, especially on combinations for quick release to the second level ... mentally tough and competes with a noticeable edge ... durable and started all 37 games the last three seasons, seeing extensive action at both right guard and center.

WEAKNESSES: Short-armed and appeared to be carrying extra weight during the season ... can be rocked off balance by long, powerful noses ... plays quick off the ball, but not explosive in space or his recovery movements ... inconsistent second-level angles ... lack of length leaves him falling off blocks at times ... inconsistent locating defenders from distance and spends too much time searching ... must continue developing his processing skills at center, both pre- and post-snap ... faces a steep jump in competition compared to what he faced in 2022.

SUMMARY: A three-year starter at Troy, Andrews moved inside to center as a senior in offensive coordinator Joe Craddock's balanced scheme. After starting his sophomore and junior seasons at right guard, he welcomed the transition to center in 2022 because the experience would give him a “mental head start” for the next level. With his bent knees and low pads, Andrews works hard to stay centered and out-grapple the man in front of him mid-mirror. Still relatively new at the pivot, he must correct the mental errors before he is ready for next-level reps. Overall, Andrews’ length limitations and average movement skills will ding his effectiveness as a puncher and sustainer versus NFL linemen, but his natural leverage and stubborn hands give him a fighting chance. Despite his versatile experience, he might be relegated to center-only status by NFL teams.

SUMMARY: Alan (uh-LAWN) Ali (ah-LEE) grew up in Fort Worth and was a three-year starter at Timber Creek. He was an All-District left tackle as a senior. A three-star recruit, Ali hoped to stay close to home at TCU, but settled for SMU instead. After four seasons as a starter for the Mustangs, he transferred to the Horned Frogs (his childhood favorite team) for his sixth and final season. Ali’s addition at center stabilized TCU’s offensive line (allowed Steve Avila to move to guard) and was an unsung reason for its 2022 success. While fundamentally sound and smart, he has an average physical profile with limited displacement in the run game and struggles to recover versus shifty rushers. He has rare experience, with 60 career games played, and at least one start at each of the five offensive line positions. Overall, Ali is an effective positional blocker and attacks his job with a technical mind, but his average length, athleticism and power could make it tough for him to stand out.

SUMMARY: Matthew “Trevor” Downing was a four-year starter at Creston and earned All-State honors three times, primarily at right tackle. A three-star recruit, he was the No. 3 recruit in the state (one spot behind Tyler Linderbaum) and committed to Iowa State over Iowa. He started at left guard before moving to right guard and then to center, which is where he started the final 13 games of his career (he is on the short list of players in this draft with double-digit starts at all three interior line positions). With his passionate, physical play style, Downing embodies the Cyclones program and head coach Matt Campbell. He moves well laterally to position himself versus rushers in pass protection and when pulling in the run game. He was unable to work out at the Iowa State pro day because of a knee injury suffered at the NFLPA Bowl. Overall, Downing struggles combating length and power, but he displays the functional athleticism and football IQ that will interest zone teams.

SUMMARY: Christophany “Chris” Murray grew up in Fort Worth, where he started playing football. His family moved to southern California when he was age 13, and he enrolled at Mater Dei. As a senior right guard, he helped lead the program to a 15-0 record and 2017 state title. A four-star recruit, he signed with UCLA and immediately worked himself into the starting lineup. After two seasons, he transferred to Oklahoma and started 25 games at right guard over the last two seasons. Although he didn’t test very well, Murray is a functional mover on tape with the initial quickness and upward strike to get underneath defender’s pads. With his short arms, he will struggle to anchor versus long-levered rushers and doesn’t have the lower-body power to drive defenders from the spot. Overall, Murray won’t be considered by NFL teams that have strict size requirements, but he is a potential fit as a backup in a zone scheme that prioritizes quickness, timing and tenacity.

1. WILL ANDERSON JR. | Alabama 6034 | 253 lbs. | 3JR Hampton, Ga. (Dutchtown) 9/2/2001 (age 21.65) #31

BACKGROUND: William “Will” Anderson Jr., the youngest of six children (he has five older sisters), grew up in Hampton (30 miles south of Atlanta), where his parents (Tereon and Big Will) signed him up for several sports at age 4. He soon gravitated towards football, in which he played on the offensive and defensive lines. Anderson later moved to running back, and he also worked out with several defensive trainers, including Dwight Johnson (former Baylor defensive end and NFL player) and Marcus Howard (former Georgia defensive end and NFL player). Basketball was his second-best sport before he decided to focus on football as a freshman in high school. Anderson enrolled at Dutchtown High School, where he was expected to play on varsity as a freshman, but a knee injury sidelined him. Despite his desire to stay on offense as a running back, the coaches moved Anderson to pass rusher exclusively as a sophomore. As a junior and senior, he helped Dutchtown to a combined 23-3 record while separating himself as one of the top defensive players in the state. Anderson was named a U.S. Army All-American and first team All-State player as a senior with 37.0 tackles for loss and 22.0 sacks in 2019.

A five-star recruit, Anderson was the No. 1 weakside defensive end in the 2020 recruiting class (No. 17 nationally) and the No. 4 recruit in Georgia (behind TE Arik Gilbert, DE Myles Murphy and OT Broderick Jones). He grew up a Georgia fan, but Kirby Smart and the Georgia coaches had other priorities in recruiting and never offered him. (Anderson: “I grew up a Georgia fan and got recruited by them a little bit. I didn’t get too much attention from them, but it worked out well.”) Of his 40 scholarship offers, he narrowed down his final choice to Auburn, LSU, Tennessee and Georgia Tech. The Alabama coaches made Anderson a priority, and he committed the summer before his senior season and signed during the early-signing period. He was the second-highest ranked recruit in the Tide’s 2020 class behind only QB Bryce Young. Anderson has five older sisters (Shawnta, Shanice, Chyna, Endia and Teria), all of whom played sports. He earned his degree and graduated with a 3.0 GPA (December 2022). Anderson elected to skip his senior season and enter the 2023 NFL Draft.

STRENGTHS: Explosive first-step rusher with body twitch and closing burst ... owns a bendy, flexible frame to attack from a low position and strike blockers from different angles (the forklift is his “go-to” move, which he learned by studying Nick Bosa) ... displays the hip flexibility and body control to maneuver through tight spaces ... advanced block reader with the hands and timing to free himself as a pass rusher ... efficient block splitter and doesn’t have an off-hand ... skilled run defender with his ability to stack, lock out and shed to make stops in his area ... plays with impressive contact balance to leverage and dispose of blockers ... elite chase-down skills when teams run away from him ... flips a switch on the field and was known as the “Terminator” in the Alabama program, because of his competitive drive (head coach Nick Saban: “He’s the kind of person that’s not satisfied with where he is. ... I love working with this guy, because he sets a great example for everybody else on the team.”) ... one of only seven players to be voted a two-time team captain under Saban ... blocked a field goal in 2022 and returned his only career interception 25 yards for a touchdown ... highly decorated and joined Manti Te’o as just the second player to sweep the Nagurski Trophy, Lombardi Award, Bednarik Award and Lott IMPACT Trophy in the same season ... became the first player named SEC Defensive Player of the Year in back-to-back seasons ... outstanding backfield production in his career ... durable in college and started every game the past three seasons.

WEAKNESSES: Lean-framed and lacks ideal body mass ... leaves production on the field with his overaggressive tendencies ... needs to finish tackles when he gets his hands on the ball carrier ... missed tackles at an alarming rate (19.3 percent in his career), including a career-high 14 in 2022 ... too willing to leave his feet and spends too much time on the ground ... guilty of predetermining his rush moves and counters ... flagged nine times, including four offsides penalties, in 2022 (only three combined penalties his first two seasons) ... production and consistency declined as a junior compared to his remarkable sophomore season.

SUMMARY: A three-year starter at Alabama, Anderson played the “Jack” linebacker position in Nick Saban’s hybrid scheme, standing up on the edge and rushing with his hand on the ground (lined up everywhere between the 4i and seven-technique). After becoming the first true freshman to start at linebacker under Saban, Anderson became the first player in Alabama history (and 41st in college football history) to twice earn unanimous All-America honors, and he finished No. 2 in school history (behind Derrick Thomas) in career tackles for loss (62.0) and sacks (34.5). Anderson has an explosive get-off as a pass rusher to bend/dip the edge or maneuver tight spaces with his body flexibility and instinctive arsenal of rush moves. As a run defender, he is quick to diagnose, fill and use his advanced handwork and lateral agility to shed blocks, although he must become a better finisher as a tackler. Overall, Anderson doesn’t have ideal body mass and must improve his on-field discipline, but he is equally dynamic as a pass rusher and run defender because of his twitchy movements, skilled hands and overall play speed. He is a scheme-proof game-wrecker with Pro Bowl potential.

GRADE: 1st Round (No. 2 overall)

2. TYREE WILSON | Texas Tech 6055 | 271 lbs. | 5SR Henderson, Texas (West Rusk) 5/20/2000 (age 22.94) #19

BACKGROUND: Tyree Wilson, who has three sisters, was born in Anchorage, Alaska before moving to east Texas in 2002 when he was age 2. He still has several family members (grandma, aunts, uncles, cousins) that live in Alaska. Wilson attended West Rusk High School in New London, where he was a three-year letterman as a tight end and edge rusher. As a sophomore, he recorded 52 tackles, 8.0 tackles for loss and 2.5 sacks. Wilson earned first team All-District as a junior with 74 tackles, 13.0 tackles for loss, 4.0 sacks and one pick-six interception. He had his best season as a senior and was named district Defensive MVP and second team All-State. He led West Rusk to a 10-win season with 126 tackles, 38.0 tackles for loss and five forced fumbles. Wilson finished his prep career with 252 tackles and 59.0 tackles for loss. He also lettered in track (relays and throws) and set a personal best in the shot put (36 feet 1 inch).

A three-star recruit, Wilson was the No. 23 weakside defensive end in the 2018 recruiting class and the No. 68 recruit in Texas. The offers started to trickle in after his junior season in February 2017, starting with Louisiana and followed by Washington State. Wilson decided to commit to head coach Mike Leach and the Cougars in March 2017 before decommitting a few months later in June as his offer sheet continued to fill up. That summer, he put together a final six of Houston, Mississippi State, Oklahoma State, SMU, TCU and Texas A&M, and he committed to Kevin Sumlin and the Aggies. After Sumlin was fired as head coach, several schools made a late push for Wilson, including Arkansas, Florida and Texas. But Wilson signed with Texas A&M as part of Jimbo Fisher’s first recruiting class in College Station. After two seasons with the Aggies, he felt A&M “wasn’t for him” and entered the transfer portal. He developed a relationship with the coaches at Texas Tech, joined the football team in August 2020 and was granted an NCAA waiver for immediate eligibility. He was technically a non-scholarship player during the 2020 season and was part of the Red Raiders’ 2021 recruiting class. His mother (Tiffany Williams) was a college athlete and his father (Jason) lives in the Seattle area. Tyree’s older sister (Tierra) lettered in track at Stephen F. Austin (2016-18) with personal bests in the discus (143-10), hammer (174-10) and weight throw (57-7.75). Wilson graduated with his degree in university studies and is working on his master’s in interdisciplinary studies. He accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl but pulled out because of his right foot injury.

STRENGTHS: Looks like a yoked-up Captain America with his muscular, broad-shouldered frame ... owns rare arm length and wingspan to affect the game in ways most edge rushers can't ... body quickness, natural strength and shock in his hands help him easily convert speed to power ... has added several effective moves to counter blockers, including a cross-rip, swipe-rip and arm-over (see: 2022 NC State or TCU tapes) ... will use a shoulder shimmy to access multiple gaps as a downhill rusher ... surprises ball carriers with his closing acceleration when he has a lane, going from A to B quickly with his strong strides ... quick, physical hands help him strain and dispose of blockers in the run game ... received the triple-team treatment at times from blockers because of his game-wrecking ability ... massive tackle radius helps him make vicious clothesline stops in the backfield ... takes sharp angles to chase down screens and backside runs ... grew into a confident leader for the Red Raiders and was "extremely well respected by his teammates," according to defensive coordinator Tim DeRuyter ... production improved each season with career bests as a senior (despite missing the final three games), including 5.0 pressures per game, which ranked No. 6 in the FBS (tied with Will Anderson Jr.).

WEAKNESSES: Comes off the ball upright, tall and late ... can be washed or moved off his spot by doubles and his run defense lack consistency ... guilty of false stepping or overcommitting his balance out in front, giving blockers the chance to snatch/pull him ... not a loose pass rusher who will bend the edge versus NFL offensive tackles ... pass-rush sequencing needs continued coaching ... struggles to find passing lanes at the line of scrimmage (zero career batted passes is a surprising number for a player with his length) ... suffered a season-ending right foot injury (November 2022) as a senior and underwent surgery (including a screw being inserted), which sidelined him for the Senior Bowl and scouting combine.

SUMMARY: A three-year starter at Texas Tech, Wilson played field-side edge rusher in defensive coordinator Tim DeRuyter's 3-3-5 base scheme and reduced inside as a 4i/4 technique or dropped into space. After two years at Texas A&M, he transferred to Lubbock and led Texas Tech in tackles for loss and sacks his junior and senior seasons (his 22.3 percent pass-rush win rate ranked top 10 in the FBS in 2022). Big, long and strong, Wilson plays with linear explosion and power to get blockers moving in reverse. In the run game, he needs continued refinement but uses his long arms to lock out and separate, and he displays impressive tackling range because of his wingspan and chase effort. Overall, Wilson plays too upright and needs to become craftier and more strategic in his pass rush, but his length, speed and raw power are outstanding foundational traits. His ascending tools are ripe for development, and he has Pro Bowl potential. He should be the first Texas Tech defender ever drafted in the top 20 picks.

GRADE: 1st Round (No. 8 overall)

3. LUKAS VAN NESS | Iowa 6050 | 272 lbs. | 350 Barrington, Ill. (Barrington) 7/6/2001 (age 21.81) #91

BACKGROUND: Lukas Van Ness, who is one of four children, was raised in the Chicago suburbs and started playing hockey (his "first love") at age 6. He played for the Barrington Redwings, Yellowjackets and Northwest Chargers, and hockey was his sole focus until his mom (Leanna) pushed him to try football in eighth grade. Van Ness attended Barrington High School, where he started to take football seriously as a freshman and was a standout on the JV team as a sophomore. He joined the varsity team as a junior defensive lineman and helped lead Barrington to a seven-win season and spot in the playoffs. As a senior captain, Van Ness didn't leave the field and played on offense (right guard), defense (defensive end) and special teams. He was named the 2019 Conference Defensive Player of the Year and earned first team All-State and All-Area honors with 67 tackles, 8.0 tackles for loss, 5.0 sacks, one forced fumble and a blocked punt. Van Ness also continued playing hockey through high school and was a three-year letterman as a defender (led the league in penalties). He led Barrington to the school's first Final Four appearance at the 2019-20 state championships.

A three-star recruit, Van Ness was the No. 52 strongside defensive end in the 2020 recruiting class and the No. 21 recruit in Illinois. He attended recruiting camps after his junior season and the offers started pouring in, including several from Ivy League programs (Brown, Columbia, Cornell, Dartmouth, Princeton, Yale). Van Ness mulled offers from Illinois, Kansas State and the military academies, but he had his eyes on Iowa. His parents attended Iowa State, but his father (Jason) grew up a Hawkeyes fan (much of his side of the family still resides in Iowa), and he passed his rooting interests on to Lukas as the family attended Iowa football games while Lukas was growing up (Lukas' older sister also enrolled at Iowa). After he attended a recruiting camp in Iowa City in June 2019, Van Ness received an offer from head coach Kirk Ferentz and committed a few days later. He was the No. 17-ranked recruit in Iowa's 2020 class. Van Ness is currently dating the younger sister (Frankie) of Chicago Bears tight end Cole Kmet. He elected to skip his final two seasons of eligibility and enter the 2023 NFL Draft.

STRENGTHS: Owns a long, stout frame with an accessible power base ... explodes out of his stance to shoot gaps and work half-a-man ... naturally strong and puts his arm length to use as a bull rusher to overpower through the numbers ... flashes ascending handwork with his chop/club/rip moves ... initial twitch helps him threaten the corner on the outside or out-quick interior blockers, creating mismatches when he reduces ... sets a physical edge and torques his body to stay rooted and out-angle blockers ... plays hard and gives chase on plays away from him ... strikes through ball carriers as a tackler and has the grip strength to finish even when flying by ... earned the coach's 2022 Appreciation Award on special teams, blocking two punts versus Iowa State ... worked hard to fill out his frame, adding 35 pounds of muscle since he signed at 240 pounds ... had zero career starts in college but played starter-level snaps with the production of a full-time starter ... experienced at both defensive tackle and edge rusher.

WEAKNESSES: His youth is evident, as he often mistimes his hands or rush moves ... competes with a touch of insanity, which leaves him out of control at times, and needs to tighten things up ... playing with better balance in pursuit will help him as a finisher and clean up missed tackles ... relies more on his motor than his instincts right now ... can do a better job anticipating set points for quicker wins ... will negate his anchor when his pads get upright ... has some rigidity to his movements when he doesn't sink but still gets where he is going quickly.

SUMMARY: Coming off the bench at Iowa, Van Ness was primarily an edge rusher in defensive coordinator Phil Parker's four-man front, but he also saw significant snaps inside over the B-gap. The Iowa coaches reward seniority, so John Waggoner and Joe Evans started at defensive end last season, but Van Ness had more defensive snaps than either and led the Hawkeyes in tackles for loss and sacks. Regardless of alignment, Van Ness has high-end tools with his length and play strength, which allow him to wear down blockers as a pass rusher or stack, locate and play off blocks in the run game. A hockey player most of his life, he credits his time on the ice for developing his balance, urgent play style and competitive toughness. Overall, Van Ness needs coached up with his pass-rush construction and overall pacing, but he is an ascending player and competes like a grizzly bear with his fierce power and explosive twitch. He has the upside of an impactful NFL starter with inside/outside versatility, regardless of scheme.

4.

NOLAN SMITH | Georgia

6022 | 238 lbs. | 4SR

Savannah, Ga. (IMG Academy)

BACKGROUND: Nolan Smith was born and raised in Savannah, Ga. and started playing football at age 4 for the Westside Whippers at the youth level. He attended Calvary Day School, where he emerged as one of the top football players in the area while in middle school. He also played baseball (his second-favorite sport) as a centerfielder and second baseman. Smith played on varsity as a freshman and sophomore at Calvary, starring as a running back and defensive lineman. As a sophomore, he led the team with 712 rushing yards and 12 touchdowns and had 75 tackles, 12.0 sacks and three forced fumbles on defense to earn first team All-State honors. Despite already receiving double-digit scholarship offers, Smith wanted to face better competition and transferred to IMG Academy in Bradenton, Fla. (more than five hours from his hometown) in January 2017. There, he competed for playing time with other top-ranked defensive linemen like Xavier Thomas (Clemson) and faced offensive tackle Evan Neal (New York Giants) in practice. As a junior, he posted 41 tackles, 10.0 tackles for loss, 4.0 sacks, one forced fumble and one interception. As a senior, Smith finished with 47 tackles, 14.5 tackles for loss and 6.5 sacks and earned first team All-America honors. He also lettered in baseball while at Calvary.

A five-star recruit, Smith was the No. 1 weakside defensive end in the 2019 recruiting class and the No. 1 recruit nationally, ahead of Kayvon Thibodeaux at No. 2 and Derek Stingley Jr. at No. 3. As a freshman at Calvary Day, he received his first scholarship offer, from Georgia. Soon after, Alabama, Clemson and numerous other programs offered him. However, Smith committed early to the Bulldogs and stayed faithful to his home school, enrolling early in January 2019. Smith bypassed the 2022 NFL Draft to return for his senior year and is on track to become the first in his family to graduate college. He accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl but was unable to participate because of his pectoral injury.

PRO DAY	6026	240	32 1/2	9 1/8	81 3/8	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	(position drills only – choice)

STRENGTHS: Dynamic athlete with loose, flexible movements (his 1.52 10-yard split, 4.39 40-yard dash and 41.5-inch vertical were No. 1 among front-seven defenders at the combine) ... twitchy redirect skills to sharply change his pursuit angles ... able to burst and close in any direction on read plays ... rushes with the first-step quickness to threaten the edge or slip through gaps ... agile footwork to cross the face of blockers and defend multiple gaps ... powerful hands to hammer the run game and play through contact ... rangy pursuit player to cut off playside and backside lanes ... relentless play motor and has unlimited energy on and off the field ... a joyful extrovert by nature but also holds everyone accountable (Channing Tindall: "Nolan is the most vocal person in our locker room. ... He's the energy of the defense.") ... has the type of work ethic and team-first mentality that are catnip for coaches (Smith: "It's not about playing for NIL deals or to go viral. ... It's about playing for the guy next to you and being able to push with him through tough situations.") ... was a regular on kick return and punt return coverages.

WEAKNESSES: Lean-framed athlete with mediocre length ... struggled to maintain his weight above 240 pounds at Georgia ... inconsistent pass-rush plan ... loves to play physical and rush down the middle of blockers instead of attacking the shoulders ... doesn't have a heavy anchor and can be moved by blockers when he gets narrow ... aggressive flow will lead to occasional missed tackles ... has experience spot dropping but needs to be quicker digesting route combinations ... missed the second half of the 2022 season and part of the draft process after suffering a torn right pectoral (October 2022), which required surgery; suffered a hyperextended left elbow (November 2021) but missed only one game as a junior ... very average production for a four-year player with his talent.

SUMMARY: A two-year starter at Georgia, Smith played the "Jack" linebacker position in head coach Kirby Smart's 3-3-5 base scheme. The former No. 1 overall recruit in the 2019 class, he never reached 4.0 sacks in any of his four seasons in Athens. However, he was often asked to read or drop, and his sack production is a misleading indicator of his impact. With his range and physicality, Smith can scrape and stack blocks in the run game and does his best work on read plays because of his quick-twitch reaction burst. His dynamic get-off and loose movements make him slippery as a pass rusher, but his hand exchange lacks polish at the top of the rush. Overall, Smith must improve his pass-rush plan and overall efficiency, but he is an explosive, flexible athlete with powerful hands and above-average football character. He has the diverse tools to be a well-rounded edge rusher, ideally suited for a 3-4 base scheme.

GRADE: 1st Round (No. 11 overall)

5. MYLES MURPHY | Clemson

6046 | 268 lbs. | 3JR

Marietta, Ga. (Hillgrove)

#98

BACKGROUND: Myles Murphy, the youngest of two boys, was born and raised in Marietta, just northwest of Atlanta. He grew up playing baseball, basketball and football, but baseball was his original go-to sport. As well as playing outfield and first base, Murphy was a left-handed pitcher and threw 90 MPH at age 14. He attended Hillgrove High School (same alma mater as several active NFL players, including the Miami Dolphins’ Bradley Chubb and Jacksonville Jaguars’ Evan Engram), where he was a varsity starter as a freshman. As a junior, Murphy posted 55 tackles, 16.0 tackles for loss and 7.0 sacks, helping Hillgrove to a school-record 12 wins. As a senior, he again led Hillgrove to the playoffs and was named a U.S. Army All-American, finishing the 2019 season with 53 tackles, 19.0 tackles for loss, 10.5 sacks and a blocked kick. Murphy continued playing baseball and basketball through his sophomore year in high school.

A five-star recruit, Murphy was the No. 1 strongside defensive end in the 2020 recruiting class and the No. 2 recruit in Georgia (behind tight end Arik Gilbert and two spots ahead of edge rusher Will Anderson). He was ranked as the No. 7 recruit overall and the No. 4 defensive recruit in the country behind only defensive tackle Bryan Bresee, cornerback Kelee Ringo and linebacker Justin Flowe. Murphy had no shortage of college suitors and received his first major offers from Georgia and Auburn as a sophomore, followed shortly by Alabama, Florida, Michigan and Ohio State. He grew up a Crimson Tide fan but didn’t feel at home in Tuscaloosa and narrowed down his final choice to Auburn, Clemson and Georgia (his mother’s alma mater). Murphy visited Clemson double-digit times, before he committed in May 2019 (his main recruiter was Tigers defensive ends coach Lemanski Hall). He enrolled early in January 2020 with plans to major in construction science and management (he wants to become an architect for major structures, including sports stadiums). His father (Willard) played running back and was originally committed to Florida State, but the offer was withdrawn after he suffered a knee injury his senior year in high school. Willard earned a scholarship from Tennessee-Chattanooga as a linebacker (1980-83) and later played for the Birmingham Stallions in the USFL. Myles’ older brother (Max), who also played at Hillgrove, was a defensive lineman at Worcester Poly Institute (2016-19). Murphy opted out of the 2022 bowl game and skipped his senior season to enter the 2023 NFL Draft.

STRENGTHS: Outstanding size, length and build ... fires upfield as a pass rusher with get-off burst and arc speed ... plays balanced on his feet to knife through gaps or drive on the quarterback when stunts create rush lanes ... gets the tackle twisted when he widens and times his long-arm move correctly ... big, powerful hands to snatch blockers or create knockback ... weight-room numbers (405-pound max bench press, 345-pound max power clean) translate to the field ... aggressive run defender with the strength to hold the point of attack and spill outside runs ... not intimidated by double teams ... has the chase effort to close and make tackles away from the line of scrimmage ... physical tackler with the strength in his hands to dislodge the football (six forced fumbles) or ground ball carriers with his fingertips ... owns a grounded personality and doesn’t want to disappoint his coaches ... played in 38 straight games before opting out of the bowl game ... dependable backfield production with 37.0 tackles for loss in 38 career games.

WEAKNESSES: Undeveloped rush setup ... doesn’t show an array of moves or counters, relying more on burst and power ... shows off an aggressive bull rush and long-arm move but struggles to work off of that ... finds himself too far upfield and not a natural hip flipper at the top of his rush ... inconsistent eyes and tends to overthink once engaged, leaving him late to react ... gets upright in the run game and can be moved by angle blocks ... reserved by nature and must develop more of a killer instinct ... mediocre pressure and sack numbers relative to his talent (finished third on the team with 34 pressures in 2022) ... sidelined for the combine with a left hamstring injury (March 2023).

SUMMARY: A three-year starter at Clemson, Murphy lined up at right defensive end in defensive coordinator Wes Goodwin’s multiple fronts but lined up everywhere from 4i or three-technique all the way out to wide nine-technique. A former top 10 high school recruit nationally, he made an immediate impact with the Tigers and posted double-digit tackles for loss each of his three seasons in college. Straight out of central casting with his frame, length and low body fat (13.5 percent in 2022), Murphy fires upfield and quickly gets on blocks, but there is more hesitation than you want to see once he’s engaged. Although he currently lacks diversity in his pass-rush moves/counters, his natural combination of burst, strength and violent hands will overwhelm blockers and allow him to affect the backfield rhythm in different ways. Overall, Murphy lacks efficient move-to-move transitions as a pass rusher, but he is naturally gifted with the explosive traits, play speed and length to be a disruptive leverage-power rusher in the NFL. He projects as a base end in a four-man front with the floor of an NFL starter.

GRADE: 1st-2nd Round (No. 21 overall)

6. BJ OJULARI | LSU

6023 | 248 lbs. | 3JR

Marietta, Ga. (Marietta)

#18

BACKGROUND: Jamiu Bolaji “BJ” Ojulari (O-juh-lar-ee), the third of four children, was born in the Atlanta area to Nigerian parents. He played multiple sports growing up but gravitated towards football at a young age. After playing at the youth level and through middle school, he enrolled at Marietta High School, where he was a four-year letterman and played both ways on offense (right tackle) and defensive (linebacker and defensive end). After starting immediately as a true freshman, Ojulari emerged as one of the best players in the state with 101 tackles, 28.0 tackles for loss, 9.0 sacks and a forced fumble as a sophomore. As a junior, he earned All-State honors with 104 tackles, 23.0 tackles for loss, 5.0 sacks and two forced fumbles. As a senior, Ojulari led Marietta to a 14-2 record and the 2019 Class 7A state championship, posting a school-record 19.0 sacks. He finished his senior season with 130 tackles, 60.0 tackles for loss and a forced fumble. Ojulari finished his prep career with a school-record 36.0 sacks, adding 341 total tackles (more than 100 of those were tackles for loss).

A four-star recruit, Ojulari was the No. 6 weakside defensive end in the 2020 recruiting class and the No. 12 recruit in Georgia (third-ranked defensive end in the state behind Myles Murphy and Will Anderson Jr.). He was the second highest-ranked recruit from Marietta in the 2020 class behind tight end Arik Gilbert. Ojulari collected several high-profile offers, including Alabama, Clemson, Michigan and Stanford. Wanting to blaze his own path, he decided against joining his older brother at Georgia and originally committed to Tennessee prior to his senior year in August 2019. However, Ojulari decided to decommit and flip to LSU a few months later, joining Gilbert, his high school teammate. His maternal grandfather (Prince Twins Seven-Seven), who passed away from a stroke in 2011, was a Nigerian prince (descendent of an Ibadan king) and traveled the world as an accomplished African artist. BJ’s mother (Bolanle Seven-Seven) and father (Monsuru Ojulari) both were born in Ibadan (third-largest city in Nigeria) but didn’t meet until 1996 in Philadelphia. Monsuru moved to the United States in 1990 for work. Bolanle, who graduated from art school in Nigeria, would often travel with her father and show her work, including an exhibit in Philadelphia, where she decided to stay. Monsuru and Bolanle were married and settled down in the Atlanta area. BJ's older brother (Azeez) was a pass rusher at Georgia and drafted in the second round (No. 50 overall) of the 2021 NFL Draft by the New York Giants. Ojulari opted out of Georgia's 2022 bowl game and elected to skip his senior season to enter the 2023 NFL Draft.

STRENGTHS: Impressive combination of get-off quickness and closing burst ... able to dip or ghost blockers while at full speed ... showcases his explosive speed on outside tracks, stunts or backside chases ... attacks with a stab or two-hand strike from low position to jar blockers from their spot ... flashes the hand violence to make blockers uncomfortable and relies on his finesse with a variety of speed/slap/swipe moves ... effort is fantastic, frequently making plays on the opposite side of the field from where he started ... sees through blocks as a run defender and uses aggressive hands to stay detached and string out runs ... understands pursuit angles and stays balanced through congestion ... athletic in space to spy, spot drop or mirror backs/tight ends ... voted a team captain in 2022 ... high school and college coaches unanimously rave about the way he was raised and carries himself (NFL scout: "Best character guy in my area. ... He'll be a great culture fit wherever he ends up.") ... consistent backfield production with 20.0 tackles for loss and 103 quarterback pressures over 24 games the past two seasons.

WEAKNESSES: Slightly undersized frame with mediocre length and limited growth potential ... can be covered up and physically jostled in the run game ... doesn't play with power in his lower half as an edge setter ... inconsistent tapping into his power as a pass rusher ... refined blocking hands will disrupt the rhythm at the top of his rush ... medicals will be important after he missed two games as a junior with a nagging patella injury in his left knee (September 2022); wasn't able to do a full workout pre-draft due to a nagging hamstring injury.

SUMMARY: A two-year starter at LSU, Ojulari played the JACK (boundary) edge position in defensive coordinator Matt House's four-man front, both standing up and rushing with his hand on the ground. Although he didn't produce overwhelming sack numbers, he consistently found the backfield on tape and combined for 103 pressures (4.3 per game) over the last two seasons (only two FBS player had more in that span). Similar to his older brother, Ojulari is quick, fast and bendy from anywhere on the field, closing with burst or creating movement at contact. He has a collection of pass-rush moves to frame his attack in different ways (his "go-to" is a long-arm that sets up his ghost move), but he can be covered up and give up the edge if he doesn't win with quickness. Overall, Ojulari doesn't have ideal size for every scheme, but he offers a dynamic pursuit package with his explosive traits and unrelenting effort. He offers scheme versatility as an NFL starter, projecting best as a stand-up edge rusher for an odd-front defense.

GRADE: 1st-2nd Round (No. 33 overall)

7. FELIX ANUDIKE-UZOMAH | Kansas St. 6031 | 255 lbs. | 3JR Kansas City, Mo. (Lee's Summit) 1/24/2002 (age 21.26) #91

BACKGROUND: Felix Anudike-Uzomah (ann-you-DEE-kay you-ZAH-mah), who is one of four children, was born and raised in Kansas City. He attended Lee's Summit High School, where he was a three-year letterman as a defensive end and tight end/wide receiver. Anudike-Uzomah had his breakout season as a sophomore with 61 tackles, 20.0 tackles for loss, 3.0 sacks and one forced fumble, earning All-District honors. As a junior, he took home second team All-State honors with 77 tackles, 20.0 tackles for loss, 5.0 sacks and three forced fumbles, leading Lee's Summit to eight wins and a playoff appearance. Anudike-Uzomah was named first team All-State as a senior with 46 tackles, 15.0 tackles for loss and 5.0 sacks. He finished his prep career with 184 tackles, 55.0 tackles for loss and 13.0 sacks. Anudike-Uzomah also lettered in basketball.

A three-star recruit out, Anudike-Uzomah was the No. 114 weakside defensive end in the 2020 recruiting class and the No. 42 recruit in Missouri. Because of growth-potential concerns with his 215-pound frame, he went vastly overlooked as a recruit. Anudike-Uzomah originally committed to North Dakota State during his senior year, but his offer was pulled when he chose to be an early commit. He had an offer from Bowling Green but didn't want to go that far from home, and he considered giving up football after high school to enroll at Missouri as a student. Two days before the early signing day, Kansas State reached out with a scholarship and Anudike-Uzomah committed on the spot. Thinking he would need time to add weight, the Wildcats' coaches signed him as a blueshirt, meaning he was technically a walk-on and his scholarship wouldn't be counted until the 2021 group. Anudike-Uzomah elected to skip his senior season and enter the 2023 NFL Draft.

STRENGTHS: Well-built and transformed his body since arriving in college as a lean 220-pounder ... flashes power in his hands/arms/shoulders to press blockers off him and find the football ... aggressively attacks the corner with a head of steam and joint flexibility mid-rush ... effective use of stabs (and ghost stabs) to pry open an outside rush lane ... motor always runs hot and consistently keeps his pursuit alive ... alert and sees through blocks to slam the door on scrambling quarterbacks ... shows the awareness to feel the screen, redirect and chase down ... physical hands as a tackler, which also helps him dislodge the football (eight forced fumbles over the last two seasons) ... humble player and competes with the "nobody believes in me" chip on his shoulder ... played in every game the past two seasons ... outstanding production, leading the team in sacks, tackles for loss and forced fumbles each of the last two seasons.

WEAKNESSES: Short-striding rusher with only average get-off and lateral quickness ... stiff at the top of his rush and struggles to flip his hips/shoulders around the corner (physical offensive tackles can toss him) ... physical, strong hands, but his secondary moves and counters aren’t as thought out as his initial attack ... speed-to-power has inconsistent results, often stalling out because of inconsistent leverage ... average base strength in the run game, especially versus doubles, and will lose edge contain ... inexperienced dropping into coverage to defend quick routes ... underwent minor offseason knee surgery (January 2022) and missed spring practice; didn’t work out at the combine because of a right foot injury (March 2023).

SUMMARY: A two-year starter at Kansas State, Anudike-Uzomah was a right end and lined up on the outside shoulder of the tackle in defensive coordinator Joe Klanderman’s 3-3-5 scheme. Despite Kansas State being his only Power 5 offer out of high school (as a blueshirt), he became one of the most decorated defenders in school history as an All-American and the 2022 Big 12 Defensive Player of the Year (25.5 tackles for loss, 19.5 sacks, eight forced fumbles over the last two seasons). Anudike-Uzomah mashes the accelerator with strength in his joints to angle his body and pry open rush lanes with his power. He can shock blockers at contact, but his refinement is a work in progress, and he is inconsistent as an edge setter versus the run. Overall, Anudike-Uzomah has only average get-off and arc speed as a rusher and must become more consistent in the run game, but he plays hard and mixes up his rush to keep his pursuit alive, which is what he does best. He projects as a physical, face-up power rusher with the impact potential to compete for an NFL starting role as a rookie.

8. WILL MCDONALD IV | Iowa State 6035 | 239 lbs. | SSR Pewaukee, Wis. (Waukesha North) 6/4/1999 (age 23.90) #9

BACKGROUND: Wilbert “Will” McDonald IV grew up in Milwaukee, where he often played basketball in the neighborhood, but sports weren’t part of his childhood. He joined the basketball team in eighth grade and made the varsity team at Milwaukee Pulaski High School as a freshman. His family left Milwaukee after his freshman year with his mother moving to Waukesha (just outside of Milwaukee) and his father moving to Arizona. McDonald stayed with his mother and chose to enroll at Waukesha North High School, because of their basketball program. He became a varsity starter midway through his sophomore year and finished second on the team with 12.1 points per game. When he wasn’t playing basketball, McDonald was either at home or working (at McDonald’s) to help pay bills, until the football coaches convinced him to try a new sport despite McDonald having zero football experience or knowledge (he didn’t follow or watch football on TV). He joined the team as a junior in 2016 and finished his first year playing football with 69 tackles, 20.5 tackles for loss and 11.5 sacks to earn All-Region honors. As a senior, McDonald moved in with his head coach (Matt Harris), because his mother moved back to Milwaukee. He earned first team All-State in 2017 with 61 tackles, 20.0 tackles for loss and 12.0 sacks while adding two touchdown catches on offense. On the basketball court, he was named the league’s Player of the Year as a senior, averaging 18.3 points and 12.8 rebounds per game. McDonald also lettered in baseball and track. He won the state discus title (179 feet 9 inches) as a senior and finished third in the high jump (6-4). McDonald also set personal bests in the 110-meter hurdles (15.53 second), long jump (22-4) and shot put (47-1.25).

A three-star recruit, McDonald was the No. 47 weakside defensive end in the 2018 recruiting class and the No. 3 recruit in Wisconsin. Playing football for the first time in his life as a junior, he was unknown in the recruiting world, but that quickly changed once schools like Wisconsin invited him for official visits. McDonald developed a relationship with Matt Campbell and committed to Iowa State, shutting down his recruitment despite continued interest from other schools. His mother (Chandra Williams) was diagnosed with breast cancer in 2008 and, thankfully, was declared cancer-free in 2012. McDonald accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl.

PRO DAY	6042	245	34 1/2	9	82 3/8	4.69	2.65	1.63	35 1/2	-	4.22	6.85	-	(no bench press – left shoulder)

STRENGTHS: Owns a stretched-out, athletic frame with impressive length ... twitchy mover and quickly gains ground because of his get-off and long-striding acceleration ... rushes with natural bend and ankle/joint flexibility ... uses his lateral agility to shake blockers and stay detached ... loose-hipped to wrap blockers or unleash spin moves ... quality bull-rush potential with additional strength and coaching ... incredible tackle radius because of his wingspan, routinely finishing when he reaches the backfield ... nice job stalking and closing on the quarterback ... looks comfortable dropping as a flat defender in space ... on the very short list of prospects in this draft class with double-digit forced fumbles (shares the ISU record with 10 career forced fumbles) ... was often asked to handle multiple blockers in ISU’s scheme ... outstanding backfield production, leading the team in sacks each of the last three seasons.

WEAKNESSES: Linear-built with a slender, lean-muscle body type ... lacks defined bulk, especially in his lower half ... average play strength will be more noticeable versus NFL talent ... too easily pushed/steered from the pocket ...immature pass-rush setup and move-to-move transitions ... undeveloped secondary measures ... too often finds himself too far upfield and behind the quarterback ... lackluster speed-to-power moves ... doesn’t consistently play stout in the run game and can be moved from his spot ... inconsistent run discipline and late to leverage gaps ... disappointing production as a senior.

SUMMARY: A two-year starter at Iowa State, McDonald played the LEO defensive end position in defensive coordinator Jon Heacock’s 3-3-5 base scheme, lining up inside and outside the offensive tackle. Despite not playing football until his junior year in high school, his 34.0 career sacks rank No. 1 in Iowa State history and are tied for the all-time lead in the Big 12 (one more than Von Miller’s 33.0 career sacks). With his length and quick-twitch movements, McDonald is able to separate from blockers, burst to close and finish in the pocket. However, his pass rush currently lacks ideal deception, power or setup efficiency, and offenses aren’t afraid to attack him in the run game because of his average play strength. Overall, McDonald is more toolsy than seasoned and might never become the sum of his parts, but his natural length, flexibility and explosiveness are an enticing combination. He projects as a subpackage pass rusher as an NFL rookie with the potential to be more down the road.

GRADE: 2nd Round (No. 46 overall)

9. KEION WHITE | Georgia Tech 6047 | 285 lbs. | 6SR Garner, N.C. (Garner) 1/20/1999 (age 24.27) #6

BACKGROUND: Keion (KEY-on) White, who is one of three children, grew up in the Raleigh area and started playing football at age 5. He attended Garner High School, lettering in basketball and football. At only 150 pounds as a freshman, he spent his first season gaining weight and playing on the JV team before being called up to varsity as a sophomore, joining a squad that included senior Nyheim Hines. As a 205-pound junior in 2015, White played both ways as a linebacker and center. He moved to tight end and defensive end as a senior in 2016 and had his best season, finishing with 20 receptions for 243 yards and four touchdowns to earn first team All-Conference honors. White also lettered three years in basketball.

A two-star recruit, White was the No. 141 tight end in the 2017 recruiting class and the No. 86 recruit in North Carolina. He wasn't on the recruiting radar until he moved to tight end and defensive line as a senior, but he went through his final season without any scholarship offers and didn't think college football was a possibility. White was considering the military until several FCS programs (Elon, Norfolk State, North Carolina A&T and Richmond) offered him after his senior year. A few FBS programs like North Carolina, NC State and Duke offered him a preferred walk-on spot, but he didn't have an FBS offer until Old Dominion entered the picture two weeks before signing day. There, White was a blocking tight end for two seasons before transitioning to defensive end during 2019 spring practices. After White's breakout season on defense, Old Dominion canceled the 2020 season because of the pandemic and White entered the transfer portal while finishing his degree in real estate (plans to be active in property acquisition). He signed with Georgia Tech after the 2020 season but suffered an ankle injury while playing basketball and missed the first eight games (and was only "60 percent" healthy when he returned for the final four games). His mother (Shareese Williams) played college basketball at Saint Augustine (1994-98) in Raleigh. He accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl.

STRENGTHS: Impressive speed for his size to run with running backs on wheel routes ... light-footed big man in space ... able to redirect and accelerate to close when chasing ... strong upper body and transfers power from his large shoulders to his physical hands ... go-to rush move is a two-hand strike, which he mixes up with hesitation ... uses his length to stack the edge ... drives single blocks deep into the pocket, forcing the quarterback to move his feet or disrupting the rush path of the ball carrier ... level-headed personality and a coachable player ... outstanding work ethic (worked as a Domino's delivery man for over a year while at ODU) ... excellent backfield production when healthy, and he matched the single-season TFL record in 2019 at ODU.

WEAKNESSES: Disproportionate size with his thick upper body but lean torso and lowers ... needs to play at a consistent weight ... gets upright out of his stance and will get pinned/washed ... late to recognize blocking design versus the run ... average get-off quickness ... hints of body stiffness hinder his ability to wrap the corner ... inconsistent contact balance disrupts his rush transitions ... rush moves are based more on power and physicality than nuance or sequencing ... head ducker into contact and sacrifices his sightlines ... older prospect and will be 24 on draft weekend ... dislocated his ankle (August 2021) after he slipped on a t-shirt while playing basketball (he popped his ankle back in himself) — the injury sidelined him for almost all of the 2021 season.

SUMMARY: A one-year starter at Georgia Tech, White played defensive end (field side) in defensive coordinator Andrew Thacker's 4-2-5 scheme, lining up inside and outside the tackle (stand up and hand on the ground). A former tight end at Old Dominion, he reinvented himself on the defensive line and posted excellent backfield production (33.0 tackles for loss in 24 games in his two healthy seasons on defense). White is a rangy mover for his size, capable of spot dropping with running backs or collapsing blocks off the edge with his physical hands. However, he needs to better understand his biomechanics and improve his pass-rush plan, as he prefers to surge into blocks instead of setting them up and countering. Overall, White is still developing his craft and pass-rush technique/instincts, but he is a high-motor height/weight/speed edge player with power as a bull rusher and the mass to anchor versus the run. Similar to Datone Jones, he is a scheme-proof prospect and projects as a rotational base end as an NFL rookie.

GRADE: 2nd Round (No. 47 overall)

10. DERICK HALL | Auburn 6026 | 254 lbs. | 4SR Gulfport, Miss. (Gulfport) 3/19/2001 (age 22.11) #29

BACKGROUND: Derick Hall II, who has an older sister, was born extremely premature at only 23 weeks (four months before his due date) and two pounds, nine ounces. He was technically born dead with no quality of life expected, and the doctors gave his mother (Stacy Gooden-Crandle) the choice of fighting or termination. Although Hall was never expected to walk or talk, Gooden-Crandle chose to fight, and Hall was put on life support for a week followed by a five-month stay in the hospital. Despite the grim prognosis, Hall overcame the odds and several other obstacles, including asthma, to have a relatively normal childhood. He started playing flag football at age 4 and later fell in love with basketball, starring on the AAU circuit. He attended Gulfport High School, where he was a three-sport standout and honor roll student, graduating with a 3.76 GPA. Hall played both ways as a defensive end and wide receiver and became the first player in school history to be named an Under Armour All-American in 2018. He finished his senior season with 83 tackles and 4.0 sacks, earning All-State honors and helping Gulfport to the 6A state playoffs. Hall was a starter on the basketball team and advanced to states in the 200 meters (22.12 seconds) as a junior. He also set personal bests in the 100-meters (11.04) and long jump (21 feet 10.5 inches).

A four-star recruit, Hall was the No. 8 weakside defensive end in the 2019 recruiting class and the No. 9 recruit in Mississippi. His first offer came from Ole Miss, followed by Auburn, Mississippi State, Florida, Florida State, LSU and Tennessee. Hall developed a close relationship with Auburn head coach Gus Malzahn and his staff and committed during the early signing period, so he could graduate high school early and enroll in January 2019. Hall was the eighth-ranked recruit in the Tigers 2019 class. He accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl.

STRENGTHS: Projectable frame with a muscled-up build and long arms ... strong initial burst to skillfully convert speed to power ... proficient with a variety of stab, long-arm and arm-over moves ... rocks blockers off balance and forces holding calls with his physical rush style ... holds the point and anchors with the same aggressiveness as a run defender ... scrapes and claws down the line to make chase-down stops ... flashes a closing burst when bearing down on ball carriers, making plays near the sideline ... shows veteran awareness and rarely takes himself out of plays ... doesn't shut things down, and his effort leads to production ... voted a team captain in 2022 and doesn't shy from speaking up and rallying his teammates (semifinalist for the 2022 Jason Witten Man of the Year Award) ... plays through bumps and bruises and finished his career having played in 44 straight games ... productive career and leaves school No. 7 on Auburn's all-time sack list (one behind Dee Ford).

WEAKNESSES: Most of his pass-rush success comes through blockers, not around them ... body stiffness shows when attempting to wrap the corner ... inefficient secondary moves when working off his initial stab/long arm ... anchors the edge but lacks suddenness in his shoulders/hands to quickly shed and make stops in his gap ... more penalties in 2022 than expected (three offsidess, two facemasks) ... zero career bat downs at the line of scrimmage ... missed two games as a freshman because of an MCL sprain in his knee (September 2019).

SUMMARY: A three-year starter at Auburn, Hall played an edge rusher position in former defensive coordinator Jeff Schmedding's four-man front, mostly out of a two-point stance. He was the Tigers' most productive backfield player the last few seasons, leading the team in both tackles for loss and sacks his junior and senior years. Only two pounds and nine ounces when he was born, Hall grew into a long, rocked-up defender who wears down blockers with aggressive stabs and speed-to-power moves. He can set a physical edge versus the run, but hints of stiffness leave him tardy to disengage and work off contact. Overall, Hall doesn't have fully fleshed-out counter maneuvers, but he is an urgent, hard-charging pass rusher with linear athleticism and power in his hands. He will be attractive to multiple schemes and projects as a potential NFL starter, similar to the Denver Broncos' Jonathan Cooper.

GRADE: 2nd-3rd Round (No. 58 overall)

11. ISAIAH FOSKEY | Notre Dame 6051 | 264 lbs. | 4JR Antioch, Calif. (De La Salle) 10/30/2000 (age 22.49) #7

BACKGROUND: Isaiah Foskey (Foss-key), the youngest of four children (and the only boy), grew up midway between San Francisco and Sacramento and played multiple sports in elementary school, including baseball, karate and track. However, he gravitated towards football at age 10 and played in the Deer Valley youth football league, followed by the East County youth football league. Foskey enrolled at De La Salle High School, a private Catholic school for boys and a football powerhouse. After playing on junior varsity as a freshman, he moved up to varsity for his final three seasons and played both ways as a tight end and defensive end. As a senior, Foskey led De La Salle to a 12-1 record with its only loss coming in the 2018 state championship to quarterback Bryce Young and Mater Dei. He was named a U.S. Army All-American and earned first team All-Conference with 64 tackles, 21.0 tackles for loss, 10.0 sacks, three forced fumbles and one interception (returned for a touchdown), adding seven receiving touchdowns on offense.

A four-star recruit, Foskey was the No. 13 weakside defensive end in the 2019 recruiting class and the No. 28 recruit in California. He started receiving attention from colleges in middle school and received his first offer in eighth grade from Kansas. Some programs recruited him at tight end, but most looked at him on defense. Foskey received offers from Alabama, Clemson, Texas, USC and others before narrowing down his final five to Cal, Michigan, Notre Dame, Ohio State and Washington. He signed with the Irish in December 2018, but he waited until signing day to reveal his choice so he could make the announcement with his De La Salle teammates. His father (Terry) served in the Navy, later worked for the Santa Clara County Sherriff's Office and is also a dog trainer. Foskey elected to skip his senior season and enter the 2023 NFL Draft. He accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl.

PRO DAY	6050	263	34 1/8	10	82 1/8	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	(position drills only – choice)

STRENGTHS: Projectable frame with workable length and room to add bulk ... gets off the ball with plus speed to penetrate the pocket from different angles ... softens the edge with his forward lean and speed-to-power rush ... go-to move is a long-arm or physical stab into the chest of blockers ... improved play strength and treats tight-end blocks like you would expect ... able to retrace his steps versus the run ... physical tackles help dislodge the football (seven career forced fumbles) ... rallies to the football with nonstop hustle, leading to chase-down sacks or tackles 20 yards away from the line of scrimmage ... four career blocked punts and became the first player in school history with multiple blocks in one game (2022 vs. UNLV) ... voted a team captain in 2022, and a sense of discipline was instilled in him at a young age by his parents ... durable and played in every game the last three seasons (aside from opting out of the bowl game) ... outstanding backfield production, becoming the first player in Notre Dame history with multiple seasons of double-digit sacks.

WEAKNESSES: His pass rush and countering skills lack complexity ... overly reliant on his long arm moves and must vary his rush plan ... powerful blockers will be able to sit down and anchor against his bull rush ... not overly bendy when running the arc ... hands are active in the run game, but his shed skills are inconsistent, leaving him late to shake loose ... average reaction time defending the run limits quick wins against blockers ... gets hung up in the trash and must improve his consistency with playside contain duties ... had a tough time versus two NFL-level tackles on the 2022 Ohio State tape.

SUMMARY: A two-year starter at Notre Dame, Foskey played the “Vyper” edge position in head coach Marcus Freeman’s hybrid four-man front, and the coaches were creative with his alignments (stand up, hand on the ground, off-ball linebacker, etc.). He led the Irish in sacks each of the last two seasons and became the school’s all-time leading sack artist (26.5), breaking the previous record (25.0) held by Justin Tuck. Although his pass-rush plan and move-to-move transitions are undeveloped, Foskey is a tough player to contain because of his revving motor and rangy chase skills up and down the line of scrimmage. He has active handwork but requires time to disengage from sustained blocks once reached, which leads to questions about his position fit. Overall, Foskey needs to be more consistent versus the run and his pass-rush arsenal lacks variety. However, he has promising traits, and his play speed and nonstop hustle raise his floor as an NFL player. He projects an impactful subpackage rusher as a rookie with the talent to develop into a full-time edge rusher.

12.	YAYA DIABY Louisville	6033 263 lbs. 5SR	Atlanta, Ga. (North Clayton)	5/30/1999 (age 23.91)	#6
BACKGROUND: YaYa Diaby (dee-YAH-bee), one of three children, attended North Clayton High School, where he played multiple positions, including tight end, defensive end and kicker. After posting 15 tackles and 2.0 sacks as a sophomore, he totaled 30 tackles and 2.0 tackles for loss as a junior. Diaby led North Clayton to the 4A playoffs as a senior in 2016, earning All-State and first team All-Region honors. He also lettered in basketball (5.5 points per game as a senior), wrestling (as a freshman) and track, setting personal bests in the 800 meters (2:26.67) and high jump (5 feet 6 inches).
A no-star recruit, Diaby went overlooked, mostly because of his size at 6-foot-2 and 210 pounds. After high school, he worked at the airport until he received a chance to try out at Georgia Military College, a junior college program 10 miles from North Clayton High School. Diaby was officially a walk-on before earning a scholarship early in the 2018 season. Over his two seasons at Georgia Military College, he collected 77 tackles, 24.0 tackles for loss and 7.0 sacks. A three-star juco recruit, Diaby was the No. 3 juco strongside defensive end and the No. 2 juco recruit out of Georgia in the 2020 recruiting class. He received offers from Auburn, Florida State, Kansas State, South Carolina, Tennessee and West Virginia before committing to Louisville because of his connection with the coaches. Diaby accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl.

PRO DAY	6034	263	34 1/8	10 3/8	81 3/4	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	(position drills only – choice)

STRENGTHS: Looks the part with a muscular frame, long arms and big hands ... naturally explosive with the first step to infiltrate gaps ... displays the lower-body flexibility to dip his shoulder or fluidly change directions ... uses knee bend for quick lateral shuffle down the line ... outstanding speed in pursuit to make plays down the line ... strong, heavy hands at contact ... flashes the power in his body to uproot and be a true force player ... physical run defender to hold the point or spill outside runs ... transformed his body since high school, adding 50 pounds (from 210 to 260) over his two seasons at the juco level ... looked comfortable when he reduced inside over interior gaps ... backfield production took a substantial jump between his junior and senior years at Louisville.

WEAKNESSES: Only one season of legitimate backfield production ... relies on quickness and power over a nuanced pass-rush setup ... pass-rush tool box isn’t very deep, and he needs to expand his imagination, especially with his secondary moves ... stunts and loops are ineffective when his pads/hips rise ... looks to deliver power at contact but will fall off some tackle attempts when he doesn’t wrap or focus on finishing ... has the speed to chase down plays, but he’s often late to read screens or misdirection and needs to be more of an instinctive hunter versus the run ... turns 24 after the NFL Draft.

SUMMARY: A three-year starter at Louisville, Diaby was the field defensive end in former defensive coordinator Bryan Brown’s three-man front, playing head up over the tackle and occasionally moving inside or outside. A late bloomer, he took a winding road to reach the NFL’s doorstep, including working at the airport after high school, but things clicked for him in 2022 with personal bests in sacks (9.0) and tackles for loss (14.0). An impressive height/weight/speed athlete, Diaby bursts off his spots with the power/bend to wrap blockers and close with violence. His rush counters tend to get choppy once he meets resistance and his run-game discipline will need to improve versus NFL competition. Overall, Diaby needs to develop a more instinctive and craftier approach to breaking down blockers, but he has the natural explosion and length to attack gaps or power through the shoulder of blockers like a swinging saloon door. He has intriguing development potential as a scheme-diverse, leverage-power rusher.

13.	ZACH HARRISON Ohio State	6054 274 lbs. 4SR	Lewis Center, Ohio (Olentangy Orange)	8/14/2001 (age 21.70)	#9
BACKGROUND: Zachary “Zach” Harrison, who has an older sister, was born in South Chicago before his family moved to central Ohio when he was age 4. He started playing sports at age 6 and became an avid NFL fan (Chicago Bears). He took up football in the fifth grade but struggled on the field until he grew into his body at Olentangy Orange High School in Delaware County. After playing on the freshman team, Harrison made varsity as a sophomore and played both ways, posting 32 tackles, 11.0 tackles for loss and 5.0 sacks on defense with 185 receiving yards and five touchdowns as a receiver/tight end on offense. As a junior, he earned All-District honors with 35 tackles, 18.5 tackles for loss and 7.5 sacks while adding nine catches for 173 yards and four touchdowns. Harrison missed the first three games of his senior year because of a leg injury but still earned first team All-State and U.S. Army All-American honors with 14.0 tackles for loss and 7.0 sacks in 2018. He was also a standout track athlete (sprints and relays) at Olentangy Orange with remarkable personal bests in the 100 meters (10.78 second), 200 meters (21.55) and 60 meters (7.49).

A five-star recruit, Harrison was the No. 2 strongside defensive end in the 2019 recruiting class and the No. 1 recruit in Ohio (No. 12 recruit nationally). Thanks to his size and speed, he received scholarship offers from national powers like Alabama, Clemson, Georgia, Notre Dame and USC. But he quickly narrowed his list to three: Michigan, Ohio State and Penn State. Harrison decided to stay close to home and was the top-ranked player (just ahead of WR Garrett Wilson) in Ryan Day’s first recruiting class as head coach of the Buckeyes. Harrison was part of the early-signing period and finished high school early to enroll at Ohio State in January 2019. He graduated with his degree in criminology (December 2022). Harrison accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl.

STRENGTHS: Freaky height/weight/speed athlete ... remarkable length with the longest arms (36 1/4 inches) and wingspan (85 1/2 inches) among defensive linemen in this draft class (second among all positions behind his OSU teammate Dawand Jones) ... explosive through his hips and gets upfield quickly ... creates leverage with his forward lean into contact and uses his long reach to forklift blockers ... easily converts his speed to power when he fires his hands and has two steps of acceleration ... moves well laterally to work up/down the line and defeat reach blocks ... offenses can’t leave his speed unblocked versus jets/pitches ... physical swipe/chop moves and showed improved awareness and rush diversity as a senior ... crazy length allows him to reach places most rushers can’t, and his career pass breakups (11) and forced fumbles (five) reflect that ... voted a team captain in 2021 but not 2022 (NFL scout: “Quiet, guarded kid, but the coaches say he came out of his shell more and more each year”) ... experienced playing inside, outside or over the defensive end.

WEAKNESSES: Long-legged and stiff ... doesn’t have the dip or bend to consistently wrap the corner ... rush setup lacks deception, and his counters are overly segmented ... too gradual when disengaging blocks and needs to improve his hand placement and shed violence at the point of attack ... with his tall center of gravity, leverage can be an issue for him as an edge setter ... late to anticipate angle/trap blocks ... labors when attempting to settle his feet and redirect in smaller areas, especially versus backfield elusiveness ... lackluster career backfield production and never had more than four sacks in any of his four seasons in college.

SUMMARY: A two-year starter at Ohio State, Harrison rushed off the edge in defensive coordinator Jim Knowles’ four-man front (stand up and hand on the ground). Although his college backfield production is underwhelming, his tape is more disruptive than his stat sheet, and he led the Buckeyes in pressures (33) in 2022. One of the youngest seniors in the 2023 draft class, Harrison is a freaky size/speed athlete and improved each season with his understanding of how to efficiently unlock his gifted traits. High-cut and leggy, he isn’t a fluid bender, which limits his cornering skills, but his rush hands are powerful with lateral range versus the run. Overall, Harrison’s pass-rush construction and edge-setting execution are works in progress, but he is a remarkable linear athlete with elite length, upfield quickness and the ability to affect the game in different ways. He can play defensive end in even or odd fronts and projects as a key member of an NFL defensive line rotation.

GRADE: 3rd Round (No. 74 overall)

14. TULI TUIPULOTU | USC

6030 | 266 lbs. | 3JR

Hawthorne, Calif. (Lawndale)

#49

BACKGROUND: Tuli (TOO-lee) Tuipulotu (TOO-ee-poo-LOE-too), who is of Tongan ancestry, grew up in Gardena (15 miles south of Los Angeles) before his family moved to western Oregon when he was in middle school. He attended Central High School in Independence and played football on the freshman team in his first year. The family returned to southern California and Tuipulotu enrolled at Lawndale High School, where he was a three-year starting edge rusher on varsity. As a sophomore, he recorded 49 tackles, 12.0 tackles for loss and two forced fumbles. As a junior, Tuipulotu led Lawndale to a 14-2 record and the 2018 Division 5 state championship. He finished the season with 95 tackles, 24.0 tackles for loss, 9.0 sacks and a forced fumble, earning All-Area honors, and saw time on offense as a pass catcher. Tuipulotu collected numerous accolades as a senior, including third team All-State and first team All-Conference honors.

A three-star recruit, Tuipulotu was the No. 40 defensive tackle in the 2020 recruiting class and the No. 33 recruit in California. He considered offers from Cal, Nebraska, Tennessee, Utah and Washington before deciding to follow in his older brother’s footsteps and sign with USC. Tuipulotu was the third highest-ranked recruit in the Trojans’ 2020 class, despite only being a three-star. His older brother (Marlon) was a defensive lineman at USC and a sixth-round pick (No. 189 overall) in the 2021 NFL Draft by the Philadelphia Eagles. His cousin (Talanoa Hufanga) played safety at USC and was drafted in the fifth round (No. 180 overall) of the 2021 NFL Draft by the San Francisco 49ers, then earned All-Pro and Pro Bowl honors in 2022. Tuli and Marlon Tuipulotu and Hufanga all were teammates on USC’s 2020 defense. His cousin (Fili Moala) was a defensive tackle at USC and was drafted in the second round (No. 56 overall) of the 2009 NFL Draft, playing six seasons in the NFL (2009-15). Tuipulotu elected to skip his senior season and enter the 2023 NFL Draft.

PRO DAY	6030	268	32 3/8	10 1/8	77 1/8	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	(no testing – right hamstring)

STRENGTHS: Average get-off but gains momentum quick with each step, allowing him to barrel through gaps ... physical, insistent hands to pry open blocks and create his own rush lanes ... makes quick reads mid-rush to find the quickest angles from A to B ... transfers power from his lower body through his hips and into his hands for bull-rush wins ... motor never cools, and he fills up the stat sheet with effort production ... looks up to Michael Bennett, and it shows with his aggressive, forceful play style ... known as a “coach pleaser” who will play through bumps and bruises and do what is asked of him (finished his college career with 30 straight starts) ... benefited from his front-row seat to watch his brother develop into a high-level college player and NFL draft pick ... won’t turn 21 until after his first NFL training camp ... put together an All-American 2022 season with elite production.

WEAKNESSES: More quick than explosive ... below-average arm length, although his forward lean helps compensate ... plays with high pads and lacks twitch in his redirection ... slows down once engaged ... doesn’t have a closing burst to make up ground in pursuit (no athletic testing data pre-draft because of a right hamstring injury) ... inconsistent stacker in the run game and will find himself drifting from his gap duties ... inconsistent tackler and fails to finish too many ball carriers he should get on the ground (see: 2022 Arizona tape) ... weight showed drastic fluctuations throughout his three years with the Trojans.

SUMMARY: A three-year starter at USC, Tuipulotu was a stand-up edge rusher in defensive coordinator Alex Grinch’s hybrid front, lining up anywhere from the five-to the nine-technique. He put together an All-American 2022 season as the FBS leader in sacks (13.5) and ranked No. 2 nationally in tackles for loss (22.0), which earned him the Morris Trophy and Pac-12 Defensive Player of the Year. Although not naturally explosive, Tuipulotu plays with short-area quickness and can be a handful once he gets his momentum going downhill. His hands are active and heavy to pound on blockers, but he can be sluggish getting off contact once long-armed blockers get into his frame. Overall, there are a few concerning areas about his game, but Tuipulotu finds his way to the football because of his pass-rush instincts, natural power and relentless effort — and that should continue in the NFL. He projects as a solid starter on the edge.

GRADE: 3rd Round (No. 75 overall)

15. ISAIAH MCGUIRE | Missouri 6043 | 268 lbs. | 4SR Tulsa, Okla. (Union) 7/27/2001 (age 21.75) #9

BACKGROUND: Isaiah McGuire grew up in the Tulsa area with his mother (Faith Shannon) and started playing football at the youth level. He is close with his father (Tarrick), who played tight end at Oklahoma State (1997-2000) and is now the Assistant Police Chief in Arlington, Texas. McGuire enrolled at Union High School, where he was a four-year letterman on varsity as a defensive end, although he wasn’t a full-time starter as an underclassman. As a senior, he led Union to the 2018 district championship and the Class 6A state semifinal game. McGuire finished with 6.0 sacks and was named an All-District performer. He also lettered in track at Union and set personal bests in the outdoor shot put (49 feet 9 inches) and indoor shot put (47-8).

A three-star recruit, McGuire was the No. 81 strongside defensive end in the 2019 recruiting class and the No. 15 recruit in Oklahoma. Somewhat of a late bloomer, he started to receive recruiting attention after attending camps the summer before his senior year and picked up FCS offers from Abilene Christian, Missouri State and Western Illinois. His hometown Tulsa joined the mixed, followed by Missouri. McGuire visited other schools, including Alabama and Oklahoma State (his parents’ alma mater), but Missouri was his only Power 5 offer, and he signed with the Tigers. He ranked No. 17 in Missouri’s 22-player recruiting class in 2019. McGuire opted out of the 2022 bowl game and accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl.

PRO DAY	6044	269	34 1/2	8 1/2	81 7/8	-	-	-	-	-	4.46	7.19	- (stood on combine testing)

STRENGTHS: Physically impressive with a long-armed, moldable frame and comfortably carries his weight ... stout at the point of attack with lateral range in the run game ... uses his arm length to quickly play off blocks and find the ball ... slams his physical hands into the chest of blockers as a pass rusher to force his way into the pocket (see: his matchup versus Broderick Jones on the 2022 Georgia tape) ... unleashes a violent rip-chop move and shows the ability to grab and dispose of blocker’s wrists to access rush lanes ... shows enough dip at the top of his rush to tighten his cornering angles and force holding calls ... speed is average but displays enough juice to track down ball carriers from the backside or in pursuit ... heavy tackler ... voted a senior captain and young for his class ... productive in the backfield (31.0 TFL in 35 games the last three seasons).

WEAKNESSES: Not a sudden rusher and won’t beat blockers with his get-off and speed alone ... NFL blockers will catch on to his predictable rush plan ... needs to be more consistent with his setup and move timing to maximize execution ... pad level gets high, leaving him exposed to down blocks and washouts ... late to anticipate side-angled blocks that seal him inside ... stack and shed can get too methodical at times ... saw more drop-and-cover reps in 2022, but this area isn’t yet a strength to his game ... expected better sack/pressure production based on his talent ... didn’t bench during the draft process because of his right shoulder.

SUMMARY: A three-year starter at Missouri, McGuire was a hand-on-the-ground defensive end in defensive coordinator Blake Baker’s 4-2-5 base scheme, although he also reduced inside at times. He led the Tigers in sacks as a junior and senior and planted his flag as one of the best all-around defensive ends in the SEC with his 2022 season. McGuire is stout at the point of attack with the long arms and lateral quickness to defend multiple gaps. Although he isn’t sudden as a pass rusher, he has strong strides and body flexibility to wrap the outside shoulder of offensive tackles or create forceful knockback with his bull rush. Overall, McGuire needs further polishing to truly maximize his skill set, but he is long, agile and powerful enough to effectively leverage blockers and disrupt both the run and the pass. He is a scheme-diverse prospect and projects as a future NFL starter.

16. NICK HAMPTON | Appalachian State 6022 | 236 lbs. | SSR Anderson, S.C. (Westside) 4/5/2000 (age 23.06) #9

BACKGROUND: Nicholas “Nick” Hampton, who is one of three children, attended Westside High School in Anderson County, where he was a three-year letterman at edge rusher. As a junior in 2016, Hampton helped Westside to a 10-win season and posted 63 tackles, 15.0 tackles for loss and 7.0 sacks. He earned All-Region and All-Area honors for the second straight season as a senior and finished with a team-best 81 tackles, 17.0 tackles for loss, 6.0 sacks and two forced fumbles. Hampton also lettered in track (relays and jumps) and won a regional championship in the high jump (6 feet 0 inches) as a senior. He also set personal bests in the long jump (21-4) and triple jump (44-10).

A two-star, Hampton was the No. 104 strongside defensive end in the 2018 recruiting class and the No. 46 recruit in South Carolina. At just 210 pounds out of high school, he went underrecruited by ACC and SEC programs. Hampton received several FCS offers (Charleston Southern, Elon, The Citadel and Wofford), then Appalachian State, Georgia State and Miami (Ohio) officially offered prior to his senior season. Two months after head coach Scott Satterfield offered, Hampton committed to Appalachian State. He accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl.

PRO DAY	6023	239	33	9 1/2	81	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	(no testing – right toe)

STRENGTHS: Explosive first step, and his race to the corner can get tackles off balance ... instinctive snap anticipation and rarely loses sight of the football ... displays the lower-body flexibility to bend and make sharp cuts in his pass rush ... nimble, efficient loopier ... allows his length to work for him with a forceful long-arm move ... uses forward lean to access speed-to-power opportunities and free himself from blocks ... outstanding pursuit from the backside ... experienced peeling off and defending zones ... improved weight transfer as a tackler in 2022 boosted his finishing batting average ... voted a senior captain ... above-average backfield production and his 11.0 sacks in 2021 was the most for an Appalachian State player since the school moved up to the FBS.

WEAKNESSES: Introduced new rush moves into his latest album, but he reverts back to the predictable hits, relying on speed and length ... lean lower body and doesn't have the frame to carry much more bulk ... struggles to shake free once blockers get into his chest ... counters aren't NFL-ready ... inconsistent edge setter and can be washed or pushed around by base ends ... doesn't have the point-of-attack skills to reduce head up over the tackle or further inside ... bull rush will learn about NFL resistance very quickly ... too reactive in drops with inconsistent coverage angles ... missed three games as a senior because of injury (October 2022).

SUMMARY: A three-year starter at Appalachian State, Hampton played the “Dog” stand-up edge rusher position in former defensive coordinator Dale Jones’ 3-4 base scheme. He put his name on the NFL radar as a junior and had an impressive two-year finish for the Mountaineers with 27.0 tackles for loss and 18.0 sacks in 23 games. Hampton diagnoses well versus the run and is always in chase mode, frequently making tackles on the opposite side of the field from where he started. His bread and butter is his ability to force the quarterback to move his feet, although he needs to continue maturing his rush sequence beyond just speed and reach.

Overall, there are holes in Hampton’s game that likely will keep him from finding an every-down NFL role, but his physical tools as a pass rusher pop off the screen and lead to backfield production. His best fit might be as a sub-rusher in the mold of Josh Uche.

GRADE: 3rd-4th Round

17. BYRON YOUNG | Tennessee 6023 | 250 lbs. | SSR Georgetown, S.C. (Carvers Bay) 3/13/1998 (age 25.12) #6

BACKGROUND: Byron Young, who is one of three children, was born and raised in Georgetown (coastal city 60 miles north of Charleston). He attended Carvers Bay High School in Hemingway, S.C., where he was a four-year letterman. Young played on all three phases in high school as a 215-pound running back, defensive end and kick returner. As a senior in 2016, he received 2A All-State honors.

A no-star recruit, Young wasn't ranked by online recruiting services and didn't have the grades to attend a Division I school. In 2017, he enrolled at a Gulf Coast Sports Academy, a postgraduate school in Mount Vernon, Ala., to get his academics back on track. However, he left after a few months as the program started to disband. Young moved to Columbus, Ga., where he worked as the assistant manager at a Dollar General Store for 18 months. After seeing a flier for tryouts, he joined the football team at Georgia Military College in spring of 2019 and rediscovered his love for the sport. As a freshman in 2019, Young (who also worked at Circle K to make ends meet) finished with 31 tackles, 11.0 tackles for loss and 7.0 sacks. The 2020 season was canceled because of the pandemic, but Young produced enough tape to be a three-star juco recruit and the No. 1 ranked juco edge rusher in the 2021 recruiting class. In the fall of 2020, Young received offers from Auburn, Florida State, Georgia, LSU, Ole Miss, South Carolina, Tennessee and Texas. He graduated with his associate's degree in November and signed with the Volunteers in December. Young was ruled ineligible for the first two games of the 2021 season because of his short stint at postgraduate school in 2017. He accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl.

STRENGTHS: Rushes with athletic twitch and a quick first step ... understands rush depth and angles to stress offensive tackles in space ... physical swipe/rip moves to knock away the reach of blockers and grease the edge ... exceptional quickness on loops and stunts ... picks up steam as a bull rusher, slams his hands into blockers and drives his legs to create movement ... relentless motor and flashes chase speed from the backside ... has the ball GPS to alter his rush path and find a new track to the football ... has experience dropping in space to cover screens ... every coach along his unique journey singles out his drive and determination ... posted double-digit tackles for loss in his two seasons in Knoxville.

WEAKNESSES: His frame is limber but undersized and lacks desired length ... rudimentary rush setup and doesn't always have a plan ... tends to mistime his swipe moves ... hands are aggressive, but they bring more pop than creativity ... unimaginative counter measures ... physical at the point of attack in the run game but doesn't own it and struggles to set the edge ... will lose leverage in space as a run defender ... questionable peripherals and gets locked in on the football ... older player and is already 25 ... doesn't have the framework of an every-down player.

SUMMARY: A two-year starter at Tennessee, Young played boundary defensive end (LEO role) in defensive coordinator Tim Banks' 4-3 base, standing up and rushing with his hand on the ground. He's had a winding football journey since high school, including two years working at a Dollar General and Circle K to support himself while he got his football career back on track. A "wind him up and let him loose" type of rusher, Young is an explosive, hard charger and at his best on T/E stunts because of the balance and quickness to stay on his rush path. However, he is undersized and his role will be limited at the next level because of his deficiencies in closed areas. Overall, Young can be engulfed in the run game, and his rush stalls too quickly at contact, but his energy and pass-rush flashes lead to backfield plays. Though he has limitations in the run game, he has the potential to make a living as a glorified sub-rusher in the NFL.

GRADE: 3rd-4th Round

18. DYLAN HORTON | TCU

6040 | 257 lbs. | 5SR

Frisco, Texas (Frisco)

#98

BACKGROUND: Dylan Horton, who is the youngest of two boys, was born in Houston before his family relocated to Frisco when he was age 1. Along with playing basketball, baseball and soccer growing up, he started playing football at age 5, following in the footsteps of his older brother (Ryan), who is five years older. Horton lined up primarily as a running back and safety throughout youth football before switching to wide receiver in eighth grade. He enrolled at Frisco High School, where he was a starting wide receiver and safety on varsity. As a junior, Horton led Frisco to an 8-3 season and 2016 playoff appearance with 56 tackles, three forced fumbles and two interceptions, which earned him first team All-District. He was also an All-District performer in basketball at Frisco and lettered in track (jumps).

A three-star recruit, Horton was the No. 148 safety in the 2018 recruiting class and the No. 291 recruit in Texas. At 200 pounds as a high school senior, he was a long and lean safety whom many schools projected to outside linebacker. Horton received a handful of FCS offers and a handful of FBS offers and initially committed to SMU in the summer of 2017. He stayed committed to the Mustangs throughout his senior year, but after Chad Morris was fired as head coach and Sonny Dykes was hired, he wasn't sure if there would be a scholarship spot for him. Horton decommitted the week before signing day and flipped to New Mexico, which had just hired the former linebackers coach from SMU, who'd been Horton's main recruiter. He played two seasons at outside linebacker for the Lobos but decided to enter the transfer portal after the 2019 season when Bob Davie was fired as head coach. Horton transferred to TCU to be closer to home and moved positions again to a stand-up edge-rusher role at 235 pounds in Gary Patterson's scheme. He then moved to the defensive line as a senior under the Horned Frogs' new coaching staff. Horton accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl.

STRENGTHS: Sturdy, moldable frame ... weight comfortably fluctuated between 235-275 pounds over the last three seasons, as he adjusted to the roles he was asked to play ... strong hands at the point of attack to pry open the chest of blockers and create his own rush lanes ... attacks with joint flexibility ... doesn't allow tight ends to slow his rush ... can use his inside arm to sell outside before going through the blocker's inside shoulder ... plays under control as a run defender to contain or quickly accelerate to defend end-arounds and chase down ball carriers ... stays balanced in pursuit to be a consistent finisher on tackle attempts ... produced his best tape and production as a senior ... the only Big 12 player with double-digit sacks in 2022.

WEAKNESSES: Tall pads and needs to makes a conscious effort to play low each play ... average shed quickness and violence ... rush sequence can get off schedule quickly, forcing him to reset and stall ... thinks too much when attempting to counter blocks once engaged ... needs to better anticipate set points and blocking design, instead of reacting on the move ... average speed-to-power arsenal ... can be moved by edge blocks when he loses his leverage ... was constantly moving positions in college with only one season as a true hand-on-the-ground end.

SUMMARY: A three-year starter at TCU, Horton played left defensive end in defensive coordinator Joe Gillespie's 3-3-5 scheme, splitting his reps as a 4i, five- and three-technique. A 200-pound safety as a true freshman, he played an edge-rusher role at 235 pounds for Gary Patterson, then got up to 275 pounds for the new scheme in 2022 and led the Big 12 in sacks (including 4.0 against Michigan in the College Football Playoffs). Horton is quick out of his stance with two-step acceleration and the recognition skills to make a beeline to the football. Though he uses his hands well to catch and toss punch attempts, he will stall out once stout blockers engage him as he attempts to counter. Overall, Horton needs to continue honing his efficiency and execution as a pass rusher, but he has high-upside rush traits with steady run-defending skills. He has proven himself to be scheme-versatile.

GRADE: 4th Round

19. TYRUS WHEAT | Mississippi State 6020 | 263 lbs. | 5SR Amite, La. (Amite) 12/8/1999 (age 23.39) #2

BACKGROUND: Tyrus (TIE-russ) Wheat, who is one of seven children, grew up in the small town of Amite (east of Baton Rouge), where he was a multi-sport athlete. He attended Amite High School, where he was teammates with several future FBS players, including eventual Heisman Trophy winner DeVonta Smith. Lining up primarily as an outside linebacker and safety, Wheat helped Amite to a 12-3 record and 2016 district title. As a 195-pound senior, he earned All-District honors with 8.0 sacks and five interceptions. Wheat also was a standout basketball player at Amite and was known for his rebounding and the alley-oop passes that he threw to Smith. Together, Wheat and Smith led Amite to the 2016-17 district title with a 23-10 record.

A three-star recruit, Wheat was the No. 71 outside linebacker in the 2018 recruiting class and the No. 46 recruit in Louisiana. He received his first offer from Tulane in March 2017, followed by several FCS offers (Houston Baptist, Jackson State, Southeastern Louisiana). Missouri was Wheat's first Power 5 offer, and he committed to the Tigers. However, he was forced to go the juco route and enrolled at Copiah-Lincoln Community College in Wesson, Miss. In his two seasons there as a box safety, Wheat combined for 104 tackles, 8.0 tackles for loss, five interceptions and two forced fumbles. A three-star juco recruit, he received offers from Arkansas, Auburn, Baylor, Kentucky, Ole Miss and Utah before committing to Mississippi State. Wheat took advantage of an extra year of eligibility and returned to Starkville for a fifth season in 2022. He graduated with his degree. Wheat opted out of the 2022 bowl game and accepted his invitation to the 2023 East-West Shrine Bowl.

STRENGTHS: Compact, heavy build with functional length ... quick off the ball with steady edge speed ... strikes with power and pad level to create knockback ... uses his downhill momentum to generate movement as a bull rusher ... flexible rusher and turns his shoulder to knife through gaps ... stout and extends his arms to stack the edge ... greets pullers with stiff hands/shoulder ... digests quickly to react/peel to screens or find passing lanes in his drops ... pursuit skills help him find the best path to the football ... strong tackler in tight spaces and the open field ... has added 60 pounds since high school ... productive in the SEC with 27.0 tackles for loss and 18.5 sacks over 33 starts.

WEAKNESSES: Plays quick but doesn't have explosive twitch in his movements ... better blitzer than nuanced pass rusher right now ... rush hands are powerful yet unrefined ... move-to-move transitions and counters need to be more thought-out ... average lateral agility, and long-armed blockers can reach him and control his gap (he won't meet the arm-length thresholds for all teams) ... reacts quickly to what he reads, but his anticipation of developing plays requires work ... only average range when space expands in his drops ... will turn 24 during his rookie season.

SUMMARY: A three-year starter at Mississippi State, Wheat played SAM linebacker in former defensive coordinator (now head coach) Zach Arnett's 3-3-5 base scheme. With experience at safety, linebacker and defensive end, he offers versatile experience at all three levels and was consistently productive in the SEC, leading the Bulldogs in tackles for loss and sacks as a junior and senior. Wheat is a physical, full-head-of-steam rusher with quickness to win off the edge and the instincts to find the ball in pursuit. However, his play style is based more on strength and effort than an efficient, coordinated attack. Overall, Wheat doesn't have elite length or explosiveness, but he is a physical edge setter with the front-seven athleticism that will speak to different schemes. With his versatile skill set and motor, his best NFL fit is standing up as outside linebacker in a 3-4 base.

20. K.J. HENRY | Clemson 6042 | 251 lbs. | 5SR Winston-Salem, N.C. (West Forsyth) 1/27/1999 (age 24.25) #5

BACKGROUND: Keith Jeremiah "K.J." Henry, who is one of four children, was born in Southern Ohio, where his father (Keith) was an assistant football coach under Jim Grobe at Ohio University. When Henry was age 2, the family moved to Winston-Salem when Grobe accepted the head coaching job at Wake Forest and brought Keith with him. Henry grew up around the Wake Forest program and was close with notable players like Aaron Curry and Alphonso Smith. He started playing football at age 7 but gravitated towards basketball as his go-to sport through middle school and into high school. Henry spent his freshman year in high school at Forsyth Country Day before transferring to West Forsyth High School for his final three years. He played both ways as a tight end and defensive end, and he was named an Under Armour All-American and the Defensive Player of the Year as a senior, leading West Forsyth to a 2018 conference title. Henry was a standout on the basketball court in high school, scoring 1,156 points in 115 career games (he didn't play as a senior) and averaging 16.0 points and 7.0 rebounds per game as a junior. He was also a certified basketball referee throughout high school.

A five-star recruit, Henry was the No. 3 weakside defensive end in the 2018 recruiting class (No. 14 overall) and the No. 2 recruit in North Carolina (behind RB Zamir White). His goal was to play college basketball, and he received offers from several lower-level Division I programs. Once his football recruitment exploded his junior season, though, Henry knew that football was his future. He picked up offers from national programs like Notre Dame, Ohio State and USC before narrowing down his final choice to Alabama, Clemson, Georgia, South Carolina and Virginia Tech. Henry committed to Clemson and graduated early, enrolling in January 2018. His father was an All-American safety at Catawba (1985-89), where he set a school record with 398 tackles, and played two seasons in the Arena Football League (1990-91). Keith spent the next 32 years as an assistant coach at the college level, including stops at Gardner-Webb (1990), Charleston Southern (1991), North Carolina A&T (1992-94), Ohio (1995-2000), Wake Forest (2001-11), Catawba (2013-16), Charlotte (2017-18) and Western Carolina (2019-21). Keith underwent surgery for a kidney transplant (July 2022), and K.J. used an NIL deal to help raise $100,000 to aid with uncovered medical expenses. K.J.'s younger brother (Isaiah) is a high school junior and a basketball recruit with an offer from Appalachian State. Henry graduated with his degree in sports communication (December 2020) and added his master's degree in athletic leadership (December 2021). He accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl.

STRENGTHS: High-energy rusher with lower body quickness and flexibility ... introduces hesitation and physical hands to stress blockers in different ways ... leans on a club-swim to help him clear the outside shoulder ... creates a power surge when he gets underneath pads and uses his full extension to walk blockers backwards ... agile-footed to cross the face of the tackle and create an inside rush lane ... makes himself skinny to squeeze through gaps ... has a knack for finding passing lanes at the line of scrimmage for bat-down opportunities ... plenty of second-effort plays on tape ... red-hot motor helps him chase from the backside or track down screen passes ... learned how to train in the weight room (could bench press 225 pounds just once as a freshman but did 24 at his pro day) ... his father has 30-plus years of experience coaching at the college level, and K.J. grew up around high-level athletes ... led the Clemson defensive line in snaps (664) in 2022.
WEAKNESSES: Lacks desired size with only mediocre length and build ... average edge setter and will struggle to dig his cleats in versus mauling NFL tackles ... can be sealed/washed and needs to develop his hand efficiency to disengage ... finds himself buried when he sacrifices his balance to make plays ... pass-rush repertoire requires further examination to keep blockers guessing ... counters are active but not always controlled ... often arrives in the backfield out of control and needs to be a more consistent finisher ... only one season of full-time work and production ... never reached 5.0 sacks or double-digit tackles for loss in a single season ... wasn't a full participant at the combine or pro day because of a right hamstring tweak ... older player and already age 24.
SUMMARY: A one-year starter at Clemson, Henry lined up at left defensive end in defensive coordinator Wes Goodwin's multiple fronts. Growing up around the game as the son of a longtime college coach, he became a full-time starter in 2022. Even though he finished fifth on the team in sacks (3.5), he led the Clemson defense in quarterback pressures (53) by a healthy margin (Tyler Davis had the second-most with 36). A ball of energy off the edge, Henry doesn't like to be blocked and has the quick feet and active hands to leverage gaps. Though he is a persistent fighter in the run game, he can get short-armed and engulfed as an edge setter. Overall, Henry isn't the biggest or fastest and isn't built to be an every-down impact player in the NFL, but he plays with burst, hustle and know-how to break down the rhythm of blockers in different ways. He has the tools to compete for a sub-rusher role as a rookie.
GRADE: 4th Round

21. DJ JOHNSON | Oregon 6040 | 260 lbs. | 6SR Sacramento, Calif. (Luther Burbank) 10/29/1998 (age 24.49) #2

BACKGROUND: Deonte “DJ” Johnson, one of five children, grew up in South Sacramento, moving several times throughout his youth as his parents (PJ Johnson and Tangela Holmes) tried to steer their kids from gang life. He attended Luther Burbank High School and played on both offense and defense, lining up at multiple positions. After totaling 9.0 sacks as a sophomore, Johnson emerged as a major recruit with 87 tackles, 32.0 tackles for loss, 14.5 sacks and five forced fumbles while adding five touchdowns (three fumble returns, one receiving, one rushing) and earning first team All-Conference honors. As a senior, he was named second team All-State, first team All-Conference and conference Defensive MVP with 85 tackles, 31.0 tackles for loss, 14.5 sacks, five forced fumbles and a blocked field goal. Johnson, a 2017 Under Armour All-American, finished his prep career with 79.0 tackles for loss and 38.5 sacks. He was also a standout in track and set personal bests in the 100 meters (11.22 second), 200-meters (23.79), shot put (47 feet 1 inch), long jump (19-8) and triple jump (322).

A four-star recruit, Johnson was the No. 6 weakside defensive end in the 2017 recruiting class and the No. 9 recruit in California (No. 2 defensive end in the state, behind Jaelan Phillips). During his junior campaign, his recruitment skyrocketed, and he ultimately picked up 100 scholarship offers, including from national programs like Alabama, Georgia, Michigan, Ohio State and Oklahoma. Johnson grew up rooting for Miami (he has a tattoo of Sean Taylor on his right arm) and Oregon, and he signed with the Hurricanes over USC and Utah. After one season in Miami, he elected to transfer closer to home because of health issues in his family. Johnson was given permission to speak with eight Pac-12 programs as a transfer destination, and he signed with Oregon, enrolling in January 2018. After playing on defense in 2019, he moved to tight end for the 2020 season and played on both sides of the ball in 2021 before returning to defense full-time in 2022. He proposed to his wife in March 2022. His older brother (PJ) played defensive tackle at Arizona and was a seventh-round pick (No. 229) of the 2019 NFL Draft by the Detroit Lions. His younger brother (Da’Marcus) played defensive end at Fresno State (2020-22). Johnson had a LASIK procedure (April 2021). He opted out of the 2022 bowl game and accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl.

STRENGTHS: Natural knee bender and coordinated athlete in space ... explosive out of his stance to shock blockers ... forward lean and bend help him convert his speed to power ... generates a violent bull rush when he extends both hands and uses his long arms to go through blockers ... strong strider and not an easy arc rusher to knock off his feet ... sets the edge with a swift two-hand strike ... works well laterally and does a great job stringing runs outside to make stops near the numbers ... determined chaser and makes plays with his competitive temperament and effort ... has some experience dropping into space ... played both ways in college (had a first-down catch and game-ending sack on 2021 Ohio State tape) ... played his best football as a senior.

WEAKNESSES: Not a refined pass rusher and prefers force over setup or sequencing ... shows hints of tightness and often finds himself too far upfield as he tries to wrap the corner ... sacrifices his forward balance at times when trying to go through blockers ... long legs make it tough for him to break down in space after a full sprint, leading to missed tackles ... passionate competitor but needs to keep his cool: he was caught on video sucker punching an Oregon State fan after the Ducks lost to their rivals (November 2022) ... missed four games because of injury over his final two seasons ... only one season of full-time starting-level snaps during his six years in college ... requires development time, which isn't ideal for a player who will be a 25-year-old rookie.

SUMMARY: A one-year starter at Oregon, Johnson was a stand-up edge rusher (field side) in head coach Dan Lanning's 3-4 base scheme. His development in college was stunted by several position switches, and he was essentially a two-way player in 2021 before becoming a full-time defensive starter in 2022 (led the Ducks in sacks). A member of Bruce Feldman's "Freaks List," Johnson is balanced at the point of attack and flashes the ability to leverage the edge. He is explosive through his lower body to pin his ears back and go, but he relies on speed and strength as a rusher and needs to introduce more thought and setup in his attack. Overall, Johnson has only average instincts and needs to round out his game, but he is long and explosive with a motor that runs hot. He has the physical profile of a scheme-versatile NFL player and offers upside despite his age.

GRADE: 4th-5th Round

22. THOMAS INCOOM | Central Michigan 6020 | 262 lbs. | 6SR Stone Mountain, Ga. (SM) 2/19/1999 (age 24.19) #9

BACKGROUND: Thomas Incoom was born and raised in the West African country of Ghana. When he was age 11, his family moved to the United States and settled in Stone Mountain (20 miles northeast of Atlanta). Incoom enrolled at Stone Mountain High School, where he played soccer (the only sport he was familiar with) as a freshman and sophomore. He never played a down of football until he joined the team as a sophomore as the kicker and punter. He transitioned to football full-time as a junior and led Kalb County in receptions (43) and scored six touchdowns as a tight end for a team that struggled to win games (finished 0-10). He earned second team All-County honors as a senior in 2016, posting 39 catches for 678 yards and five touchdowns. Incoom started dabbling on defense as a senior, seeing time at safety and defensive end.

A two-star recruit, Incoom was the No. 123 tight end in the 2017 recruiting class and the No. 301 recruit in Georgia. Playing for a high school program that won just one game over his junior and senior seasons, he went overlooked throughout the process. Incoom took visits to Georgia State and Troy but didn't have any Division I scholarship offers out of high school. He signed with Division II Valdosta State as a tight end before transitioning to the defensive line during his redshirt season. After four years with the Blazers' program, Incoom hoped to move up to the FBS and transferred to Central Michigan. He took advantage of the extra year of eligibility because of the COVID pandemic and returned to Central Michigan for his sixth college season in 2022. Incoom accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl.

PRO DAY	6021	265	33	9 1/8	79 1/4	-	-	-	-	-	4.33	7.10	- (stood on combine numbers)

STRENGTHS: Owns a workable frame with decent length and a stout upper half ... threatens the pocket with his quickness off the ball and above-average arc/pursuit speed ... presses his foot in the ground at the top of his rush to forcefully flatten ... effective club-rip move to power through the outside shoulder of blockers ... rushes with heavy hands and naturally converts his speed to power ... displays violent push-pull action ... strong edge setter in the run game and also able to stalk and finish cutback runners ... unwise to leave him unblocked from the backside ... physical, reliable tackler at contact ... competes with an underdog mentality and feeds off the doubters ... outstanding senior-year production.

WEAKNESSES: A tad light in his lower body (upper body much more impressive) ... pass-rush patching is underdeveloped, and his initial plan can be too easily delayed ... counter measures currently lack variety or precision ... hands don't have the same pop after the tackle makes first meaningful contact ... late to regroup when blockers knock him off his rush path ... doesn't offer much experience dropping in space ... only one season as a full-time starter at the Division I level ... will be 24 on draft weekend.

SUMMARY: A one-year starter at Central Michigan, Incoom lined up as an edge rusher in defensive coordinator Robb Akey's 4-2-5 base. A high school tight end who was new to football, he moved to pass rusher at Valdosta State and blossomed after transferring to Central Michigan, finishing as one of only four FBS players with at least 11.0 sacks and 18.0 tackles for loss in 2022. Despite seeing a lot of chips and extra attention, Incoom wins with the initial movements to get going quickly, attacking with a balanced blend of quickness, power and effort. However, he isn't overly creative and tends to rely more on his motor than instincts to break down blockers and get home. Overall, Incoom isn't known for his crafty counter measures, but he has the upfield athleticism and edge-setting presence to provide an NFL team value as both a pass rusher and run defender. His game is reminiscent of Dorance Armstrong, a useful edge rusher in an NFL rotation.

GRADE: 4th-5th Round

23. LONNIE PHELPS | Kansas 6023 | 244 lbs. | 4SR Cincinnati, Ohio (Mount Healthy) 8/24/2000 (age 22.68) #47

BACKGROUND: Lonnie Phelps Jr. started playing football at the pee-wee level as a defensive end and continued through middle school. He was mentored by his father (Lonnie Sr.), who helped him develop his pass-rush skills. He enrolled at Mount Healthy High School (same alma mater as Detroit Lions' running back David Montgomery), where he earned a starting role as a freshman. Phelps earned All-District honors as a sophomore with 46 tackles and a conference-best 9.0 sacks. As a junior, he was named the conference Defensive Player of the Year with 76 tackles, 10.0 sacks, four forced fumbles, three blocked kicks and one interception. Phelps earned first team All-State honors as a senior captain and was named the 2018 District Defensive Player of the Year. He finished his final season with 100 tackles, 18.0 tackles for loss, 10.0 sacks and four blocked kicks. Phelps also lettered in basketball at Mount Healthy.

A three-star recruit, Phelps was the No. 87 weakside defensive end in the 2019 recruiting class and the No. 61 recruit in Ohio. He was underrecruited and didn’t receive many serious looks from FBS programs. Phelps verbally committed to Miami (Ohio) as a junior and finished as the third highest-ranked recruit in the RedHawks’ 2019 class. After three years at Miami, he entered the transfer portal and received an offer from Kansas on the same day. Jayhawks head coach Lance Leipold was familiar with Phelps from his time coaching in the MAC (Phelps recorded his first collegiate sack in 2019 against Leipold’s Buffalo). Phelps was also pursued by Virginia Tech and several other programs, but he committed to Kansas and enrolled in January 2022. He accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl.

PRO DAY	6022	247	32	9 1/8	77 3/4	-	-	-	34	9’11”	4.51	7.28	- (stood on Combine runs and bench)

STRENGTHS: Bursts off the ball to race around the arc or fire through the B-gap ... attacks the corner with momentum and naturally low pads ... cat-like lateral quickness to work inside counters and effectively cross the face of blockers ... forces linemen to keep their feet moving, creating opportunities ... uses a swift swipe-rip move to clear the blocker’s outside shoulder ... violently chops at the quarterback’s arm once he reaches the pocket (see: strip sack on 2022 Kansas State tape) ... blows through arm blocks with his body lean and power ... agility helps him secure open-field tackles ... high-motor pursuit player and chases runs away from him ... plays with enduring toughness ... consistent production the last two seasons, at two different programs.

WEAKNESSES: Well-developed muscle tone but undersized with shorter-than-ideal arms ... inconsistent versus the run ... long-armed blockers will control him once they get into his frame ... rush success is more flash than consistency ... hands are active but not always purposeful ... overeager for contact and would benefit from more finesse in his game ... undisciplined tendencies, including seven penalties in 2022 (five offsides, one facemask, one unnecessary roughness) ... lack of length puts a dent in his tackling ... did more zone dropping after he transferred to Kansas, but it’s still new territory for him ... didn’t play on kick or punt teams in 2022.

SUMMARY: A one-year starter at Kansas, Phelps lined up at boundary defensive end in defensive coordinator Brian Borland’s 4-3 base scheme. After three seasons at Miami (Ohio), Phelps looked to challenge himself in a more talented conference and led the Jayhawks in sacks and tackles for loss. Phelps is quick off the ball and rushes with both speed and power, maneuvering his frame to force entry into the backfield from different angles. Though he plays with better physicality than bigger defenders, he needs to adapt more refined hands/timing as both a pass rusher and run defender to stay on the field. Overall, Phelps’ lack of size/length will be a limiting factor for him versus NFL competition, but he is a pesky player to block because of his get-off and menacing energy in pursuit. He projects as a scheme-versatile sub-rusher.

24. VILIAMI FEHOKO | San Jose State 6036 | 276 lbs. | SSR East Palo Alto, Calif. (Saint Francis) 12/16/1999 (age 23.36) #42

BACKGROUND: Viliami (Vill-ee-ah-me) “Junior” Fehoko (Feh-ho-coe) grew up in Stanford, Calif., in a Tongan family. He picked up football at age 8 at the Pop Warner level and continued playing throughout middle school. Though football was his first love, he also played rugby growing up and was a member of the East Palo Alto Razorbacks. Fehoko attended Saint Francis High School, a private school in Mountain View, Calif., where he was a three-year letterman and played both ways on offense (running back, tight end) and defense (defensive end, linebacker). He had his best season as a senior and led Saint Francis to an 11-4 record and the 2017 state championship. Fehoko posted 14.0 tackles for loss, 7.0 sacks and two forced fumbles, earning first team All-League and All-Bay Area honors.

A three-star recruit, Fehoko was the No. 68 tight end in the 2018 recruiting class and the No. 176 recruit in California. A late bloomer, his recruitment picked up after his junior season, and he received a pair of Pac-12 offers from Arizona and California. However, Fehoko developed a connection with San Jose State head coach Brent Brennan (also a Saint Francis graduate) and signed with the Spartans, staying close to home (15-minute drive from his high school). Fehoko has a widespread list of extended family members who played college athletics or in the NFL, including his second cousin Vita Vea, who was drafted in the first round (No. 12 overall) of the 2018 NFL Draft by the Tampa Bay Buccaneers. Fehoko accepted his invitation to the 2023 East-West Shrine Bowl.

STRENGTHS: Technically-focused edge defender with a diverse set of hand tactics ... punches, stabs and swipes are well-timed and efficient ... hands and feet stay in sync to sidestep blocks laterally and shave the corner ... plays with square, low pads to leverage his attack ... cleverly mixes up his pacing and uses both force and subtlety to keep blockers off balance ... always ball peeking with the vision to see through and around blocks ... relentless pursuit motor and makes plenty of effort plays on film ... physically and mentally tough and doesn’t appear to wear down ... outstanding backfield production, reaching 12.5 tackles for loss in each of the last three seasons (47.0 tackles for loss in 48 career games).

WEAKNESSES: Quick but not explosive ... inconsistent bend turning the corner gives blockers a target ... can be run upfield past the quarterback ... arm length is average, and long offensive tackles will reach him before he can make first contact ... stays glued to blocks when blockers engulf him ... struggles to handle extra attention and can be pushed around by doubles ... requires a moment to reignite his momentum after he sheds contact ... misses more tackles than he should because of the tightness in his body ... will turn 24 as an NFL rookie ... heavily penalized player over his career (five offsides and four roughing the passer penalties over the last two seasons).

SUMMARY: A four-year starter at San Jose State, Fehoko lined up as a defensive end in defensive coordinator Derrick Odum’s 3-4 base scheme. The Mountain West Defensive Player of the Year in 2022, he led the Spartans in tackles for loss each of the last three seasons, including a career-high 19.0 as a senior. He finished his career No. 2 in school history in tackles for loss (47.0) and No. 5 in sacks (23.0). With the hands to free himself as a pass rusher, Fehoko counters without thinking and always seems to have a backup plan for his backup plan. Though he diagnoses quickly and is urgent in his reaction to movement, his body tightness will leave him lingering on blocks. Overall, Fehoko is missing the top-tier athleticism and length most desire on the edge, but he will appeal to defensive coordinators because of his energetic play style and refined handwork. He projects as a backup and rotational base end in the NFL.

GRADE: 5th Round

25. MIKE MORRIS | Michigan 6051 | 275 lbs. | 4JR Belle Glade, Fla. (American Heritage) 4/22/2001 (age 22.01) #90

BACKGROUND: Michael “Mike” Morris Jr., who is the youngest of two children, grew up in a football family in “Muck City” (45 miles inland from West Palm Beach). He started playing football at the youth level and was coached by his father (his sister was often on the sidelines as the water girl). Morris originally attended Cardinal Newman High School, where he started on varsity as a freshman defensive end and tight end, posting 55 tackles, 26.5 tackles for loss and 13.0 sacks in 2015. Prior to his sophomore year, he transferred to American Heritage High School in Delray Beach (not to be confused with American Heritage High School in Plantation). Starting at defensive end and tight end, he recorded 84 tackles, 31.0 tackles for loss and 4.0 sacks as a junior. As a senior, Morris earned All-County honors for the fourth straight season and All-Area for the second straight year. He finished his final season with 92 tackles, 25.0 tackles for loss, 8.0 sacks, two forced fumbles and a blocked punt, which he returned for a touchdown. Morris also played basketball his freshman season in high school.

A three-star recruit, Morris was the No. 27 strongside defensive end in the 2019 recruiting class and the No. 48 recruit in Florida. As a Florida State legacy, he committed to the Seminoles as a freshman in February 2016. Two years later, Morris reopened his recruitment once more schools became interested, including Clemson and Oklahoma. He announced a final four of Florida State, Miami, Michigan and Tennessee before committing to the Wolverines the September of his senior season. His father (Mike Sr.) was an offensive guard at Florida State (1987-91). His mother (Melanie Bolden-Morris) is the principal at Glades Central High School. His older sister (Milan Bolden-Morris) played college basketball at Boston College (2017-20) and Georgetown (2020-22), leading the Hoyas in scoring as a senior. Growing up dreaming of being a quarterback, she was hired as a Michigan football graduate assistant prior to the 2022 season, becoming the first female football assistant in Big Ten history. Morris elected to skip his senior season and enter the 2023 NFL Draft.

STRENGTHS: Good-sized frame with long limbs and naturally strong hands ... adequate length to lock out as an edge setter ... tracks the football, unlocks from blocks and makes line-of-scrimmage stops ... nimble footwork and gets a jump at the snap ... natural knee bender to strike blockers from different angles ... quick to read blocks and deploy his hands (won’t predetermine his attack) ... uses an efficient swim-rip move to break contact ... flashes a burst to close and tackles with power behind his pads ... owns the grip strength to finish tackles once he makes contact ... only one penalty (offsides) in 2022 ... has some experience reducing over or inside the tackle to slip through the B-gap with quickness ... promising backfield production in 2022.

WEAKNESSES: Relatively thin lower half for a 275-pounder ... naturally plays high, and his pads get too upright in his rush ... bull rush tends to stall out because of poor explosion and inconsistent leverage points ... ineffective wrapping the corner because of marginal speed and tightness in his hips ... undeveloped counters and can be easily rejected ... impact goes quiet for stretches on tape and was part of a heavy rotation (averaged only 30.0 defensive snaps per game in 2022) ... showed up lighter and slower than expected at the combine ... below-average production on plays away from his square ... missed two games in his final season because of a high right ankle sprain (November 2022).

SUMMARY: A two-year starter at Michigan, Morris lined up as an edge defender in defensive coordinator Jesse Minter’s scheme and was flexed inside and on his feet. With Aidan Hutchinson and David Ojabo off to the NFL, he stepped up as the Wolverines’ top pass rusher in 2022 and led the team in pressures, sacks and tackles for loss, which earned him the Smith-Brown Big Ten Defensive Lineman of the Year Award. As a pass rusher, Morris accelerates quickly with his first two steps and jars blockers off balance with his hands, although his high pads tend to work against him. In the run game, he has the frame, length and active hands to hold the point and anchor, but his run production was underwhelming (averaged just 1.5 tackles per game over the last two seasons). Overall, Morris doesn’t currently rush with savvy and needs to broaden his assortment of moves, but he is a nimble-footed power rusher with the scheme-diverse traits to be a sound run defender. He has the talent to be a rookie rotational end with NFL starting upside.

GRADE: 5th Round

26. EKU LEOTA | Auburn 6030 | 252 lbs. | 5SR Asheville, N.C. (Asheville) 5/11/1999 (age 23.96) #55

BACKGROUND: Andrew “Eku” (ECK-ouu) Leota (LEE-oh-tuh), the second-oldest of five children, was born and raised in Western Samoa before his family moved to the United States in 2007 when he was age 7. He didn’t speak any English and went by “Andrew” instead of Eku through high school. The family settled in Asheville, where Leota started playing youth football in first grade. He continued playing through middle school and at Asheville High School, where he was a four-year letterman and starter as a defensive lineman, linebacker and tight end. As a senior, Leota earned All-Conference honors with 56 tackles, 15.0 tackles for loss and 7.0 sacks, adding 12 receptions for 267 yards and two touchdowns. He finished his prep career as Asheville’s all-time leader in sacks. Leota also lettered in basketball.

A three-star recruit, Leota was the No. 36 weakside defensive end in the 2018 recruiting class and the No. 24 recruit in North Carolina. He received a handful of Power 5 offers, including from Duke, North Carolina, Northwestern, Tennessee and Virginia Tech. After his junior season in March 2017, Leota committed to Northwestern, the alma mater of his maternal grandfather (Jim). After three seasons at Northwestern, he graduated with his degree in communications (December 2020) and entered the transfer portal. Leota committed to Auburn, where he played his final two seasons. His father (Petelo) played rugby in Samoa, and his mother (Molly) was a dancer. His older brother (Pika) was an offensive lineman at South Carolina (2016) and Division III Benedictine (2018-20), although he was academically ineligible in 2019. His younger brother (Tamatoa McDonough) is a rising junior defensive lineman at Yale. Eku also has two younger sisters (Osofa’i and Malieta). Leota accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl.

PRO DAY	6032	263	32 7/8	9 1/2	81 1/8	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	(no workout – left calf)

STRENGTHS: Quick off the ball with the hip/joint flexibility to skim the corner ... dips his inside shoulder to flatten and burst to the quarterback ... rushes with the pacing that makes it difficult for blockers to latch and control him ... extends and stays square in the run game to read through blocks ... keeps tabs on the football to retrace and find pursuit lanes ... rangy tackler with the hand strength to finish ball carriers from different angles ... moves with fluidity in space to redirect and cover a ton of ground ... doesn’t know how to play half-speed, and his hustle boosts the stat sheet ... outgoing personality and locker-room favorite among his teammates ... was on pace for back-to-back seasons with double-digit tackles for loss, prior to his 2022 injury.

WEAKNESSES: Just 10 career starts in five years in college ... needs to be more creative with his rush-move deployment and secondary answers ... rush speed will take him too far upfield and past the quarterback ... shed hands lack violence for sudden disengagements ... gap sound in the run game, but downhill teams in the NFL will present him with problems ... skill set should translate well to special teams, but he wasn’t a full-time teams guy in college ... missed the second half of his senior season because of a torn pectoral (October 2022), which required season-ending surgery; was unable to work out for NFL teams during the pre-draft process because of a strained left calf (March 2023).

SUMMARY: A two-year starter at Auburn, Leota played the “Stud” edge rusher position in former defensive coordinator Jeff Schmedding’s four-man front, rushing from both a two- and three-point stance. A Northwestern transfer, he became a full-time player as a senior at Auburn and was on the brink of a breakout season (5.0 tackles for loss in five games) when he was shut down because of injury. Leota might not be a sudden or crafty pass rusher, but he is limber and quick, and his hustle is incessant. He is a better run defender than expected with solid base technique and hand use, although his average build and power show when closely aligned. Overall, Leota tends to take long paths to the quarterback, but he holds his own versus the run and displays pass-rush tools worth examining and expanding. He projects best as a 3-4 stand-up outside linebacker in the NFL.

GRADE: 5th-6th Round

27. TYLER LACY | Oklahoma State 6043 | 279 lbs. | 5SR Sachse, Texas (Sachse) 11/10/1999 (age 23.46) #89

BACKGROUND: Tyler Lacy, who has an older sister, was born and raised in Garland, Texas (northeast of Dallas), where he started playing football at age 4. He attended Sachse High School, where he was a three-year letterman at defensive end and teammates with several future FBS athletes like Devin Duvernay (Baltimore Ravens). Lacy led Sachse to a 23-2 record over his final two seasons, going undefeated in the regular season. As a junior, he earned second team All-District honors with 34 tackles, 3.5 sacks and one forced fumble. As a senior, Lacy led the Mustangs to a 12-1 record and finished with 60 tackles, 11.0 tackles for loss, 6.0 sacks and two forced fumbles. He was named first team All-District after the 2017 season.

A three-star recruit, Lacy was the No. 42 strongside defensive end in the 2018 recruiting class and the No. 118 recruit in Texas. He received a dozen offers, including from several Texas-based schools like Houston, North Texas and SMU. Lacy’s first Power 5 offer came from Texas Tech, and he was ready to commit to the Red Raiders until he visited Oklahoma State. After that Stillwater visit, he committed to the Cowboys as a junior in April 2017. Although it had lightly recruited him through the process, Texas (Lacy’s “dream school”) reached out with an offer 24 hours before signing day. However, Lacy was fully committed and signed with Oklahoma State. His older sister (Azia) played basketball and decided to finish her degree at Oklahoma State once Tyler committed to the Cowboys. His cousin (Aaron Ross) won the Jim Thorpe Award at Texas and was a first-round pick (No. 20 overall) in the 2007 NFL Draft, playing nine seasons in the NFL and winning a pair of Super Bowl titles with the New York Giants. Lacy graduated with his degree in management (May 2022). He accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl.

STRENGTHS: Big, physical presence with functional length and huge hands ... first step is quick to threaten gaps or work laterally ... gets his momentum going downhill to jar blockers at contact ... frame is tough to redirect once he gains entry to gaps ... penetration creates clean-up opportunities for his teammates (see: safety on the 2022 Central Michigan tape) ... high-effort player, and his revving motor allows him to probe for vulnerable spots on the offensive line ... plays with a stout base and alert eyes to track, shed and chase the football ... strong hands to bully his way through contact, especially tight ends ... above-average experience (44 career starts) across the defensive line.

WEAKNESSES: Slightly top-heavy, and his tall pads are an issue upfield and laterally ... stiffness through his legs and hips show when he attempts to turn the corner versus athletic blockers ... inconsistent aiming points as a rusher leaves him off-balance and unable to access effective counters ... inside counters are segmented and predictable ... loses leverage in the run game and can be turned by bigger blockers ... lackluster production (tackles and sacks) over his career ... durability isn't a concern, but he missed the final four games of the 2022 season (left ankle).

SUMMARY: A four-year starter at Oklahoma State, Lacy was a versatile defensive lineman in former defensive coordinator Derek Mason's scheme, splitting his time on the edge, over the tackle and inside as a three-technique. He was a staple on the Cowboys' defensive line the last four seasons, starting 40 straight games before his late-season injury as a senior in 2022. As a run defender, Lacy shows the ability to lock out, read and disengage to make stops in the hole, although he can be controlled by blockers when he plays tall (which is often). As a pass rusher, he doesn't have the bend to consistently capture the corner, but he forces his way into gaps and his motor directly leads to backfield disruption. Overall, Lacy must develop improved pad level to find success against NFL tackles, but he is a scheme-diverse prospect with the frame, quickness and intensity to play up and down the line. He projects best as a rotational base end capable of reducing inside.

28. ROBERT BEAL JR. | Georgia

6036 | 247 lbs. | 6SR

Duluth, Ga. (Peachtree Ridge)

#33

BACKGROUND: Robert “RJ” Beal Jr. grew up in Cordele (South Georgia) and primarily played basketball in his younger days. (He was also an avid bowler). But after he continued to foul out, he made the switch to football in the sixth grade. Beal, who was home schooled, started out playing offensive tackle, wide receiver and tight end, but he preferred the defensive side of the ball because of the physicality. He attended Norcross High School, where he recorded 19 tackles, 12.0 tackles for loss and 3.5 sacks as a sophomore. As a junior, Beal finished with 35 tackles, 11.0 tackles for loss, 5.0 sacks and two forced fumbles. For his senior season, he transferred to IMG Academy in Bradenton, Fla in May 2016. However, he wanted to return closer to home and transferred to Peachtree Ridge High School in Gwinnett County midway through his senior season. Beal lettered in track at Norcross and won regional titles with personal bests in the shot put (50 feet 9 inches) and discus (146-3).

A four-star recruit, Beal was the No. 8 weakside defensive end in the 2017 recruiting class and the No. 11 recruit in Georgia. With over three dozen scholarship offers, he had his choice of almost every program in the country, including Alabama, Florida State, Clemson, LSU, Michigan, Ohio State, Stanford, Texas and USC. He initially committed to Notre Dame during his junior season in November 2015, but he decommitted a few months later and took visits to Florida State, North Carolina, South Carolina and Tennessee. Ultimately, Beal described himself as a “hometown kid” and committed to Georgia. He had planned to graduate high school early for early enrollment, but his multiple transfers during his senior year delayed his admissions process. Beal signed with the Bulldogs (part of the same signing class as Andrew Thomas, D’Andre Swift and Eric Stokes) but wasn’t ruled academically eligible until August 2017. Frustrated with his lack of playing time, he entered the transfer portal after the 2019 season, but he decided to stay in Athens. Beal took advantage of the extra year of eligibility granted by the NCAA because of the pandemic and returned for a sixth season at Georgia in 2022. He accepted his invitation to the 2023 East-West Shrine Bowl.

STRENGTHS: Looks the part with enviable size, musculature and length ... first-step burst and stride acceleration gets him going where he wants in a hurry (blazing 4.44 40-yard dash at the combine) ... able to attack/slap the outside hand of blockers and then flatten to the quarterback ... effective counter punching to grab/pull blockers off balance ... displays lateral quicks to shake pulling blocks and crash down on plays ... comfortable peeling off with loose hips to drop, redirect and chase down plays ... engulfs ball carriers with his massive wingspan, forcing runners to widen out ... hand strength is evident as an edge setter when he properly locks out ... makes plays on special-teams coverages.

WEAKNESSES: Undeveloped pass-rush sequence ... quick to shoot his hands, but struggles to work off his initial attack ... rush moves are sporadic and often mistimed ... tends to be a half-tick late with his play development ... needs to see through blockers to leverage the ball carrier behind him ... stack-and-shed skills need to be more violent and sudden ... expected more chase-down tackles on his tape considering his speed ... was arrested (along with former teammate Brenton Cox) on a misdemeanor charge of marijuana possession (April 2019) ... will be age 24 as a rookie ... below-average production on his college resume with just 10 starts over six seasons.

SUMMARY: A part-time player at Georgia, Beal lined up at outside linebacker in co-defensive coordinator Will Muschamp's 3-4 base scheme. A former top recruit, he struggled to find consistent playing time throughout his career on the Bulldogs' loaded depth chart, which hindered his development. Beal's tape is an enticing yet frustrating watch, because the tools are there for him to make a greater impact, but he doesn't have an instinctive feel for how to maximize his gifts. Right now, he is at his best using his quickness and length to stay clean, scrape and crash down on the ball. Overall, Beal is raw with his pass-rush setup and execution versus the run, but he has the size/speed profile and splash plays that suggest he could be a better pro than college player. He is worth the gamble somewhere in the middle of Day 3 of the draft.

GRADE: 5th-6th Round

29. ANDRE CARTER II | Army 6064 | 256 lbs. | 4SR Missouri City, Texas (Cheshire Academy) 3/28/2000 (age 23.08) #34

BACKGROUND: Andre Carter II, the youngest of five siblings, played multiple sports throughout his childhood, joining the football team at age 6. His high school career started in California, where he attended Vista Murrieta High School, playing wide receiver and tight end for two seasons on the freshman and JV teams. Carter’s family moved to Missouri City, Texas (20 miles southwest of Houston) prior to his junior season, and he enrolled at Ridge Point High School. However, he struggled to see the field as he was blocked on the tight end depth chart behind Mustapha Muhammad, who was one of the top tight end recruits in the country and later signed with Michigan. For his senior season, Carter transferred to Westbury Christian School, a private school in Houston, but he fractured his back three games into the 2017 season and was shut down. With very little interest from colleges, Carter sought out a prep school, and he moved to Connecticut to attend Cheshire Academy for a fifth high school season. He started the year as a wide receiver and tight end before becoming a two-way player and blossoming as an outside linebacker. Carter also played basketball in high school.

A two-star recruit, Carter wasn’t ranked nationally by the recruiting services and went overlooked by most FBS programs because of limited high school tape. He received scholarship offers from several FCS programs in the Patriot (Fordham, Lafayette) and Ivy (Cornell) leagues. But he committed to Army (his first offer) after outside linebackers coach John Loose visited Cheshire and saw Carter’s potential up close. Carter chose Army over Air Force and was one of the lowest-ranked recruits in the Black Knights’ 2019 class. He played only a handful of snaps as a freshman as he developed his body and adjusted both to Academy life and playing defense. He accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl (second player in Army history to participate).

STRENGTHS: Tall, angular body type with terrific arm length ... has the frame to add additional mass/strength ... uses a long first step to quickly enter his rush and challenge the corner ... flexible ankles and lower body to bend mid-rush ... unleashes a cross-swipe or cross-club to soften his outside path ... shows a quick lateral stride or spin move to access inside rush paths ... nonstop in his pursuit and sustains his effort through the whistle ... soft-spoken by nature, but his coaches say he gradually came out of his shell (Army linebacker coach John Loose: “He’s becoming more of a leader in the room. Brings up good questions. Just does everything you want.”) ... was only 200 pounds as a senior in high school and has worked hard to add weight ... set the school record for sacks in a season (15.5) in 2021 and ranks No. 2 in Army history with 20.0 career sacks

WEAKNESSES: Underpowered and will need time to develop his muscle mass in his upper and lower body ... hands/clubs are quick but need to get stronger and more precise ... rushes tall and allows blockers to get underneath him, disrupting his balance ... not currently equipped to counter multiple blockers ... lacks a stout base and can be moved by tight ends ... undisciplined contain responsibilities, and his eagerness to chase down plays will take him out of position ... run instincts are still a work in progress, and he can be fooled by misdirection ... often dropped in space in college but doesn’t have the anticipation or awareness to make plays in coverage ... missed two games as a senior because of injury and had a nagging right hamstring injury during the combine ... sack production plummeted in 2022, and he was held without a sack in eight of 10 games he played that year.

SUMMARY: A two-year starter at Army, Carter was a stand-up outside linebacker (DAWG position) to the boundary in defensive coordinator Nate Woody’s 3-4 base scheme. Primarily an offensive player until his prep year in 2018, he evolved from a third-down rusher to an every-down player in 2021 and finished No. 2 in the FBS (behind Will Anderson Jr.) with a school-record 15.5 sacks, becoming Army’s first All-American in 31 years. A stretched-out, fluid athlete, Carter uses his long strides to burst off the ball and challenge the edge with his arc acceleration. He displays the speed and motor to chase down ball carriers, but he needs to get stronger at the point of attack and develop his body power (as a rusher and run stopper). Overall, Carter will require time in an NFL strength program and needs to learn how to deal with extra attention from blockers, but he is an agile athlete with terrific length and effort, which is a great foundation for a developing pass rusher. He has down-the-road potential and will require a patient staff who can mold his game. Army hasn’t had a player drafted in the top 200 picks in the Super Bowl era.

30. TAVIUS ROBINSON | Ole Miss 6061 | 257 lbs. | 5SR Guelph, Ontario (Guelph) 1/3/1999 (age 24.32) #95

BACKGROUND: Tavius (tay-VEE-us) Robinson, who is one of three children, was born and raised in Guelph, Ontario, which is about an hour west of Toronto. Growing up, he was introduced to football by his father (Patrick) and started playing at age 10. His uncle (Junior) was drafted in the second round (No. 11 overall) of the 1983 CFL Draft by the Ottawa Rough Riders and played defensive back for 10 years in the CFL (1983-92). For high school, Tavius enrolled at Guelph Collegiate Vocational Institute, where he saw the field early as a freshman. After earning Division All-Star honors as a sophomore, he led Guelph Collegiate to back-to-back conference titles over his final two seasons. As a senior, Robinson posted 11.0 sacks and was named the 2017 District MVP and Lineman of the Year. He also lettered in basketball and track at Guelph, setting personal bests in the shot put (12.18 meters), discus (21.73 meters), javelin (21.53 meters) and long jump (4.58 meters).

After high school, Canadians hoping to continue playing football look to get a scholarship at a “U Sports” School. Robinson had several options but wished to stay close to home and signed with the University of Guelph, where he registered 26 tackles and 5.0 sacks as a freshman. As a sophomore, he was named second team All-Stars honors with 39 tackles, 11.5 tackles for loss and 8.5 sacks. Robinson planned to continue playing at Guelph before attempting a professional career in the Canadian Football League. However, the 2020 season was canceled because of the pandemic and Robinson didn’t want his development to be stunted. He put together a highlight reel for schools in the United States and almost immediately heard from dozens of FBS programs. Robinson interviewed with coaches over Zoom (he wasn't allowed to visit schools because of travel restrictions) and received scholarship offers from LSU, Michigan State and Mississippi State. Ole Miss was the first school to offer him a scholarship, though, and he signed with the Rebels. The process played out over a matter of weeks — Robinson quit his part-time job at 1-800-Got-Junk? and moved to a different country a week before fall workouts. Robinson took advantage of the extra year of eligibility granted by the NCAA because of the pandemic and returned to the Rebels for his fifth season in 2022. He graduated with his degree in multi-disciplinary studies. Robinson accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl.

STRENGTHS: Passes the eye test with his long, angular physique ... still has room to add another 10-15 pounds of quality weight ... breaks out a swipe/club move or physical chop to clear blocker's hands and squeeze the gap ... able to weaponize his hands when he plays with his weight behind him and his timing is right ... still learning how to best use his flexibility, but we know he can bend ... good foot quickness to work laterally or get free on stunts ... long arms played a part in his FBS-best five forced fumbles in 2022 ... even-keeled and grounded by nature (voted a team captain in 2022) ... production improved each season, and his game is currently on the ascent.

WEAKNESSES: Looks tall and plays tall ... blockers are able to out-leverage him and soften his anchor ... choppy, narrow steps off the ball will bog down his ability to burst ... body control looks much better in space compared to when he is locked up ... needs to continue strengthening his frame for better shed-blocking efficiency ... can be driven from his spot in the run game ... will already be 24 on draft weekend ... battled through a right knee injury in 2021, including missing two games, and required a "clean-up" procedure in the offseason.

SUMMARY: A one-year starter at Ole Miss, Robinson lined up at defensive end in former defensive coordinator Chris Partridge's 4-2-5 base scheme. He always planned on playing in his hometown in Ontario before taking a crack at the CFL, and he didn't seriously consider playing in the U.S. until the pandemic, which led him to Ole Miss. Robinson flashes violence in his rush moves and complements his long, rangy frame with the foot quickness to work around blockers. However, his rush instincts are underdeveloped and his untrained hand usage leaves him out-leveraged and late to disengage. Overall, Robinson is currently incomplete as a pass rusher and underpowered versus the run, but his game is trending in the right direction and NFL coaching should continue to unlock his skills. He projects as a rotational defensive end.

GRADE: 6th Round

31. JOSE RAMIREZ | Eastern Michigan 6017 | 242 lbs. | 6SR Lake Alfred, Fla. (Auburndale) 5/9/1999 (age 23.97) #4

BACKGROUND: Jose Ramirez, who is one of six children (five boys, one girl), was raised by his mother (Magalie Edouard), who immigrated to the United States from Haiti. He didn't start playing football until eighth grade and was initially a wide receiver and cornerback. Ramirez enrolled at Auburndale High School and moved from cornerback to safety for his sophomore season. He transitioned to a nickel and linebacker role for his final two seasons and led Auburndale to the playoffs in 2016. Ramirez earned second team All-State honors as a senior with 114 tackles, 6.5 tackles for loss, 0.5 sack, one forced fumble and a blocked punt. He was credited with 148 tackles in his prep career. Ramirez also lettered in basketball at Auburndale.

A three-star recruit, Ramirez was the No. 117 outside linebacker in the 2017 recruiting class and the No. 238 recruit in Florida. He received mostly MAC (Bowling Green, Northern Illinois) and Sun Belt (South Alabama, Troy) offers, and he originally committed to South Alabama after his senior year. However, Arizona entered the picture shortly before signing day and turned out to be his only Power 5 offer. Ramirez flipped to the Wildcats and enrolled early in January 2017. Ramirez redshirted in 2017, but then Rich Rodriguez was fired as head coach and replaced by Kevin Sumlin. After conversations with the new coaching staff, Ramirez didn't like the "fit" and elected to transfer. To avoid sitting out a season, he went the juco route and played the 2018 season at Riverside City College (outside of Los Angeles). In 12 games, Ramirez posted 44 tackles, 8.0 sacks and one forced fumble. He transferred to Eastern Michigan in May 2019 as a defensive end. Ramirez took advantage of the extra year of eligibility granted by the NCAA because of the pandemic and returned to Eastern Michigan for a sixth season in 2022. He accepted his invitation to the 2023 East-West Shrine Bowl.

PRO DAY	6022	252	32 3/4	9	79 1/4	-	-	-	-	-	4.47	-	- (stood on combine numbers)

STRENGTHS: Fluid with the hip flexibility to work tight spaces (his 6.95-second three-cone and 4.30 short shuttle were No. 1 among all edge rushers at the combine) ... uses shoulder dip and rip to soften the edge of blockers ... quick-footed to cross-face blocks and splice gaps ... timing and burst help him pry open pocket doors on stunts and loops ... throws his hands around with heft, jarring blockers at contact ... retraces to find the ball carrier in the run game ... unloads as a tackler and is a dependable finisher ... voted a senior captain, and his coaches rave about his character (he gave up his spot for the pregame coin flip to give other seniors the experience) ... led EMU in sacks, tackles for loss and forced fumbles as a junior and again as a senior.

WEAKNESSES: Undersized and lacks ideal height, weight and length ... can be bounced and controlled by tackles and tight ends on the edge ... doesn't get consistent push at the point of attack and his play strength is average ... struggles to break contact once run blockers steer him ... NFL blockers will be able to give his speed-to-power moves a lot more resistance ... guilty of leaving early when trying to time the snap (six total penalties in 2022) ... was an upfield player in college and wasn't asked to drop in space ... will be 24 as a rookie.

SUMMARY: A two-year starter at Eastern Michigan, Ramirez played an edge-rushing role in former defensive coordinator Neal Neathery's four-man front. After not putting his hand in the ground until juco, he was consistently productive in Ypsilanti with 31.5 tackles for loss in 25 games the last two seasons, leading the FBS in sacks per game (1.0) in 2022. With his arc athleticism and active hands to adjust mid-play, Ramirez rushes like a mad man, and it's a matter of when, not if, he finds his way to the pocket. He can be engulfed and lose contain as an edge setter, but his natural instincts usually lead him to the football in pursuit. Overall, offenses will find success running to his side of the field, but Ramirez gets the quarterback off schedule with his relentless pass-rush sequence. He projects best standing up as a rotational edge rusher.

GRADE: 6th Round

32. CALEB MURPHY | Ferris State 6032 | 254 lbs. | SSR Dowagiac, Mich. (Union) 12/15/1999 (age 23.37) #12

BACKGROUND: Caleb Murphy, one of four boys, grew up in the small, southwest Michigan town of Dowagiac (5,600 population) and started playing football at age 7. He attended Dowagiac Union High School, where he was a three-year varsity letterman, playing on offense (wide receiver), defense (linebacker and defensive end) and as a return man on special teams. As a junior in 2016, Murphy posted 86 tackles, 17.0 tackles for loss and 15.0 sacks, earning All-State, All-Region and All-Conference honors. He led Dowagiac to the playoffs as a senior and finished with 97 tackles, 27.0 tackles for loss and 13.0 sacks, again taking home All-State, All-Region and All-Conference honors. Murphy also had 11 touchdown receptions and scored a touchdown six different ways during his final season (receiving, rushing, passing, interception, fumble recovery, punt return). He lettered in five total sports in high school: baseball, basketball, football, track and wrestling, and he was named the Dowagiac Male Athlete of the Year in 2018. In his final season, he led the basketball team in scoring (12.5 points per game) and was one of the best wrestlers in the area in the 189- and 215-pound divisions (both sports were played in the winter). In track, Murphy set personal bests in the 200 meters (26.14 seconds), high jump (5 feet 8 inches), long jump (19-6), shot put (31-9.5) and discus (119-4).

A no-star recruit, Murphy wasn't ranked by recruiting services and went widely overlooked by FBS programs, mostly because of his size (210 pounds) and his smaller high school (graduating class of 72 students). He received a handful of Division II offers, including Davenport, Ferris State, Grand Valley State, Lenoir-Rhyne and Saginaw Valley State. Murphy visited Michigan State and received one FBS offer (Air Force), but he opted to sign with Grand Valley State as an edge rusher. (He also received a few walk-on opportunities but wanted the guaranteed scholarship.) After two seasons, he transferred to Ferris State, but the 2020 season was canceled because of the pandemic. Murphy set several NCAA, Division II and school records over his two seasons at Ferris State while also leading the program to back-to-back Division II championships. His younger brother (Cailyn) also joined Ferris State in 2020 as a wide receiver. Murphy graduated with his bachelor's degree. He accepted his invitation to the 2023 East-West Shrine Bowl.

PRO DAY	6032	263	32 3/8	10 1/4	79	-	-	-	31	-	-	-	17 (stood on combine runs, broad, shuttles)

STRENGTHS: Displays natural pass-rush instincts ... runs the arc with thought and urgency to stay free from blocks ... has a few “go-to” moves, including a jab-jump through to the outside with a club-rip ... large hands are physical and non-passive ... sets up blockers with an inside counter to disrupt weight transfer ... dips his body around the reach of blockers ... always keeps tabs on the football to retrace and let his motor clean up plays ... exceptional production with 60.5 tackles for loss, 40.0 sacks and eight forced fumbles in 29 games at Ferris State ... became the first Ted Hendricks Award winner to play outside of the FBS.

WEAKNESSES: Undersized with middling arm length and play strength ... posted below-average athletic testing numbers during the pre-draft process ... first step is solid but not exceptional ... stiff punches can rock him off his rush path ... speed-to-power conversions will meet quick resistance against pros ... not going to out-physical NFL offensive tackles with his hands ... average base strength and can be locked up or moved by drive blocks ... reactive athleticism for sudden direction change is lacking ... all of his experience has come against Division II competition.

SUMMARY: A two-year starter at Ferris State, Murphy lined up as an edge rusher in defensive coordinator Ryan Hodges' attacking scheme. A five-sport athlete in high school, he led Ferris State to back-to-back Division II national titles the last two seasons and had a record-breaking senior year, leading the NCAA in tackles for loss (39.0) and sacks (25.5). The latter number broke Terrell Suggs' all-divisions single-season NCAA sack record. A light-framed and peppy rusher, Murphy uses natural dip to get underneath the reach of blockers and credits his ability to play close to the ground from wrestling most of his life. He needs to continue developing his strength and prove he can mix up his pass rush against higher-quality offensive linemen. Overall, Murphy is missing twitchy explosion and power in his pass rush, but he is slippery and instinctive with the backfield production that cannot be ignored (even if it did come against Division II competition). He is a draft-and-develop rotational pass rusher.

33. HABAKKUK BALDONADO | Pittsburgh 6042 | 251 lbs. | 5SR Rome, Italy (Clearwater) 9/6/1999 (age 23.64) #87

BACKGROUND: Habakkuk (HA-buh-kook) “Haba” Baldonado (bal-do-NAH-dough), the oldest of two boys, was born and raised in Rome, where his mother (Paola Franceschelli) worked for the United Nations. He grew up playing soccer, as well as swimming and judo. When he was age 13, Baldonado developed an itch for American football and joined the Lazio Marines, a nearby club team. After six months as a promising wide receiver, he stopped playing because of the travel and time commitments and returned to soccer and mixed martial arts. Three years later, at age 16, Baldonado (who could now drive himself and pay for expenses) gave football another chance and moved to defensive end. He separated himself as one of the best players in the league and was selected to Italy’s junior national team. One of his coaches connected him with Clearwater Academy International, a high school football program in Clearwater, Fla., and he moved to the United States for his senior season (he is fluent in English, Italian and Spanish). Despite missing four games because of an elbow injury, Baldonado posted 83 tackles, 30.5 sacks and nine forced fumbles in 2017, adding nine catches for 220 yards and two touchdowns at wide receiver.

A three-star recruit, Baldonado was the No. 51 weakside defensive end in the 2018 recruiting class and the No. 127 recruit in Florida. He only expected to be in the United States for six months to play his senior year of high school, but he garnered legitimate Division I interest. A late addition to the recruiting radar, Baldonado originally committed to Coastal Carolina and was ready to send in his papers on early signing day, but his coaches convinced him to be patient as other schools started to take notice. In the month leading up to the February signing day, Baldonado picked up FBS offers from Illinois, Michigan State, Nebraska, Syracuse and UCF. He decided to sign with Pittsburgh because of his comfort with the coaching staff (direct flights to Italy from the Pittsburgh International Airport played a factor, as well). His father (Edgar) passed away in a motorcycle accident in 2012. Baldonado, who is in the United States on an F-1 student visa, was forced to turn down NIL deals to comply with the restrictions of his international visa. He accepted his invitation to the 2023 East-West Shrine Bowl.

PRO DAY	6044	251	33	10 3/8	79	-	-	-	-	-	4.39	7.00	- (stood on Combine runs, jumps, bench)

STRENGTHS: Looks the part with his broad, sturdy frame ... flashes the strength in his upper body to toss blockers ... extends to lock out, stay square and set a physical edge in the run game ... able to spill outside runs ... outstanding play motor in the run game to wriggle free and pursue the ball ... hands are heavy and well-timed at the top of the rush to combat the reach of blockers ... showed improvement keeping his hands, hips and feet on the same page to execute rush moves ... can be a battering ram when needed ... forceful tackler and brings his hips/feet to strike through the ball carrier ... tough as nails and well-liked in the Pitt program.

WEAKNESSES: Heavy-legged, upright rusher ... slow off the snap and doesn’t gain enough ground with his first step ... average arc speed, and his rush moves are based more on force than nuance ... appears herky-jerky in his redirect and doesn’t have the range to chase down many ball carriers away from the line of scrimmage ... late to locate backside pulls and tends to think too much ... durability will be a question mark after he missed most of the 2020 season because of a leg injury and battled a knee injury as a senior (November 2022); tore ligaments in his left elbow (September 2017) and missed the first four games of his senior year of high school ... production dropped off his senior year.

SUMMARY: A two-year starter at Pittsburgh, Baldonado was the field defensive end in head coach Pat Narduzzi’s 4-3 base scheme. Born and raised in Rome, he showed flashes over his first three years in the program before his breakout season in 2021 (led the team with 9.5 sacks). However, his senior year fell short of expectations. Baldonado has the size, motor and functional strength to stalemate blocks at the point of attack and do his job in the run game. He is a rigid, high-cut pass rusher, though, and doesn’t win quickly. Overall, Baldonado can wear down blockers with his play strength and heavy hands, but he has a noticeable lack of twitch in his movements and his pass rush currently lacks sophistication. He is a potential backup run defender in the NFL.

GRADE: 6th-7th Round

34. BJ THOMPSON | Stephen F. Austin 6056 | 243 lbs. | 6SR England, Ark. (England) 3/23/1999 (age 24.09) #48

BACKGROUND: Brandon “BJ” Thompson grew up outside of Little Rock in central Arkansas and started playing football in second grade, lining up at multiple positions, including wide receiver and defensive back. He also played basketball growing up for the Arkansas Dream Team. He attended England High School, where he was a multi-sport standout. Thompson was a starting cornerback on varsity as a freshman before moving to linebacker and into more of a pass-rush role while also playing receiver and tight end. As a junior, he posted 42 receptions for 677 yards (16.1 average) and 10 touchdowns, adding 91 tackles, 13.0 sacks and one interception (returned for a touchdown) in 2015. As a 200-pound senior, Thompson helped lead England to a 14-1 record and the 2016 2A state semifinals with 37 catches for 601 yards (16.2 average) and 10 touchdowns. On defense, he finished with 16.5 tackles for loss, 7.5 sacks and a pair of interceptions (one returned for a touchdown). Thompson earned All-State honors on both offense and defense. He was a four-sport standout, also starring in basketball, baseball, and track. Thompson won the state title in the triple jump three straight years, including a personal best of 46 feet 7 inches as a senior. He also set personal bests in the 110-meter hurdles (17.66 seconds), 300-meter hurdles (46.13), high jump (6-4) and long jump (22-11.5).

A three-star recruit, Thompson was the No. 58 athlete in the 2017 recruiting class and the No. 7 recruit in Arkansas. He received college offers for basketball and track as well, but his best opportunities were in football with some teams looking at him on defense and others as a tight end. As a junior, Thompson initially committed to Washington State, which was one of his first offers, but decommitted two months later. He considered offers from Florida State, Texas and Utah before signing with Baylor as part of head coach Matt Rhule’s first recruiting class in Waco (same class as Jalen Pitre and Abram Smith). After the 2018 season, Thompson was dismissed from the school because of a failed drug test and returned home to Arkansas. Thompson transferred to Stephen F. Austin of the FCS and joined the team for the 2020 season. His older brother (Blake Mack) played tight end at Arkansas State (2014-17) and had a brief stint with the Kansas City Chiefs as an undrafted free agent. Thompson accepted his invitation to the 2023 East-West Shrine Bowl.

STRENGTHS: Long-limbed, stretched out frame ... flexible-jointed with the movement skills to bend, spin and slither around blockers ... fast out of the gates with a quick get-off and long arc strides ... dips his shoulder to skim the corner ... bursts to close when he has a clear track to the quarterback ... active feet and frenetic body/limb movements keep his pass rush alive ... occasionally uses his long arms for quick stabs/jabs ... has the foot quicks and change of direction to drop and use his range to cover ground ... five forced fumbles over the last two seasons are a result of his long arms ... had the special-teams trifecta in 2018 at Baylor with a blocked, punt, field goal and extra point.
WEAKNESSES: Very slender body type and especially light in his legs and lower half ... has always been lean (200 pounds as a high school senior) and might struggle to carry additional weight or develop strength ... poor run defender and has a tough time at the point of attack versus bigger bodies ... needs to more effectively use his length to leverage blocks for quick disengagement ... high-cut and his pads quickly rise throughout the rep, especially on inside counters ... highly inconsistent when his first move is shut down and counters don't come naturally ... doesn't create enough energy to consistently convert his speed to power ... immature decision making in the past; served a two-game suspension to start the 2018 season at Baylor and then was ultimately dismissed ... will be age 24 on draft weekend.
SUMMARY: A three-year starter at Stephen F. Austin, Thompson was an edge rusher in defensive coordinator Joe Cauthen's four-man front. After showing promising flashes at Baylor, he was a very active rusher in the FCS (27.5 tackles for loss in 31 starts) and had a productive showing during East-West Shrine Bowl practices. A speed-based rusher, Thompson races blockers to the spot and shows exceptional muscle twitch and closing burst to the quarterback. His rush is more crazed than nuanced, and the lack of power in his base/body is a red flag, especially when attempting to set the edge. Overall, Thompson is currently a liability as a run defender, but his speed and length make him a tough guy to keep blocked when he stays under controlled mid-rush. He is a developmental subpackage rusher (reminiscent of Arden Key) but will require time on the practice squad before he is ready for live NFL reps.

35. ALI GAYE | LSU 6060 | 263 lbs. | 5SR Lynnwood, Wash. (Edmonds-Woodway) 11/29/1998 (age 24.41) #11

BACKGROUND: Ali (Ah-lee) Gaye, who is one of three children, was born in the Republic of Gambia, a small coastal country in West Africa about the size of Connecticut (smallest country on the African mainland). His father (Omar) immigrated to the United States in 2007, and the rest of the family joined him four years later (September 2011) when Ali was age 12 and his mother (Afsatou Jallow) applied for asylum. The family settled in Lynnwood, a suburb of Seattle with a well-represented Gambian population. Having grown up playing soccer in Africa, Gaye continued playing (midfield and defender) in the U.S., and he also discovered basketball and wrestling in middle school. At the urging of the coaches, he tried football for the first time in eighth grade and played offensive guard and defensive end. Gaye enrolled at Edmonds-Woodway High School, where he continued playing football on both sides of the ball. After a five-inch growth spurt as a freshman, he became a varsity starter as a sophomore and started to take the sport seriously. Gaye earned All-Conference honors as a defensive end each of his final three seasons while also seeing action on the offensive line and at tight end. He lived with his high school coach (John Gradwohl) during high school after his parents' home was damaged from a small fire. Gaye also lettered in basketball at Edmonds-Woodway.

A three-star recruit, Gaye was the No. 35 strongside defensive end in the 2017 recruiting class and the No. 10 recruit in Washington (highest-ranked defensive recruit in the state). He received several Power 5 offers, including from Cal, Louisville, Ole Miss, Washington and Washington State, and he committed to the Huskies as a grayshirt. However, Gaye was behind in his academics and didn't have the SAT scores to qualify. Instead, he attended Arizona Western College, where he played in 11 games in 2018. After the program shut down in December 2018, Gaye decided to follow head coach Tom Minnick, who took the head coaching job at Garden City Community College in west Kansas. He earned All-Conference honors in 2019 with 44 tackles. A three-star juco recruit, Gaye ranked as the No. 19 juco recruit nationally and received offers from Iowa State, Kansas State, LSU, Nebraska and Oklahoma. He felt an immediate connection to Baton Rouge, verbally committed in June 2019 and officially signed in December 2019. Gaye was one of the lowest-ranked recruits in LSU's 2020 recruiting class (20th out of 22 signees) and enrolled in January 2020 (he was in attendance for LSU's national championship victory in January 2020). He is a devout Muslim and speaks six languages (grew up speaking Wolof and Fulani and didn't learn English until he moved to the United States). Gaye graduated with his degree in interdisciplinary studies (August 2022). He opted out of the 2022 bowl game and accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl.

STRENGTHS: Looks the part with his long frame, athletic build and room to continue adding mass ... adequate initial quickness and able to threaten the corner from wide alignment ... flashes a speed-swipe move to propel him around the outside shoulder of blockers ... able to dip, bob and weave around blocks to make plays in the backfield ... works hard to keep contain ... long strider and runs well to string runs outside or chase down plays ... shows a knack for knocking down throws at the line of scrimmage ... length helps him lasso ball carriers as a tackler ... dependable effort versus the run and pass ... voted a 2022 team captain and “works his tail off” to soak up everything he can, according to his coaches.

WEAKNESSES: Doesn’t explode out of his stance, and his snap anticipation must improve ... rush hands lack thump or creativity ... not comfortable countering once blocked ... struggles to convert speed to power ... pops upright at engagement and can be thrown off his game by physical blockers, including tight ends ... not a violent shedder and often is late reacting to runs in his gap ... inconsistent backfield vision slows his read/react skills ... lacks twitch or suddenness in his redirect ... struggles to break down in a phone booth and missed backfield tackles are maddening ... bad habit of leading with his helmet on sack attempts ... missed most of the 2021 season after suffering a labrum injury (October 2021) that required surgery; injured right hamstring during position drills at the combine (March 2023).

SUMMARY: A three-year starter at LSU, Gaye was the field defensive end in defensive coordinator Matt House’s four-man front, lining up with his hand on the ground as a five- or seven-technique. Born and raised in the Republic of Gambia, he was late to the game (started playing in eighth grade), and it shows. His development wasn’t helped by having three different defensive coordinators in his three seasons in Baton Rouge — he finished with more career pass breakups (9) than sacks (7) at LSU. Although his pass rush stalls too quickly, Gaye flashes the quickness to penetrate gaps or win on an outside track when he keeps his hands and hips in sync. He has the athleticism to contain outside runs, but he lacks violence or suddenness against point-of-attack blocks and can be too easily controlled in the run game. Overall, Gaye owns a long, limber body type with the physical traits worth developing, but he is fundamentally raw and must better understand how to maximize his size/speed tools. He has been banged up over his career and needs to stay available to stick on an NFL roster.

36. MJ ANDERSON | Iowa State

6021 | 269 lbs. | 4JR

St. Louis, Mo. (Christian Brothers)

1/15/2001 (age 22.28)

#3

BACKGROUND: MJ Anderson, who has two sisters, was born and raised in St. Louis. He attended Christian Brothers College High School, a Catholic all-boys school in St. Louis, and was a four-year varsity letterman (teammates with top recruits like Kamryn Babb and Cameron Brown, who both signed with Ohio State). After seeing time at wide receiver as a freshman, he moved to defense full-time as a sophomore. Anderson was on track for a productive junior season in 2017, but he suffered a broken femur in his leg during preseason practice, which sidelined him for the season. He returned to the field as a senior and posted 62 tackles, 21.0 tackles for loss, 11.0 sacks and two forced fumbles, leading Christian Brothers to a 13-1 record and the 2018 state championship. Anderson earned first team All-State, All-District and All-Conference and was named the Class 6 Defensive Player of the Year.

A three-star recruit, Anderson was the No. 55 strongside defensive end in the 2019 recruiting class and the No. 18 recruit in Missouri. He received his first scholarship offers after his sophomore season (Iowa State, Purdue, South Carolina). After his junior season, he added offers from Arkansas, Kentucky, Michigan State, Minnesota, Nebraska and Notre Dame. Prior to his senior year, Anderson committed to Minnesota in August 2018 but decommitted a few weeks before the early signing period to reopen his recruitment. However, he recommitted to the Gophers and signed in December 2018. Anderson struggled to find consistent snaps over his first three seasons and entered the transfer portal. He reconnected with Iowa State head coach Matt Campbell, who was one of the first to offer him in high school, and transferred to Iowa State in December 2021. His younger sister (Maya) recently signed with Kentucky to run track after a decorated high school career (2022 Missouri state champion in the triple jump and 300-meter low hurdles). After one season in Ames, Anderson left school early and entered the 2023 NFL Draft.

STRENGTHS: Solidly-built frame with long arms ... tilts the field to get downhill and barrel through gaps ... uses heavy hand swats/swipes to rip and run ... fluid enough for inside-spin counters (see: 2022 Iowa tape) ... maneuvers his body to slither around road blocks ... keeps his rush alive for secondary move opportunities ... active hands in the passing lane ... showed on-field growth in 2022 (head coach Matt Campbell: “It’s been a real joy to watch him go about his business.”) ... has the body type and talent to project upside ... experienced lining up inside, outside or over the offensive tackle.

WEAKNESSES: Inexperienced with an incomplete football resume (only 609 defensive snaps over his four years in college) ... leggy mover and needs to play with better knee bend to stay under the pads of blockers ... shows tightness when attempting to sharply redirect or break down as a tackler ... missed tackles are all over his tape because of poor technique, leaving his feet early and falling off ball carriers ... undeveloped pass-rush plan and his moves lack polish ... digests what he sees but doesn’t anticipate ... limited special-teams value ... underwent elbow surgery after he transferred to Iowa State (spring 2022) and missed summer workouts; missed his junior year in high school with a broken femur (August 2017).

SUMMARY: A part-time starter at Iowa State, Anderson lined up at defensive end in defensive coordinator Jon Heacock’s 3-3-5 base scheme. After he struggled to find the field in three seasons at Minnesota, he was the backup LEO behind Will McDonald before starting opposite him the final five games of the 2022 season for the Cyclones. A battering ram downhill, Anderson fights through traffic and forces his way through the shoulder of blockers. However, he lacks pass-rush instincts and spends too much time thinking instead of reacting and unleashing his talent. Overall, Anderson has the size, length and upside to warrant attention from NFL coaches, but he is currently undeveloped as both a pass rusher and run defender and needs time to become more skilled. He is a potential practice-squad player and rotational backup.

37. ANDRE JONES | Louisiana

Varnado, La. (Varnado)

#10

BACKGROUND: Gerald “Andre” Jones Jr. was born and raised in Varnado by his father (Gerald Andre Sr.). He enrolled at Varnado High School as a freshman and saw immediate reps on varsity as a 160-pound wide receiver and pass rusher. As a senior, Jones weighed more than 200 pounds and helped Varnado to an 8-4 record and the 2017 district championship before it fell in the quarterfinals to eventual state champs Logansport. He finished his final season with 78 tackles, 6.0 sacks, one forced fumble and one blocked punt, which earned him first team All-State and All-District honors. Jones also made plays on offense as a tight end with 12 catches for 102 yards and two touchdowns in 2017. He lettered in basketball at Varnado and was named honorable mention All-State in 2016.

A two-star recruit, Jones was the No. 133 strongside defensive end in the 2017 recruiting class and the No. 110 recruit in Louisiana. He had several schools show interest, but Louisiana was the main Division I program recruiting him, and he committed to head coach Mark Hudspeth shortly before signing day. Jones was part of a recruiting class that won a lot of football games at Louisiana, including quarterback Levi Lewis and running back Elijah Mitchell. He took advantage of the extra year of eligibility granted by the NCAA because of the pandemic and returned to school for his sixth season in 2022. Jones graduated with his bachelor’s degree. He opted out of the 2022 bowl game and accepted his invitation to the 2023 East-West Shrine Bowl.

STRENGTHS: Athletic frame with outstanding length ... displays decent foot quickness in his get-off ... utilizes his long levers to establish contact with his violent stab before quickly transitioning to a secondary move ... relies on that punch to detach from blockers ... uses an inside spin to stay active mid-rush ... flashes enough momentum and hand strength to put tackles in reverse on bull rushes ... shuffles well to get outside and contain ... pursuit is decisive and fast ... his coaches speak highly of his work ethic and how far he has come physically and mentally after he “couldn’t even get on the field” because he was so raw out of high school ... has experience standing up off the edge or with his hand on the ground as a five-technique.

WEAKNESSES: Still requires some body development, especially in his lower half ... comes off the ball high and allows blockers to get underneath him ... inconsistent depth in his rush, creating extra steps for himself ... displays some stiffness at the top of the rush ... always in attack mode and would benefit from added finesse to keep blockers off balance ... saw more coverage reps in 2022, but that area remains a work in progress for him ... not yet a technician at the point of attack when defending the run ... will turn 25 during his rookie season.

SUMMARY: A four-year starter at Louisiana, Jones was a stand-up outside linebacker in defensive coordinator LaMar Morgan’s 3-4 base scheme. After lining up as a defensive end as an underclassman, he transitioned to more of an edge role in 2022 and played better and better as the season went on (his tape over the final month of the season was his best). With his rush potential and run-stopping effort, Jones has notable physical ingredients to be a productive role player in the NFL. However, the flashes are more impressive than his body of work, and he doesn’t get after the quarterback as often as teams desire from a player with his talent. Overall, Jones is a rangy, long-armed edge player with practical traits to do everything well enough, but he needs further development to take that next step and separate himself next to his competition in an NFL camp.

38. OCHAUN MATHIS | Nebraska

6046 | 250 lbs. | 5SR

Manor, Texas (Manor)

1/8/1999 (age 24.30)

#32

BACKGROUND: Ochaun (OH-shawn) Mathis, one of four children, grew up near Houston with his mother (Ochana) before the family was displaced because of Hurricane Katrina in 2005. The family struggled to make ends meet in Austin for several years before settling in Manor, an Austin suburb. Mathis enrolled at Manor High School, where he played defensive end and wide receiver. As a junior, he earned first team All-District honors with 68 tackles, 13.0 tackles for loss, 9.0 sacks, one forced fumble and one interception. Mathis finished his senior season with 75 tackles, 13.0 tackles for loss, 7.0 sacks and one forced fumble while adding one touchdown catch. He helped Manor to the 2017 state playoffs after the team had won only two games in 2016.

A three-star recruit, Mathis was the No. 44 weakside defensive end in the 2018 recruiting class and the No. 103 recruit in Texas. A late bloomer in high school, he visited TCU for junior day and became the first player to commit to the Horned Frogs’ 2018 signing class. As a senior, Mathis picked up offers from Oklahoma and Oklahoma State, but he stayed loyal to head coach Gary Patterson and the TCU coaching staff and didn’t visit any other schools. After four years in Fort Worth, Mathis entered the transfer portal after Patterson was fired and the new coaching staff wanted him to gain weight for the new scheme. He became a hot commodity on the transfer market and narrowed his final choice to Nebraska, Ole Miss, Penn State, Texas and USC. Helped by a six-figure NIL deal, Mathis transferred to Nebraska for his final season in 2022. He graduated with his degree in general studies from TCU (May 2022) and took graduate courses at Nebraska. His older brother (Bruce Jr.) has autism. Mathis accepted his invitation to the 2023 East-West Shrine Bowl.

STRENGTHS: Owns a prototypical NFL frame with exceptional length, hand size and room to add bulk ... quickly gets upfield to press the tackle vertically ... dips his pads with natural flexibility to bend and flatten to the quarterback ... agile footwork and loose movement skills to access multiple gaps ... shows the ability to lock out and handle edge-setting duties ... long arms expand his tackling radius ... quickly gathers and adjusts his footwork for off-balance stops ... determined, rangy chaser and arrives to the football with violent intentions as a finisher ... closes out backside cutbacks in a hurry ... has a blocked field goal on his resume ... four-year starter with consistent pressure production each year.

WEAKNESSES: Disappointing final season at his new home ... inconsistent working through contact and too easily controlled/slowed ... below-average play strength and needs to continue adding muscle to his frame ... take-on hands are late and unleveraged, leaving him glued to blockers ... overly reliant on designed stunts to gain his freedom as a pass rusher ... needs to develop better cohesion with his eyes, hips and feet ... will throw his hands around as a pass rusher without going anywhere ... late to read blockers and adjust his plan of attack ... backfield production declined from his sophomore to junior and his junior to senior seasons.

SUMMARY: A role player in his one season at Nebraska, Mathis played on the edge in the Cornhuskers' four-man base front. After starting 34 straight games at TCU (32.0 tackles for loss in those starts), he was a heralded (and expensive) transfer in Lincoln, but he started only two games in 2022, and his impact failed to match the hype. Mathis checks a lot of boxes on paper with his long, flexible frame and athletic movement skills to penetrate the pocket from different angles. However, he isn't yet the sum of his parts, and his lack of refinement stalls his attack as both a pass rusher and run defender. Overall, Mathis has impressive physical traits with his size measurables and athletic tools, but his play strength and pass-rush instincts are underdeveloped. His raw talent is better than his tape, making him a potential draft-and-develop rusher for an NFL team.

39. BRENTON COX JR. | Florida 6037 | 250 lbs. | SSR Stockbridge, Ga. (Stockbridge) 1/30/2000 (age 23.24) #1

BACKGROUND: Brenton Cox Jr. grew up outside of Atlanta and originally attended Miller Grove High School, where he played on varsity as a sophomore tight end and defensive end. He transferred to Stockbridge High School for his final two seasons. As a junior, Cox blew up on the recruiting scene and earned first team All-State honors with 75 tackles, 8.0 tackles for loss and 18.0 sacks, receiving Defensive Player of the Year honors in the Henry County. As a senior, he led Stockbridge to an 11-3 record with 42 tackles, 9.5 tackles for loss, 5.0 sacks and one forced fumble. Cox again earned first team All-State honors. He played basketball as a sophomore.

A five-star recruit, Cox was the No. 2 strongside defensive end in the 2018 recruiting class and the No. 5 recruit in Georgia (Trevor Lawrence and Justin Fields were the top two). He was also the No. 23 recruit in the nation. Cox had no shortage of offers with all the major programs vying for his commitment. He originally verbalized to Ohio State before decommitting after his senior season. His final decision came down to Alabama and Georgia with the home state Bulldogs winning out. He was one of seven five-star recruits in Kirby Smart's 2018 class but only lasted one season in Athens before he was dismissed from the program. Cox transferred to Florida, where he spent the next three seasons, but he was dismissed from the team in October 2022 by head coach Billy Napier. He graduated from Florida with his degree in education sciences (Summer 2022). Cox accepted his invitation to the 2023 East-West Shrine Bowl.

STRENGTHS: Projectable frame with solid length ... get-off quickness consistently makes him the first defender to cross the line of scrimmage ... agility and evasion techniques are a problem for blockers in space ... looks to weaponize his hands as a rusher, including a long-arm stab to get blockers off balance ... play violence helps him force his way through the blocker's shoulder or convert his speed to power ... uses his long arms to keep blockers from his body when looking to contain edge runs ... actively looks for passing windows for knockdowns at the line of scrimmage ... revving motor helps him detach from blocks ... backfield production showed on tape and in the stat sheet.

WEAKNESSES: Average build and play strength ... can be eaten up in the run game and give up the edge ... often misreads run keys, creating open lanes for the ball carrier ... can be stonewalled by tight ends ... struggles to find his balance as a tackler, especially in the backfield, and the misses will pile up ... too much wasted movements in his pass rush ... needs to develop more power early and at the top of his rush ... will have a tough time wiping away the punch of NFL blocks ... had offseason foot surgery to repair a Jones fracture (summer 2021) ... was arrested (along with former Georgia teammate Robert Beal) on a misdemeanor charge of marijuana possession (April 2019) ... character will be put under the microscope after he was dismissed from two SEC programs: Georgia (in August 2019) and then Florida (October 2022) for a series of team infractions (head coach Billy Napier: "It's a cumulative effect.") ... he "wears you down" with his antics, according to an NFL scout and will need to adopt a "more professional" demeanor ... Cox was allowed back for the Florida pro day (March 2023).

SUMMARY: A three-year starter at Florida, Cox played the "Jack" edge rusher position in former defensive coordinator Patrick Toney's scheme (Toney joined the Arizona Cardinals' staff after the 2022 season). After a quick exit at Georgia, he grew into a key cog in the Gators' defensive attack (32.0 tackles for loss in 33 games in Gainesville) before he was dismissed from the program midway through his senior season. Cox doesn't rush with consistent power or a fully-planned out attack, but his hands and feet are quick and make it tough for blockers to counter. Though he isn't an assignment-sound run defender, he has terrific pursuit from the backside and the gas tank is never empty. Overall, Cox has draftable and rosterable talent, but based on his history, it will take an NFL team with a large appetite for risk to invest a draft pick in the player. His energy as a pass rusher gives him a fighting chance.

40. GARRETT NELSON | Nebraska 6032 | 248 lbs. | 4SR Scottsbluff, Neb. (Scottsbluff) 3/1/2000 (age 23.16) #44

BACKGROUND: Garrett Nelson, who is the youngest of three boys, was born and raised in Gering in the Nebraska panhandle (25 miles from the Wyoming border). He started playing football at the YMCA youth league and played several other sports throughout his childhood, including wrestling. In eighth grade, Nelson switched school districts and attended Scottsbluff Senior High School. A three-year varsity letterman, he became a starter as a sophomore and accounted for 67 tackles, 8.0 tackles for loss and 5.0 sacks. As a junior, Nelson earned All-State honors with 44 tackles, 11.0 tackles for loss and 9.0 sacks while adding 133 rushing yards. He led Scottsbluff to a 12-1 record as a senior with the team’s only loss coming in the 2018 state championship game. Nelson earned All-State honors as a senior with 39 tackles and 4.0 sacks. He also lettered in wrestling and won the Class B heavyweight title as a junior and was a state qualifier at 220 pounds in 2017.

A three-star recruit, Nelson was the No. 50 weakside defensive end in the 2019 recruiting class and the No. 3 recruit in Nebraska. In the summer after his sophomore season, he received his first scholarship offer, from Nebraska, which was his dream school and the alma mater of his parents. A week later, Nelson became the first commit in the Cornhuskers’ 2019 class and shut down his recruitment. His father (Chris) was a two-time All-American wrestler at Nebraska (1987-92) and finished his career with 101-37-3 record, setting school records for dual victories in a season (21 in 1989-90). Garrett’s mother (Holli) is the daughter of longtime high school football coach Ken Parish, who won the 1969 state title at Cozad (Neb.) High School. Nelson graduated with his finance degree (May 2022). He accepted his invitation to the 2023 NFLPA Collegiate Bowl.

STRENGTHS: Looks like an action figure with his sculpted, yoked-up upper body ... plays quick and controlled to maneuver in small spaces ... has developed sound hand usage to fight through traffic ... raucous play style creates second-effort paths to the football ... doesn’t beat himself (flags and missed tackles were uncommon on his 2022 tape) ... driven focus and competitive toughness will win over NFL coaches ... voted a team captain and genuinely cares about developing relationships with all of his teammates (former head coach Scott Frost: “Garrett is probably the best leader we’ve had at Nebraska in a long time.”) ... was a regular on punt return and punt coverage teams ... started every game the last three seasons (32 straight starts).

WEAKNESSES: Below-average arm length and struggles to stack and shed the point ... doesn’t explode out of his stance and lacks the speed to consistently threaten the corner (4.91 40-yard dash backs up the tape) ... inconsistent body bend to carve tight edges ... too segmented in his rush attack, delaying his counter measures ... allows blockers to cross, reach and seal him in the run game ... lacks the recovery quickness to close ground in pursuit of the football ... lacks ideal range and joint flexibility to drop and cover large spaces as a linebacker ... owns a trim, muscular frame but only average mass, especially in his lower half.

SUMMARY: A three-year starter at Nebraska, Nelson played on the edge in the Cornhuskers’ four-man base front, lining up in either a two- or three-point stance. He was one of the few dependable players on the Huskers’ “Blackshirts” defense the last few seasons, leading the team in both tackles for loss and sacks his junior and senior seasons. Nelson is an average-twitch player who struggles to gain enough ground with his first step or react to elusive runners in space. Although his shortcomings are apparent, he maximizes his talent with his movement efficiency and GPS for the football. Overall, Nelson’s limitations regrettably come in critical areas (speed and length) for playing the position, but he is a locked-in competitor with short-area quickness and football character that will endear himself to NFL coaches. He draws similarities to Kenny Willekes as a potential rotational end or SAM linebacker.

SUMMARY: Truman Jones grew up in the Atlanta area and helped lead Westminster School to a state championship in football (2015) and lacrosse (2017), earning All-State honors in both sports. A no-star linebacker recruit at 190 pounds, he had an FBS offer from Maryland but followed in the footsteps of his father (Archie) and signed with Harvard. He moved to edge rusher prior to the 2019 season and had an All-American senior year (as a captain) with a league-best 13.0 tackles for loss (also finished his career with four blocked kicks). Jones plays with the initial quickness out of his stance to attack gaps or create a speed-to-power push. He competes with controlled aggression, but NFL blockers will quickly neutralize him at the point of attack and his pass-rush toolbox isn’t very deep. Overall, Jones needs to expand his hand usage and learn how to string moves together for the next level, but his athletic tools and energy are a nice play to start for a developmental guy.

SUMMARY: Titus Leo, one of four children, grew up in Brooklyn and was a multi-sport standout at Sheepshead Bay High, playing both ways as a wide receiver and safety. He signed with Wagner of the FCS in nearby Staten Island and quickly announced himself as a playmaker, despite the program winning only two of 36 games the last four years. Transitioning to edge rusher and linebacker, he learned under current NFL players Cam Gill and Chris Williams and played in three different schemes in five seasons. A two-time captain, Leo earned a spot on Bruce Feldman’s “Freaks List” with his ability to pounce out of his stance and chase down the ball. He plays with active hands that stay out in front but tends to get crazed in his rush and needs to rely more on punctuality and planning. Overall, Leo is an NFL-caliber athlete with a red-hot motor, but he needs to develop his skill for a more efficient attack plan. He is a work in progress as a pass rusher with special-teams value.

SUMMARY: Durrell Johnson was a safety and linebacker at Overlea High in Baltimore, earning All-Conference honors as a senior. He went the juco route after high school and signed with Asa College in Brooklyn, where he moved to defensive end. A two-star juco recruit, he was just 225 pounds, but Liberty saw his potential. He led the team in sacks in his first season but battled a knee injury in 2021. He had an All-American 2022 season with an FBS-best 27.5 tackles for loss (5.5 more than Tuli Tuipulotu at No. 2). Johnson is a long, thinly-built edge rusher with small hands, but he has the first-step quickness to get the drop on blockers at the snap. He has an instinctive ability to unwind from blocks and stay locked on the football, but the lack of power in his body shows up in the run game. Overall, Johnson is overly reliant on his initial step as a rusher and needs to continue getting stronger, but he has developmental traits in a 3-4 scheme with closing burst for a superpower.

SUMMARY: Deslin Alexandre was born in Haiti and came to the United States in 2002 with his family. He was a basketball-focused athlete most of his life, until he started playing football as a junior at Deerfield Beach High. He was named All-County honors as a senior. A three-star recruit, he committed to Pitt over NC State and was part of the Panthers’ defensive end rotation for the last five seasons. A two-time team captain, he was named the 2023 Jason Witten Collegiate Man of the Year. Alexandre has a strong, filled-out build with active hands to tilt the field, barrel through soft edges and work half a man as a rusher (his 2022 Syracuse tape showed his disruptive skills). He can stack and play off lateral blocks in the run game, although his lack of explosiveness often leaves him a step behind. Overall, Alexandre lacks creativity or high-end athleticism for an edge defender, but he is a grinder with outstanding smarts and intangibles to round out a defensive end depth chart.

SUMMARY: Nnamdi “Ikenna” (Ee-ken-ah) Enechukwu (En-neh-chu-kwu) was a three-year starter at Kansas City’s Ruskin High School and earned All-State honors as a senior, despite playing for a 1-10 team. He was also an All-District wrestler (220-pound division). A no-star recruit, he originally committed to Air Force before a late flip to Rice. He worked himself into the starting rotation as a redshirt freshman and posted steady production over his career, despite never leading the team in sacks. Enechukwu passes the eye test with his long, moldable frame and strong hands. He relies on a leveraged attack, using his forward lean to press blockers and power through contact. But his average twitch and body stiffness leave him lingering on blocks and prevent quick disengagement. Overall, Enechukwu isn’t a sudden or highly skilled rusher, but he has some NFL value as a linear player who can use his length as a weapon, projecting best as a rotational end or three-technique.

SUMMARY: Noah Taylor was born in the Bronx and attended Avalon School (north of Washington, D.C.) where he was a four-year varsity starter at receiver and linebacker. A three-star recruit, he committed to Virginia to play defense under Bronco Mendenhall. He started for three seasons but entered the transfer portal after Mendenhall left the program. He transferred to North Carolina and played the “jack” linebacker role, but a right knee injury in October 2022 and subsequent surgery cut short his final season. He is expected to be cleared by August 2023 but was unable to work out for NFL teams before the draft. Taylor has a long, slender frame with stringy muscle tone and average strength. He looks good on his feet to handle space or blitz but needs to be more aggressive in the run game. Overall, Taylor won’t be a natural fit more most schemes, but he plays with twitch, quickness and bend to be a nickel hybrid linebacker who can drop and rush.

SUMMARY: Spencer Waege (WAY-jee) grew up on his family’s farm in South Dakota and was an all-conference basketball and football player at Watertown High. He posted 52 tackles, 5.5 sacks and four blocked punts as a senior. A two-star recruit, he signed with North Dakota State, where he lined up primarily on the edge with some interior reps mixed in. He missed most of the 2021 season after suffering a torn ACL but returned healthy in 2022 and posted a career year. Waege is light-footed for his size with forward body lean, contact balance and strength in his upper body to work gap-and-a-half techniques (think of the 49ers’ defensive scheme). He has some tightness in his hips and must develop more of a plan to counter blockers. Though he has core strength, he lacks power in his arms and hands. Overall, Waege isn’t as explosive as his testing numbers might suggest, but he is an energetic athlete with a versatile body type, projecting best as a five-technique.

SUMMARY: Durell Nchami (CHAM-ee) was a three-year starter at Paint Branch High and earned Conference Defensive Player of the Year honors as a senior with 10 tackles for loss and seven sacks. A three-star recruit, he grew up 15 minutes from College Park and committed to Maryland over Pitt, Syracuse and others. He showed immense promise when on the field, but he missed all of 2019 and most of 2021 with injuries. He totaled only 49 tackles in 32 career games, but a high percentage of those came in the backfield. Nchami looks the part of a pass rusher with his athletic build and long arms. He flashes speed to the edge and speed to power as a bull rusher, but he needs to develop a more coordinated attack with his hands to beat NFL blockers. He put too many missed tackles on tape and must stay under control. Overall, Nchami needs to prove he can stay healthy in the NFL, but he has disruptive burst when on the field to win the corner, dip and flatten to the quarterback.

JALEN CARTER | Georgia

Apopka, Fla. (Apopka)

#88

BACKGROUND: Jalen Carter grew up in Apopka (20 miles northwest of Orlando) where he was raised by his mother (Tonique Brown). He started playing football at 5 years old and was also a standout basketball player (started dunking in the fifth grade). Carter played in middle school for the Apopka Raptors (at running back, cornerback, wide receiver, linebacker and quarterback) and Next Level in a seven-on-seven league. He also played basketball for Apopka and moved up a level because of his size (one of his basketball coaches was former NBA player Jason Williams). His coaches say he could have had a Zion Williamson-like path to the NBA if he had chosen to focus on basketball. Carter enrolled at Apopka High School (alma mater of Warren Sapp) and started on the freshman team before quickly advancing to varsity in his first season. Primarily an offensive player as an underclassman, he started at H-back because of his blocking, but also took direct snaps and played wide receiver. After the 2018 season, former defensive coordinator Jeff Rolson took over as head coach and moved Carter to the defensive line for his senior year. Playing both tackle and end, he accounted for 64 tackles and 12 sacks and led Apopka to the 2019 Class 8A state championship game (lost on a two-point conversion in the final seconds to Miami Columbus). Carter also played tight end and handled the punting duties as a senior. He lettered in basketball and weightlifting at Apopka. As a junior, Carter was the No. 2 qualifier in the 2A heavyweight division, benching 395 and clean jerked 320 for a 715 total.

A five-star recruit out of high school, Carter was the No. 4 defensive tackle in the 2020 recruiting class and the No. 3 recruit in Florida (behind Gervon Dexter and Eli Ricks). He ranked No. 18 nationally. Carter had a relatively low-key recruitment and took visits to multiple schools in the southeast, including Florida, Florida State, Miami (Fla.) and Ole Miss. In May 2019, he announced a final three of Alabama, Clemson and Georgia and committed to the Bulldogs the next day. Carter didn't waver and signed with Georgia six months later. He was the third-ranked recruit in Kirby Smart's 2020 class behind cornerback Kelee Ringo and offensive tackle Broderick Jones. Carter elected to skip his senior season and enter the 2023 NFL Draft.

STRENGTHS: Exceptional play strength and body control to slip gaps ... pounces out of his stance to attack with burst and force ... strikes with the natural power to stack, reset the line of scrimmage and disengage to make stops in the hole ... remarkable balance in space and when working off contact ... his backfield vision to quickly find/react to the football is almost as impressive as his physical traits ... explosive looper with the fluidity to shake blockers ... uses lateral agility to avoid getting squared up ... barrels into the backfield and makes one-handed tackles ... plays with a passion for stopping the run and holds up well versus double teams ... has an offensive background and was a devastating blocker in goal line situations (21 career snaps on offense with a one-yard touchdown as his only catch) ... accounted for three special teams blocks in his career (two extra point attempts, one field goal attempt) ... not very vocal, but carries himself with a humble attitude and is well respected by the rest of the locker room ... lined up everywhere on the defensive front at Georgia and averaged 44 snaps over the final seven games of 2022 when he was healthy.

WEAKNESSES: Inconsistent anchor and can be driven from his spot when his pads rise ... his aggressive pursuit will backfire and leave him behind the play ... will shift into cruise control at times, especially when his initial move is halted ... below-average sack production (six) in his career ... battled through injuries the first half of his junior season: missed two games because of an MCL sprain in his left knee (October 2022); missed parts of several other games because of a lingering ankle injury from the 2022 season opener ... young player (NFL scout: "He's still just a kid.") and NFL teams are hoping he continues to mature once he gets to the league (NFL scout: "Did Kirby (Smart) have to ride him sometimes? Yeah. Does he need to grow up and learn how to be a pro? Yeah. But you could say that about most of these kids.") ... the Athens Police Department secured an arrest warrant for the misdemeanor charge of reckless driving and racing following his involvement in the fatal car crash in January 2023 that claimed the lives of his teammate Devin Willock and Georgia staffer Chandler LeCroy; Carter pleaded no contest and accepted a deal that included a 12-month probation, $1,000 fine, 80 hours of community service and finish a driving course.

SUMMARY: A one-year starter at Georgia, Carter was a dominant force on the interior and played multiple alignments in co-defensive coordinator Will Muschamp's 3-4 base scheme. The Bulldogs had three first-round picks from the defensive line in the 2022 class (Travon Walker, Jordan Davis, Devonte Wyatt), but it was No. 88 who flashed the most disruptive ability on the 2021 tape and that continued in 2022 despite missing time because of injuries. With a playing base that is always balanced, Carter flashes the initial burst and play strength to rip, displace and disrupt the backfield rhythm. While physically impressive, he also does a skillful job rushing with eyes and trusting his instincts to feel blocking pressure. Carter needs to continue growing in several areas, but his block destruction is special because of a rare combination of body control, quickness and power. He presents a conundrum for NFL decision-makers – he is a very young player and maturation isn't a guarantee, but he is arguably the most talented prospect in this draft class with the potential to develop into a top-five player at his position in the NFL.

GRADE: 1st Round (No. 3 overall)

BRYAN BRESEE | Clemson

6054 | 298 lbs. | 3SO

Damascus, Md. (Damascus)

#11

BACKGROUND: Bryan Bresee (bruh-ZEE) was born and raised in central Maryland and played multiple sports throughout his childhood. He played baseball, lacrosse, soccer and was a standout basketball player, competing on several AAU traveling teams. However, football was his first and main love, starting at 5 years old. Coached by his father at the youth level, Bresee initially played quarterback and running back before switching full-time to the defensive line in middle school (even moving up an age level because of his size). He enrolled at Urbana High School where he played on varsity as a true freshman. However, the head coach (Dave Mencarini) resigned after the 2016 season to become director of player personnel at Maryland. Bresee looked to transfer and enrolled at Damascus High School for his final three seasons. As a defensive lineman and part-time tight end, he helped Damascus to a 14-0 record and the 2017 state title as a sophomore. Bresee added offensive tackle duties as a junior and was named the Montgomery County 3A MVP and Gatorade Player of the Year in Maryland with 36 tackles for loss and 12 sacks. As a senior, Bresee led Damascus to a 13-2 record and the 2019 state championship, finishing his final season with 47 tackles, 30.5 tackles for loss, 14 sacks and two forced fumbles. He earned multiple All-American honors as a senior, including the U.S. Army All-American Bowl. Bresee led Damascus to a 38-3 record in three seasons, finishing his prep career with 134 tackles, 80.5 tackles for loss and 35 sacks. He also lettered in basketball as a junior and averaged 13.7 points and 11.9 rebounds per game.

A five-star recruit out of high school, Bresee was the No. 1 defensive tackle in the 2020 recruiting class and the No. 1 recruit nationally (one spot ahead of QB Bryce Young). His first scholarship offer (Maryland) arrived during his freshman year and then the floodgates opened. Bresee had his pick of any program in the country and narrowed down his final list to Alabama, Clemson, Georgia, Michigan, Ohio State and Penn State. However, he cited the recent success of Tigers' defensive linemen like Christian Wilkins and Dexter Lawrence as the reason he committed to Clemson. He grew up in an athletic and competitive family: his father (Richie) was an offensive guard at James Madison (1985-89); his mother (Meghan) was an All-American basketball player at Frederick Community College (1992-95); his older sister (Kendall) played college basketball at George Washington (2016-18) before transferring to Mount St. Mary's (2018-22). During his junior season at Clemson in September 2022, his younger sister (Ella) passed away at 15 after battling medulloblastoma (an aggressive form of brain cancer). Bresee elected to skip his senior season and enter the 2023 NFL Draft.

STRENGTHS: Big-bodied frame with well-distributed muscle mass ... bursts off the ball to quickly get upfield with his attacking mentality ... efficient on loops and twists because of his body control and lateral quicks ... bursts to close with impressive pursuit range for his size ... flashes pop and violence in his hands to strike and control the point of attack ... above-average anchor strength and not easily moved from his spot ... uses his length to stack, keep blockers off his frame and peek into the backfield ... able to retrace his steps to make tackles most interior linemen don't ... he identifies himself through football and strives to get better (trained with 10-year NFL veteran Duane Clemons in middle and high school) ... his competitive juices and "no quit" attitude were instilled in him growing up ... versatile experience and lined up across the Clemson defensive line from nose to outside the tackle ... the coaching staff says he is "beloved" in the Clemson program ... overcame immense adversity over the last two seasons, including an ACL injury and the passing of his younger sister.

WEAKNESSES: Plays quick, but not always loose, especially when he plays tall ... slight tightness in his hips and lowers hurt his ability to sharply redirect ... must continue to build up his pass rush arsenal ... tends to slow down at contact and must become more skilled at countering once initially blocked ... can be late to locate misdirection or anticipate ... misses tackles playing too high and hot ... his injury background is a concern: sprained his left knee (February 2020) shortly after he enrolled; suffered a torn ACL in his left knee (September 2021) and required season-ending surgery; just as his knee returned to 100 percent, he battled a draining case of strep throat, which also caused a kidney infection (September 2022) and landed him in the hospital (he added 45 pounds of water weight while sick) ... played 40-plus defensive snaps in only three games in 2022 (10 games played) as the coaches limited his playing time in both practices and games.

SUMMARY: A three-year starter at Clemson, Bresee was primarily a three-technique defensive tackle in coordinator Wes Goodwin’s multiple fronts, also seeing time as a nose and 5-technique. The No. 1 overall high school recruit three years ago, he was the “best player” on the team as a freshman, according to head coach Dabo Swinney, but his last two seasons were marred by injury issues (ACL tear, kidney infection) and personal tragedy (passing of his younger sister after an 18-month cancer battle). Powerfully built and naturally gifted, Bresee is a balanced mover and carries his weight well to burst off the ball and make plays versus the run and the pass. With his heavy and active hands, he flashes the ability to stack, shed and finish, but his inconsistent leverage through contact will slow down his pursuit. Bresee must refine his set up and counters for better pass rush sequencing, but he is an explosive force player with disruptive potential in both even and odd fronts. His tag on draft boards will have a medical designation and his injury background might determine where he is drafted.

3. CALIJAH KANCEY | Pittsburgh 6010 | 281 lbs. | 4JR Miami, Fla. (Northwestern) 3/1/2001 (age 22.16) #8

BACKGROUND: Calijah (Kah-LIE-jah) Kancey, who is one of five children, grew up in the Miami area. He started playing football at the youth level at several different positions, but was primarily on the offensive and defensive lines. Kancey enrolled at Miami Northwestern High School where he initially played on the JV team. Kancey started on varsity as a junior defensive lineman and posted 98 tackles, helping the team to a 14-win season and the 2017 6A state championship. As a senior, he led Northwestern to a 10-5 record and back-to-back state titles. Kancey finished his senior season with 110 tackles, which earned him all-county and all-conference honors in 2018.

A three-star recruit out of high school, Kancey was the No. 63 defensive tackle in the 2019 recruiting class and the No. 113 recruit in Florida. His first offer was from Rutgers followed by Louisville and South Carolina. His hometown Hurricanes showed interest and Kancey received a school visit from former head coach Manny Diaz, but Miami never offered. He received offers from other Power 5 programs like Georgia Tech, Kansas State and Louisville, but he developed a bond with Pitt defensive line coach Charlie Partridge and committed to head coach Pat Narduzzi. Kancey was the seventh-ranked recruit in the Panthers’ 2019 class. He skipped his senior season and entered the 2023 NFL Draft.

STRENGTHS: Wins at the snap with elite lateral quickness to slice gaps ... explosive wax-on, wax-off hands ... his move-to-move transitions are simultaneously well-timed and violent ... displays the body flexibility and joint twitch to establish leverage or slither around blockers ... disruptive in the stunt game ... able to drive blockers backward when he attacks with proper leverage ... hard player for blockers to engulf because of his urgent athleticism ... plays on his feet with above-average contact balance ... physical run blocker and showed improved gap integrity in 2022 ... has the play range to chase down ball carriers outside the numbers ... highly productive with 27.5 tackles for loss over 25 games the last two seasons.

WEAKNESSES: Short, stubby build and lacks desired height/weight/length ... will be the first defensive tackle with a sub-74-inch wingspan to be drafted over the last 10 years ... his arms were the second-shortest of all defensive tackles at the combine over the last 10 years ... extremely quick in space, but can be slowed by contact or bullied off his rush path ... faulty anchor and can be moved from his spot in the run game ... struggles to stay square and often overmatched by double teams or near the goal line ... his hands are quick, but his swipes last power ... aggressive nature leads to breakdown issues, especially in the pocket (his missed tackle rate increased each of the last three seasons) ... missed final two games of his junior season because of a left shoulder injury (November 2022).

SUMMARY: A three-year starter at Pittsburgh, Kancey was a three-technique tackle in head coach Pat Narduzzi’s 4-3 base scheme, lining up everywhere from nose to the edge. After putting his name on the NFL radar in 2021, he led all FBS defensive tackles in tackles for loss (14.5) in 2022 and became the school’s first unanimous All-American since Aaron Donald. With his initial quickness and ability to maneuver his hips in the hole, Kancey wins at the snap to slant, stunt and cross the face of blockers and affect the backfield rhythm (46.8 percent of his tackles in 2022 came in enemy territory). He uses his balance and natural leverage to get underneath the pads of blockers, but can be displaced in the run game and will struggle to power through contact. Kancey’s undersized frame and average strength will be more pronounced versus NFL blockers, especially in the run game, but his get off, agility and quick hands allow him to leverage gaps and disrupt the backfield. Although not quite on Donald’s level as a pro prospect, the parallels are encouraging and he projects as a starting NFL three-technique.

GRADE: 1st-2nd Round (No. 26 overall)

4. MAZI SMITH | Michigan 6030 | 323 lbs. | 4JR Grand Rapids, Mich. (East Kentwood) 6/16/2001 (age 21.86) #58

BACKGROUND: Mazi (MAH-zee) Smith was born in Southfield, Mich. and grew up in Grand Rapids with his mother (Kenya), who is a teacher. He attended East Kentwood High School where he was a four-year varsity letterman on the defensive line (wearing his prescription sports goggles). After earning all-state honors as a junior, Smith led East Kentwood to a nine-win season in 2018 and an appearance in the state quarterfinals. He finished his senior season with 81 tackles, 18 tackles for loss and three forced fumbles to earn multiple all-state and Under Armour all-America honors. Smith also qualified for the state championships in track and posted personal bests in the shot put (52 feet, six inches) and discus (118 feet, one inch).

A four-star recruit out of high school, Smith was the No. 11 defensive tackle in the 2019 recruiting class and the No. 4 recruit in Michigan. He received his first scholarship offers the summer before his sophomore season, with Akron offering first followed by Wisconsin. Alabama, Georgia, Michigan, Notre Dame, Ohio State and Penn State were all vying for his services a year later. Mostly because of his connection with former defensive line coach Greg Mattison, Smith committed to the Wolverines in June 2018 and enrolled early. He was the No. 4 recruit in Michigan's 2019 class, behind Daxton Hill, Christopher Hinton and Zach Charbonnet. His cousin (T.J. Duckett) was a running back at Michigan State and first-round pick (No. 18 overall) in the 2002 draft, playing seven seasons in the NFL. His grandfather (Carl) and grandmother (June) were active in the fight for civil rights in Grand Rapids, creating a newspaper called "The Organizer." Smith graduated with a degree in creative writing (December 2022) and hopes to be a screenwriter or poet. He elected to skip his senior season and entered the 2023 NFL Draft.

STRENGTHS: Brings exceptional power and physicality ... well-distributed body mass and carries it well ... strikes from a low position to stack and anchor the point of attack, including against double teams ... uses his heavy hands to toss interior blockers ... plays with outstanding contact balance to sift through congestion and stay off the ground ... displays impressive athletic traits and pairs his movements with his backfield vision to locate and track the football ... uses ankle flexibility to quickly change directions and make tackles in short areas ... finished his career with zero penalties in 35 games ... tipped the scale at 345 pounds when he enrolled and changed his diet and conditioning to reshape his body (averaged 45.1 defensive snaps per game in 2022) ... his teammates call him "Gorilla" for his freaky feats in the weight room (the stories his teammates tell are legendary) ... soft-spoken, but very focused and thoughtful and everyone listens when he talks (voted a team captain prior to the 2022 season) ... started every game (28) the past two seasons.

WEAKNESSES: Undeveloped pass rush skills ... moves well, but isn't consistently explosive off the ball for quick wins ... still learning how to get skinny and play through gaps ... ordinary range to chase down plays ... below-average backfield production ... missed more sacks than he made over his college career, quickly closing on the quarterback when he had a rush lane, but sliding off just as fast ... guilty of taking plays off for stretches to conserve energy ... his character isn't considered a red flag by NFL scouts, but he was arrested on a felony gun charge (October 2022) that was later reduced to a misdemeanor – he was pulled over for going 50 MPH in a 25 MPH zone and police found a handgun and multiple magazines of ammunition in the car (gun was legally purchased, but he didn't have his concealed license at the time).

SUMMARY: A two-year starter at Michigan, Smith was the linchpin of the defensive line at nose tackle in coordinator Jesse Minter's scheme, playing up and down the line. Although his backfield production is underwhelming, he is a better pass rusher than his career sacks (0.5) would indicate (finished second on the team with 25 pressures in 2022). Ranked No. 1 on Bruce Feldman's Freaks List, Smith plays with extraordinary power to welcome double teams or dismantle single blockers with his patient eyes and torqued hands. His football instincts are well developed to feel blocking pressures and track the football, however, he needs to be a more controlled finisher as a tackler. Smith might never light up the stat sheet with backfield production, but he will be an above-average NFL run defender and flashes pass rush potential with his natural leverage, body quickness and remarkable power. He fits multiple fronts, but he is ideally suited as a shade in the middle of the line, similar in ways to a bigger Brandon Mebane.

GRADE: 1st-2nd Round (No. 39 overall)

5. GERVON DEXTER SR. | Florida 6055 | 310 lbs. | 3JR Lake Wales, Fla. (Lake Wales) 10/5/2001 (age 21.56) #9

BACKGROUND: Gervon (Jer-von) Dexter Sr., who is one of four children, grew up in Lake Wales (50 miles south of Orlando) and started playing sports at five-years old. Playing everywhere from running back to the offensive and defensive lines, he played football through elementary and middle school, but stopped playing in seventh-grade to focus on basketball full-time. Dexter enrolled at Lake Wales High School where he started on the varsity basketball team as a freshman. Going into his junior year, his father pushed him to return to football and he posted 18 tackles for loss, 9.0 sacks and 7 forced fumbles at defensive tackle in 2018. Dexter was unblockable as a senior and finished with 103 tackles, 35.0 tackles for loss, 18.0 sacks and 7 forced fumbles. He earned multiple All-American honors and led Lake Wales to a 12-1 record with the only loss coming in the regional finals of the 2019 playoffs. Dexter started on varsity all four seasons for the basketball team and also lettered in track, qualifying for the Class 2A state championships in the discus throw as a junior.

A five-star recruit out of high school, Dexter was the No. 3 defensive tackle in the 2020 recruiting class (one spot ahead of Georgia's Jalen Carter) and the No. 1 recruit in Florida. He was the No. 12 overall recruit nationally. Dexter was highly recruited in basketball and received offers from national powers like Syracuse and Virginia before his sophomore year. Despite not playing high school football until his junior year, his recruitment quickly took off, receiving offers before he even took the field. Midway through his junior year, Dexter held scholarship offers from Alabama, Florida, Georgia and two dozen others. Growing up a Gators' fan, he committed to Florida and became the first consensus five-star recruit under former head coach Dan Mullen. Two months before he enrolled in Gainesville, his father (Gerald) passed away at 50 after a bacterial infection spread to his heart (required a valve replaced) and also led to brain surgery to address an aneurism. Two years later, Gervon welcomed his infant son (Gervon Lashawn Dexter Jr.) on May 9, 2022. Dexter elected to skip his senior season and enter the 2023 NFL Draft.

PRO DAY	6057	318	32 1/8	9 7/8	81 1/2	-	-	-	-	-	4.70	7.65	-

STRENGTHS: Looks the part and is still filling out his enormous frame and wingspan ... athletic for his size with basketball feet and body control ... uses his flexibility to slither into gaps or flatten down the line ... flashes a violent arm-over rip move to clear the center ... able to uproot blockers when he attacks upward with leverage and drives his feet ... strong, balanced base versus the run ... extends his long arms to stand up and dispose blockers, making stops in the hole ... holds up well versus double teams and keeps his shoulders square to the line ... reads the backfield well, using different peek techniques once he engages blockers ... plays with urgency in the run game ... took on more of a leadership role in 2022 and is described as a “unifying presence” behind the scenes by his coaches (Dexter: “We learned to be great teammates.”) ... durable and played in all 38 games the last three seasons.

WEAKNESSES: Spotty snap anticipation and consistently the last to move out of his stance ... undeveloped counters with only average twitch in his upper body when attempting to shed ... too easily moved when he allows his pads to rise at contact ... needs to improve his positioning in tackle situations to be a more reliable finisher in small spaces ... flagged multiple times for roughing because of his tendency to put all his weight on the quarterback ... With his height and length, I expected to see more batted balls on his tape ... played a lot of snaps (averaged 52.5 defensive snaps per game in 2022) and would go half-speed at times ... unimpressive backfield production and didn’t reach double-digit tackles for loss in his career.

SUMMARY: A two-year starter at Florida, Dexter was primarily a three-technique defensive tackle in co-defensive coordinator Sean Spencer’s four-man front, lining up everywhere from nose tackle to head up over the tackle. After giving up football to focus on basketball in middle school, he returned to the sport as a junior in high school and has shown incremental improvements over the last five years. Dexter carries his weight well with impressive foot quickness and pass rush potential, although you wish he had more backfield production to show for it. His impact can be traced to his ability to leverage – he is a very different player when he utilizes his long levers to put blockers on skates as a pass rusher or anchor, stack and work the point in the run game. Dexter must develop a more disciplined approach to turn the flashes into more consistent play, but he is an agile, coordinated big man who has yet to play his best football. He is a traits-based projection who can play up and down the line, which will interest both even and odd fronts.

GRADE: 2nd Round (No. 55 overall)

6. KEEANU BENTON | Wisconsin 6036 | 309 lbs. | 4SR Janesville, Wis. (Craig) 7/17/2001 (age 21.78) #95

BACKGROUND: Keeanu Benton, who is one of three children, grew up in South Chicago and played baseball at the youth level. His family moved to Janesville, Wisc., (100 miles north of Chicago) when he was in sixth grade. Benton continued playing baseball throughout middle school, but also picked up wrestling in the sixth grade and football in eighth grade. He attended Joseph A. Craig High School in Janesville where he stopped playing baseball after his freshman year and decided to focus on football and wrestling (also played club lacrosse). As a defensive lineman, Benton was promoted to varsity as a sophomore and finished the 2016 season with 17 tackles. He emerged as a legitimate recruit as a junior with 52 tackles, six tackles for loss and two sacks, earning second team all-conference. As a senior, Benton earned first team all-state, all-region and all-conference honors with 75 tackles, seven tackles for loss and two sacks. He was a more accomplished wrestler at the prep level, finishing high school with a 127-8 career record. After going 37-4 as a sophomore, Benton posted a 48-2 record as a junior and finished as the Division I runner up at state (285-pound division). He went 42-2 as a senior and again finished as the Division I state runner up in the 285-pound division. His wrestling coach (Mark Mullen) saved the life of Benton’s sister after she stopped breathing in gym class.

A three-star recruit out of high school, Benton was the No. 85 defensive tackle in the 2019 recruiting class and the No. 5 recruit in Wisconsin. He didn’t have any offers midway through his junior year and was planning to attend a trade school. But after his junior year, the football scholarships started to arrive, including offers from Power 5 programs like Iowa, Minnesota and Syracuse. However, Madison was only 40 miles from Janesville and once Wisconsin offered Benton in April 2018, he needed only a few weeks to officially commit to the Badgers. He signed in December 2018 and enrolled in June 2019 for summer classes (didn’t enroll early because of wrestling). Benton became the first athlete from Craig to play Division I sports in college in over 30 years. He opted out of the 2022 bowl game and accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl.

STRENGTHS: Thick lower body and trunk with a massive wingspan ... carries his 315-pound frame very well with short-area quickness to close ... outstanding big-man balance and transitions well off blocks ... powerful hands to mash centers into the backfield ... improved feel for leverage, slide protections and blocking anticipation as a pass rusher ... his rush moves have improved, especially his cross chop ... has the lower-body flexibility to skim the shoulder of blockers ... plays with a strong base to maintain body position and feel when the double teams are coming ... stout versus the run and technically advanced at the point of attack and his wrestling background (hands, hips, leverage, etc.) shows up on the football field ... urgency and violence are parts of his on-field identity and effort isn’t a question to his game ... offers scheme versatility.

WEAKNESSES: Taller stature and will his high pads can leave him lost in the wash ... must improve and maintain his leverage points ... turns his shoulders and needs to stay square ... can be late to spot misdirection ... his inconsistent pad level hinders his ability to collect himself and break down as a tackler in the backfield ... should be a better off-balance tackle finisher with his length and strength ... his rush plan and arsenal need time to mature ... disappeared for stretches versus better competition (Ohio State) on the 2022 tape ... suffered a minor knee sprain as a senior (October 2022), but played through the injury.

SUMMARY: A four-year starter at Wisconsin, Benton was the starting nose tackle in former defensive coordinator Jim Leonhard’s 3-4 base scheme, also seeing snaps over the B-gap. He averaged 36 snaps per game over his final two seasons in Madison and posted a personal-best 10 tackles for loss as a senior captain in 2022. With his push-the-pocket power, Benton consistently resets the line of scrimmage when his pad level is right and plays with the movement skills to get up and down the line of scrimmage. His mediocre college production is a product of his role for the Badgers and his pass-rush potential boosts his draft grade (flashed promising rush potential during Senior Bowl practices). Benton needs to play with consistent leverage and become a more consistent finisher for the NFL game, but his stout power base and above-average athleticism at his size are outstanding foundation traits. He has the talent to play all over the defensive line as a pro.

GRADE: 2nd Round (No. 56 overall)

7. ADETOMIWA ADEBAWORE | Northwestern 6015 | 282 lbs. | 4SR Kansas City, Mo. (North) 3/4/2001 (age 22.15) #99

BACKGROUND: Adetomiwa (add-E-TOMMY-wah) “Tommy” Adebawore (add-E-BAR-eh), who has three younger brothers, was born and raised in Kansas City to Nigerian-born parents, who moved to the United States in the 1990s (his father is a prince coming from African royalty). He attended Kansas City North High School where he started playing football as a freshman and was a four-year letterman. As a senior, Adebawore led North to a 9-2 record and playoff appearance, one of the most successful seasons in school history. He was named the 2018 conference defensive player of the year with 74 tackles, 23.5 tackles for loss and 11 sacks, earning first team all-state, all-district and all-conference honors. Adebawore was also highly decorated in track and won the 5A state championship in the shot put as a senior with a state-record throw (62 feet, 7 ¾ inches), beating the previous record by 18 inches. He also finished second at the 2019 state championships in the discus (186 feet, 4 inches).

A three-star recruit out of high school, Adebawore was the No. 75 strongside defensive end in the 2019 recruiting class and the No. 27 recruit in Missouri. He received several FCS offers from midwestern programs (North Dakota State, Northern Iowa, South Dakota State) and Ivy League schools (Cornell, Princeton, Yale). Among FBS programs, Adebawore was recruited by Air Force, Army, Navy, Toledo and Washington State before committing to Northwestern. His younger brother (Adepoju) was a five-star recruit in the 2023 class (No. 11 overall player in the country) and committed to Oklahoma over Missouri and Northwestern (Adetomiwa guided him through the recruiting process). His younger brother (Adeyeye) is a high school sophomore on the fast track to being a top recruit. Adebawore graduated with his degree in psychology (March 2023). He accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl (voted the National team’s defensive line practice player of the week).

PRO DAY	-	283	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	4.26	7.13	28 (stood on combine numbers)

STRENGTHS: Freaky athletic testing (the only 280-plus-pound player to run a sub 4.5 40-yard dash in the history of the combine) ... boasts a broad, naturally thick frame with disproportionately long arms ... built low to the ground and consistently stays underneath blocks with his initial burst off the ball ... strikes with pad level and knee bend to effortlessly access his deep power supply (loves to use a variety of long-arm moves) ... uses his active hands and upfield quickness to give blockers the slip or avoid being reached ... urgent cross chop and swim/rip moves to free himself ... stacks blocks and peeks into the backfield to track runners ... freaky strength room numbers, which translates to the field ... voted a senior captain ... intrinsically motivated and was credited with “rebuilding” the culture of the team, according to Northwestern director of football performance Jay Hooten ... plays through pain and didn’t miss a start the last three seasons.

WEAKNESSES: Flashes some tweener traits with some tightness in his lower body ... finds himself flat-footed and engulfed when his initial strike doesn’t land ... his counter moves lack consistent cohesion and creativity ... struggles to handle extra attention and can be affected by chip blocks ... had some troubles as an edge-setter and needs to be a more consistent technician in the run game, regardless of his alignment ... missed tackles were all over his tape, often because of his tendency to play too hot and struggles when attempting to quickly redirect ... undisciplined at times, including a roughing the passer penalty as a senior and a few others that came close.

SUMMARY: A three-year starter at Northwestern, Adebawore was primarily an edge rusher (6-tech) in former defensive coordinator Jim O’Neil’s four-man front, also seeing snaps head up over the tackle or inside the B-gap. On a below-average team that won just four of 24 games the last two years, he led the Wildcats in sacks and forced fumbles both seasons and flashed dominance throughout Senior Bowl week. A member of Bruce Feldman’s Freaks List, Adebawore is shot out of a cannon at the snap and uses his initial burst and play strength to get into blockers and drive them into the pocket, creating flashbacks of Lamarr Houston. He is well-built with linear twitch, but his lower-body flexibility is average and his tackling must improve versus NFL ball carriers. Adebawore needs to become more consistent in several areas, but he has explosive power in his body with the long arms and natural leverage to be disruptive. An outside rusher in college, he projects best inside as a three-technique in the NFL.

GRADE: 2nd-3rd Round (No. 68 overall)

8. SIAKI IKA | Baylor 6027 | 335 lbs. | 4JR Salt Lake City, Utah (East) 11/8/2000 (age 22.47) #62

BACKGROUND: Siaki (See-AH-key) “Apu” (AH-poo) Ika (EE-kuh), who is the youngest of five children, grew up in a Polynesian family in Salt Lake City to parents (Falakesi Kiola and Selu Loiola) who migrated from the Tongan islands in the South Pacific. Following in the footsteps of his three older brothers, Ika started playing basketball and football in elementary school and played through middle school. He attended East High School where he played both ways on the offensive and defensive lines. After spending his first two years as a part-time player, Ika became a starter as a junior and posted 128 tackles, 15 sacks, one forced fumble and a blocked kick, leading East to the 2017 Class 4A state championship game (Ika sang the national anthem before the title game). As a senior, he finished with 89 tackles and 14 sacks, earning All-American honors. Ika also lettered in basketball at East.

A four-star recruit out of high school, Ika was the No. 13 defensive tackle in the 2019 recruiting class and the No. 2 recruit in Utah (behind WR Puka Nacua). Growing up in a BYU family, he attended Cougars' games throughout his childhood and had a relationship with head coach Kalani Sitake going back to his pee-wee days. When BYU offered him a scholarship as a freshman in high school, Ika jumped at the opportunity and committed. However, he decided to reopen his recruitment after his junior season once more schools showed interest. Ika had a final five of Florida, LSU, Oregon, USC and Utah and committed to the Tigers and enrolled in January 2019. He played in 13 games as a true freshman at LSU and helped the program win the 2019 national championship. Ika played in four games in 2020 before entering his name into the transfer portal in October 2020. Two months later, he signed with Baylor and rejoined Dave Aranda, who left LSU after the 2019 season to become Baylor's head coach. His nickname "Apu" came from his older sister, who thought he resembled the monkey "Abu" from the movie "Aladdin" when Siaki was a baby. Ika opted out of the 2022 bowl game and elected to skip his senior season to enter the 2023 NFL Draft. He accepted his invitation to play in the 2023 Senior Bowl, but later pulled out.

PRO DAY	6032	347	31 3/8	10 1/2	75 1/2	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	(no jumps or bench press – choice)

STRENGTHS: Thick, wide-hipped frame and comfortably carries his 335 pounds ... rare quickness, body control and lateral flow for his size ... shoots his hands at the snap to get movement and reset the line of scrimmage ... uses his length and hand strength to stack, lock out and play peek-a-boo to track backfield action ... violent hands to shuck single blocks and bully his way through the shoulder ... his go-to as a rusher is an arm-over power move ... anchors versus double teams ... voted a team captain in 2022 ... gives consistent hustle and logged 36.8 defensive snaps per game over his two seasons in Waco.

WEAKNESSES: His backfield production plummeted in 2022 ... inconsistent snap anticipation ... bends well when he wants, but too willing to stand up and play upright at the snap ... can be caved by angle blocks when he doesn't sink and secure his outside leg ... can get himself buried when he overextends his upper half and sacrifices his balance ... his missed tackle rate increased in 2022 ... barrels to the ball, but needs to use better control to finish tackles in confined spaces ... suspended one game for an "off-field incident" (September 2021) ... needs to stay conditioned and keep his weight under control (was 12 pounds heavier at his pro day compared to the scouting combine).

SUMMARY: A two-year starter at Baylor, Ika lined up at nose tackle in head coach Dave Aranda's hybrid 3-3-5 base scheme, playing multiple techniques (1, 2i, 3) on the interior. After winning a national championship at LSU as a freshman, he followed Aranda to Baylor and earned All-Big 12 honors each of the last two seasons. Ika plays with the power, awareness and joint flexibility to press blockers off his frame and find the football versus the run. For a player his size, he is light-footed with the short-area explosiveness and hand usage to defeat blocks. However, his best flashes can be found on the 2021 tape and he struggled to make backfield plays in 2022 (partly because of his role). Ika is a nimble, disruptive big man with stout, powerful traits, but all of his impressive parts don't consistently add up to impact plays. He is a toolsy size prospect with a high floor as an early down NFL nose while also flashing the ability to be more.

9. ZACCH PICKENS | South Carolina 6037 | 291 lbs. | 4SR Anderson, S.C. (T.L. Hanna) 3/6/2000 (age 23.14) #6

BACKGROUND: Zachaeus "Zacch" Pickens, who has an older brother, grew up in Anderson in western part of the state, only a few miles from the Georgia border. He developed his love for football in elementary school. Pickens continued playing through middle school with the same group of friends and they continued at T.L. Hanna High School. He became a varsity starter as a freshman and lettered all four seasons, primarily as a defensive end and tight end. As a senior, Pickens led T.L. Hanna to a 14-1 record with their only loss coming in the 2018 5A state championship game, which was the school's first appearance in the title game since 1974. He finished his senior season with 87 tackles, 21 tackles for loss, six sacks and an interception in the title game, which he returned for a touchdown. Pickens also moved to running back as a senior and led the team with 889 rushing yards (8.5 average) and 21 touchdowns, adding one receiving touchdown. He became the first from his school to win South Carolina's Mr. Football and also took home the Gatorade South Carolina player of the year, South Carolina lineman of the year and Under Armour All-American honors.

A five-star recruit out of high school, Pickens was the No. 1 defensive tackle in the 2019 recruiting class (ahead of DeMarvin Leal and Travon Walker) and the No. 1 recruit in South Carolina (one spot ahead of Gamecocks' teammate Cam Smith). He finished as the No. 8 recruit in the country. His recruitment took off during his freshman year of high school, first by Florida State and then by South Carolina, Clemson, Penn State, North Carolina, Tennessee and Michigan. Despite growing up 20 miles down the road from Clemson, Pickens committed to the Gamecocks in May 2018 and graduated early to enroll at South Carolina in January 2019. His older brother (Kevin) played defensive back at Mars Hill University (2015) before walking on at South Carolina for the 2018 season. Pickens graduated with his degree in sport and entertainment management (December 2022). He opted out of the 2022 bowl game and accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl (voted the American team's defensive line practice player of the week).

STRENGTHS: Good-sized athlete and passes the eye test with flying colors ... extends his long arms into the chest of blockers to create initial knockback ... transfers power from low hips to work his target backward into the pocket ... stays square to hold the point, find the ball and work laterally to mirror ... moves with outstanding control of his body to knife through gaps ... uses natural bend and short-area quicks to avoid latching hands ... plays flat-backed with consistent hustle to chase plays away from the line of scrimmage ... named a captain and team MVP as a senior ... competes with a team-centric mindset and experienced working from various alignments up front ... durable and started 32 straight games over the last three seasons.

WEAKNESSES: Pass rush arsenal lacks variety ... occasionally uses a quick swim or arm over, but his rush moves are generally power-based ... must develop his hand usage for quicker sheds ... late to access his secondary moves once locked up ... the first to jump the snap on some plays and the last to move on others ... leaves tackle production on the field with his tendency to play hot ... his anchor strength is OK, but he can be flattened out by double teams ... looks like “just a guy” when he plays with tall pad level ... unimpressive career production (only 8.7 percent of his tackles in college came in the backfield).

SUMMARY: A three-year starter at South Carolina, Pickens lined up primarily near the A-gap in defensive coordinator Clayton White’s even-based front. The third-ranked recruit to ever sign with the Gamecocks (behind Jadeveon Clowney and Marcus Lattimore), his statistical resume didn’t live up to that hype, but he was a dependable interior lineman the last four seasons. With his initial movements at the snap, Pickens has the quickness to shoot gaps and the strength to control them. While he has pass rush tools, his move transitions and shed skills are underdeveloped. Pickens must continue to hone his hand techniques as a rusher and anchor in the run game, but he plays on his feet with the agility, balance and length to instinctively react to blockers. He projects as a rotational tackle as a rookie with starting upside.

10. COLBY WOODEN | Auburn6040 | 273 lbs. | 4JRLawrenceville, Ga. (Archer)12/21/2000 (age 22.35)#25

BACKGROUND: Colby Wooden, who has a younger brother, grew up northeast of Atlanta where he first latched onto basketball before falling in love with football at 8 years old. He played football throughout youth leagues and middle school while also working out with a trainer (Cedric Singleton). Wooden enrolled at Archer High School where he was teammates with several future FBS players, including former Clemson CB Andrew Booth (drafted No. 42 overall in the 2022 NFL Draft by the Vikings). After becoming a full-time starter as a sophomore, he helped Archer to a 23-4 record over his final two seasons, advancing to the Class 7A semifinals in 2018. As a senior, Wooden earned first team all-state, all-county and all-region honors, finishing his final season with 54 tackles, 23 tackles for loss and eight sacks.

A four-star recruit out of high school, Wooden was the No. 22 weakside defensive end in the 2019 recruiting class and the No. 38 recruit in Georgia. He earned his first offer from nearby Georgia as a freshman and finished with 26 total offers, including Florida, Michigan and Oregon. Wooden narrowed down his final choice to Auburn, Georgia and Clemson, committing to the Tigers prior to his senior year. His father (Irvin) played football at Louisiana Tech (1990-93). His younger brother (Caleb) is a defensive back at Auburn who just completed his true freshman season. Wooden graduated with his degree (December 2022). He elected to skip his final season of eligibility and enter the 2023 NFL Draft.

STRENGTHS: Brawny, big-boned frame with proportionate body thickness and arm length ... fluid athlete with the lateral agility to avoid initial contact and attack gaps ... uses quick swipe or arm-over moves to wrap blockers ... uses his hands to dispose of blocker’s wrists and work off contact ... uses his eyes well to track the ball while breaking down blocks ... light on his feet to stay on top of backs releasing into the flat ... his current and former coaches all speak highly of his work ethic and character (both football and personal) ... added 50-plus pounds since high school (enrolled at 230 pounds), working his tail off to sculpt his body with good weight ... durable and dependable, starting every game the past three seasons and playing across the defensive line.

WEAKNESSES: Average upper-body power ... undeveloped hands at the point of attack to disengage at will ... his pass rush setup and instincts are raw and he must show he can alter his plan mid-rush ... late to react to blocking pressures at times ... quick first step, but his snap anticipation runs hot and cold ... inconsistent anchoring in the run game when late to dig in and sink his hips ... missed tackles were a consistent issue on his 2022 tape, lacking the hip fluidity to finish some off-balanced attempts ... always plays hard, but you want to see him crank up the on-field nastiness ... doesn’t have the arc speed to consistently win off the edge ... mediocre college sack production.

SUMMARY: A three-year starter at Auburn, Wooden was the starting defensive end in former defensive coordinator Jeff Schmedding’s four-man front, although most of his snaps came inside the offensive tackle as 4i or three-technique. His production improved each of the last three seasons and he is one of only nine Tigers to reach 30 career tackles for loss over the last 25 years. Wooden is very active off the ball with the lower-body agility and limb quickness to play in gaps. However, his block destruction is undeveloped and he must do a better job staying on schedule to make a living battling NFL blockers. Wooden isn’t consistently disruptive when rushing from the outside, but he can set the edge or reduce down where his rush skills are more effective on the interior. He offers position flexibility as a rotational base end or three-technique as an NFL rookie capable of ascending to starter.

GRADE: 3rd-4th Round

11. BYRON YOUNG | Alabama6033 | 294 lbs. | 4SRLaurel, Miss. (West Jones)11/10/2000 (age 22.46)#47

BACKGROUND: Byron Young, who is the youngest of five children (four boys, one girl), grew up in rural Mississippi and quickly followed in his older brothers’ footsteps playing sports. He focused on football and basketball through youth leagues and into middle school, although a chipped kneecap which required surgery, took him off the football field in the eighth grade. Young attended West Jones High School where he played basketball as a freshman before returning to football as a sophomore and switching to defensive end. He had a breakout return in 2016 with 66 tackles, 10 sacks and three forced fumbles, which opened the floodgates of his recruitment. As a junior, Young recorded 55 tackles, 22 tackles for loss and 14 sacks, leading West Jones to eight wins and a playoff berth. He had his most productive season as a senior with 125 tackles, 29.5 tackles for loss, 17.5 sacks, one forced fumble and one interception, adding two touchdowns (one rushing, one receiving) on offense. Young led West Jones to a 12-3 record in 2018 and the school’s first state championship. He received numerous awards, including U.S. Army All-American honors.

A four-star recruit out of high school, Young was the No. 8 defensive tackle in the 2019 recruiting class and the No. 6 recruit in Mississippi. He was considered a consensus top-100 recruit nationally as Jones County produced two of the top recruits in the class with Young and Charles Cross (Laurel High School). Young received his first offer as a sophomore from Ole Miss followed by South Carolina, Florida and almost every SEC program. He officially committed to Alabama the summer before his senior year and stuck with his choice despite a few last-minute trips to LSU, Mississippi State and Ole Miss. His parents (Kenny and Melissa) raised five children and all five signed to play college sports. All three of Young’s older brothers played football at West Jones and the college level: Regrick (Jones County Junior College), Kendrick (Pearl River Community College and Southern Illinois) and Brandon (Jones County Junior College and Arkansas-Monticello). Young graduated with his degree (December 2022). He accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl.

STRENGTHS: Large-framed lineman with long arms and massive hands ... flashes first-step quickness to squeeze gaps or get into his blocks ... skillfully uses his active hands to deconstruct blocks and shake free ... catches and disposes of blocker’s wrists ... cleverly tracks the ball in the run game ... plays with the contact balance to maneuver his way through the muck ... adequate take-on technique to occupy double teams ... his coaches say he has the drive needed for professional football ... developed his toughness as a kid playing sports with his three older brothers ... experienced lining up all over the defensive front ... showed up to work each day and played in all 54 games the last four seasons.

WEAKNESSES: His lateral footwork and change-of-direction ability are average at best ... doesn’t have the secondary quickness to take full advantage after he sheds blocks ... can get straight-legged at times and would benefit from more set up in his rush ... needs to tighten up his pursuit angles for better clean-up tackle opportunities ... inconsistent break down skills as a finisher, especially in the backfield ... could use additional mass, especially in his lower body, to better match up in the NFL ... below-average sack production.

SUMMARY: A four-year starter at Alabama, Young was a defensive end in head coach Nick Saban’s 3-4 base scheme, shifting from the edge, to inside the tackle and down to a tilted nose position. He made noticeable improvements as a senior and posted the same number of pressures (28) in 2022 as his first three seasons combined. A smart, assignment-sound run defender, Young is quick to read blocks and put himself in a leveraged position to make plays from different alignments. He has the technical know-how to free himself as a rusher, but his secondary rush and finishing skills are subpar. Young doesn’t play with desired explosiveness or mass, but he can break down the rhythm of blockers with his length, awareness and skill. He is scheme-diverse and will provide immediate depth as an NFL rotational player.

GRADE: 3rd-4th Round

12. KOBIE TURNER | Wake Forest6024 | 293 lbs. | 6SRClifton, Va. (Centreville)4/26/1999 (age 24.00)#0

BACKGROUND: Kobie Turner, who is one of four children, grew up in Clifton with two main passions: football and music. He started out with flag football and then pee-wee and youth-level football. Turner attended Centreville High School and played on the JV team as a freshman. He moved up to varsity as a sophomore, seeing snaps at tight end and middle linebacker as Centreville advanced to the 2014 state title game with a 12-3 record. Turner became a starter as a junior, primarily as a blocking tight end and linebacker. As a senior, he earned second team all-state and first team all-region as both a defensive end and tight end, accounting for 70 tackles and one forced fumble. Turner starting singing in choir in middle school and also learned how to play the guitar, piano and drums. He earned all-state honors in chorus as a senior in 2017.

A no-star recruit out of high school, Turner wasn’t ranked by the online recruiting services and went overlooked by college programs. Instead of attending recruiting camps his junior year, he was more focused on his music. His high school teammate and cousin (Caleb Brooks) signed with Richmond in the 2017 class and Turner was introduced to the Spiders’ coaching staff, who extended an offer to walk on. He planned to give football one year to see what happened and ended up earning a scholarship less than a year on campus. Turner also sang baritone for Richmond’s music department Schola Cantorum choir. Looking to challenge himself against better competition, he earned his undergrad degree at Richmond and entered the transfer portal after the 2021 season. He considered offers from Georgia Tech and Virginia Tech before committing to Wake Forest. His older brother (AJ) was a running back and defensive back at South Carolina (2015-19). Turner accepted his invitation to the 2023 East-West Shrine Bowl.

STRENGTHS: Plays with outstanding balance, flexibility and grip strength at contact ... extends and punches off blocks while maintaining body control to slip through gaps ... rips, tugs and uses whatever else he can find in his bag of tricks to break down the rhythm of blockers ... impressive short-area quickness to operate in constricted spaces ... small-framed for an interior player, but has good musculature throughout his body ... efficient play recognition skills and doesn't lose sight of the football ... credited with four batted passes in 2022 ... competes hard and plays with reckless abandon ... his teammates and coaches rave about his work ethic and drive (on and off the field) ... consistent backfield production since he entered the starting lineup.
WEAKNESSES: Owns a tweener frame with only average length ... will have a tough time against long-armed blockers who get into his chest ... his hands are heavy and hungry, but too inconsistent with their placement ... inconsistent fundamentals taking on doubles ... needs to stay square when working laterally and will occasionally sacrifice his positioning to make a play ... needs to continue refining his pass rush repertoire and overall timing ... wasn't a starter in his one season at the FBS level (and registered only two sacks) ... will be 24 on draft weekend.
SUMMARY: A reserve in his one season at Wake Forest, Turner lined up primarily over the B-gap in defensive coordinator Brad Lambert's scheme. A former walk-on at Richmond, he was an FCS All-American before transferring to Wake Forest for his final season where he was part of the defensive line rotation (averaged 40.2 defensive snaps per game in 2022). Nicknamed "The Conductor" for his disruptive skills and burgeoning music career, Turner stays balanced through congestion and his gas tank is never on "E" (accounted for 41 tackles for loss over 40 games played the last four seasons). He plays much stronger than his listed weight, but might struggle against NFL length and power. Turner is a tad undersized and is guilty of freelancing out of his run fits, but he plays with bouncy feet, forceful hands and affects the game with his relentless effort. He projects as a rotational three-technique in the NFL with potential to be more.
GRADE: 4th Round

13. CAMERON YOUNG | Mississippi State 6033 | 304 lbs. | 5SR Crosby, Miss. (Franklin County) 6/8/2000 (age 22.89) #93

BACKGROUND: Cameron Young II, who is one of four children, grew up in southwest Mississippi in the tiny town of Crosby. He developed a love for basketball when he was young before realizing football was his best sport and best chance to make it big. Young attended Franklin County High School where he was a four-year letterman and played both ways on offense (tight end, offensive line) and on the defensive line. As a sophomore, he recorded 75 tackles and nine sacks and caught seven touchdowns on offense. Young had his most productive season as a junior with 90 tackles, 10 sacks and his first career interception. As a senior, he finished with 51 tackles, 11 sacks and one forced fumble. Young also lettered all four years in basketball and had his best season as a junior, averaging 12.4 points, 12.2 rebounds and 3.1 blocks per game.

A three-star recruit out of high school, Young was the No. 105 defensive tackle in the 2018 recruiting class and the No. 25 recruit in Mississippi. With his raw size and ability, he started to receive recruiting attention as a freshman and his first offer arrived during his sophomore season (Jackson State). Young later added offers from Louisiana-Lafayette, Purdue, Southern Miss and UAB, but he had his eyes on an SEC program. He took several visits to Mississippi State, including the weekend before signing day, and developed a relationship with the coaches, but didn't receive an offer. Despite being an academic qualifier, Young committed to Gulf Coast Community College over his FBS offers and signed with the juco program early on signing day. However, Mississippi State called later that morning with an open spot and Young flipped to the Bulldogs. He graduated with his bachelor's degree. Young accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl.

STRENGTHS: Looks the part and plays the part ... puts his long arms to functional use by stacking and spilling the run ... quickly gets his hands into blockers to make first meaningful contact ... able to work various hand techniques to shed when blockers try and punch him ... shows the natural power to reset the line of scrimmage while staying square to blockers ... his attention to hand placement helps him remain stout at the point ... throws all his body weight behind his bull rush and drives his feet to force blockers to retreat ... described as a "steady presence" and the "adhesive" that keeps things together, according to defensive line coach Jeff Phelps ... durable and started 25 games the last two seasons.

WEAKNESSES: His pads rise almost immediately at the snap and especially into contact ... his bull rush is forceful, but often sacrifices his balance and struggles to escape contact ... has a bad habit of dropping his head into contact, losing sight of the football ... doesn't have the flexibility in his hips or lower half to consistently work edges as he searches for a rush path ... doesn't have the lower-body agility to recover after a false step or add value on stunts ... suffered a torn ACL injury (November 2019) and underwent season-ending surgery ... marginal statistical resume.

SUMMARY: A two-year starter at Mississippi State, Young lined up as the nose guard in former defensive coordinator (now head coach) Zach Arnett’s 3-3-5 base scheme. After an ACL injury disrupted his development as an underclassman, he showed promising growth the past two years as a starter, averaging 41.4 defensive snaps per game. With his long arms and body strength, Young forces the issue at the snap while also displaying the instincts to feel blocking pressures and find the football. However, his tall pads are a detriment and will make it easier for NFL blockers to control him. Young is a heavy, upright mover, which will limit his ability to make plays on the football, but his forceful punch and balance through contact are NFL traits. He has two-gapping traits to provide immediate depth as a nose or play head up over the tackle.

GRADE: 4th Round

14. MORO OJOMO | Texas 6025 | 292 lbs. | 5SR Katy, Texas (Katy) 8/15/2001 (age 21.70) #98

BACKGROUND: Morotoluwa “Moro” (MORE-oh) Ojomo (OH-juh-mo), who has two sisters, was born and raised in Lagos, Nigeria, with his mother (Bimbo) and father (O.J.), who is a pastor and missionary. When Ojomo was 7, his family moved to Santa Clarita, Calif., where he was introduced to football and started playing at the pee-wee level. When Ojomo was in the seventh grade, his family moved to the Houston area where O.J. founded Victory House Houston and serves as the senior pastor of the Christian Church. Ojomo enrolled at Katy High School where he played on the freshman team his first season. Because he was young for his grade and a relatively new to the sport, he struggled to see playing time on the JV squad as a sophomore and was close to quitting. As a junior, Ojomo made varsity and was named second team all-district with three sacks in 2016. He made substantial improvement as a senior and earned second team all-state and district defensive MVP honors with 15 tackles for loss, eight sacks and three forced fumbles. Ojomo helped Katy to a 12-1 record and 2017 district championship.

A three-star recruit out of high school, Ojomo was the No. 27 defensive tackle in the 2018 recruiting class and the No. 55 recruit in Texas. He made varsity as a junior and earned offers from FBS programs like Houston, Ole Miss and TCU. Midway through his senior year, his recruitment was shifted into overdrive as he picked up several high-profile offers in the two months before signing day: Alabama, Miami (Fla.), Notre Dame, Oklahoma, Oregon, Tennessee, Texas and Texas A&M. Ojomo signed with Texas and enrolled in Austin at only 16 years old. His older sister (Omodele) was diagnosed with cancer when she was in high school but is now cancer-free. Ojomo graduated with his bachelor’s degree (December 2022). He accepted his invitation to the 2023 East-West Shrine Bowl.

PRO DAY	6024	289	34 1/2	10 3/4	83	-	-	-	-	-	4.60	7.45	- (stood on Combine testing)

STRENGTHS: Body beautiful with long arms and lean mass ... strong as an ox and strikes with pad level and knee bend to stay rooted in his spot ... stands up blockers at the point of attack to find the football, using full extension to maintain engagement ... quick out of his stance to shoot gaps or move laterally to sidestep bodies ... able to attack the shoulder of blockers with both finesse and power ... gives chase on plays away from him ... very genuine and personable (found himself in hot water with the Texas coaching staff when he was too honest about the attempts at changing the culture) ... started school two years early in Nigeria and is young for his class at only 21 as a five-year college player.

WEAKNESSES: Delivers a strong initial jolt into contact, but inconsistent hand usage to control his man ... lacks the flexibility in his hips to regain body position once reached ... needs to be more sudden with his shed techniques ... inconsistent snap anticipation, often leaving too late or too early ... his counter maneuvers are untapped and inefficient ... relies more on effort than instincts as a pass rusher and often appears aimless with his rush angles ... missed one game as a senior because of a sprained ankle (September 2022) ... unimpressive production and compiling backfield plays on his resume tape was a challenge.

SUMMARY: A four-year starter at Texas, Ojomo was an interchangeable defensive tackle in defensive coordinator Pete Kwiatkowski’s 4-3 base scheme. A 21-year-old, fifth-year senior, he lined up at nose tackle as a freshman before moving outside on the edge as a sophomore and then settling as a B-gap tackle the past two seasons. With the largest wingspan among defensive tackles in this class, Ojomo can neutralize the point of attack when he uses proper pad level and strike leverage to unlock his power potential. He is a functional athlete with agility to scrape, but his lower-body stiffness hinders his ability to stay ahead of blocks. Ojomo has a tough time creating plays because of his inefficiencies disengaging, but he is a stout run defender with pass rush upside because of his length and play strength. His best NFL fit might be as a read-and-react base end in an odd front.

GRADE: 4th-5th Round

15. JAQUELIN ROY | LSU 6033 | 305 lbs. | 3JR Baton Rouge, La. (University Lab) 10/22/2000 (age 22.51) #99

BACKGROUND: Jaquelin (juh-qway-lin) Roy grew up in Baton Rouge where he started playing football in grade school and often played up a level because of his size. He attended the University Laboratory School (on the LSU campus) and was a four-year letterman on varsity. Roy was primarily a defensive tackle (also played on the offensive line and in the backfield in goal line situations) and helped the program to back-to-back Division II Louisiana state championships his sophomore and junior seasons. As a senior, he posted 96 tackles, 17 tackles for loss and nine sacks, adding a rushing touchdown on offense. University Lab posted a 36-5 record over his final three varsity seasons.

A four-star recruit out of high school, Roy was the No. 6 defensive tackle in the 2020 recruiting class and the No. 2 recruit in Louisiana (behind Kayshon Boutte). He was the No. 41 overall recruit nationally. Playing his high school football in LSU’s backyard, he was on the Tigers’ radar as early as his freshman season. Roy committed to LSU early in his junior year, but backed off his pledge a few months later and reopened his recruitment. He collected offers from Auburn, Florida, Georgia, Oklahoma, Tennessee, Texas and several other top programs and took several visits. Roy narrowed his final choice to Alabama, LSU and Texas A&M and recommitted to his hometown Tigers. His aunt (C. Denise Marcelle) was elected to the Louisiana House of Representatives in 2015. Roy opted out of the 2022 bowl game and skipped his senior season to enter the 2023 NFL Draft.

STRENGTHS: Big, stout and powerful to control gaps ... uses a wide stance to cement his anchor versus single blocks ... has the upper-body strength to latch and shed the point ... throws iron around in the weight room and likes to show off his strength ... plays with functional body flexibility and lateral skills to work down and escape blocks ... breaks out a swim/club and physical swipe to find his way to the football ... anticipates well for quick reads to sniff out screens or misdirection ... was asked to stay on the field for long stretches in 2022 (averaged 51.9 defensive snaps per game) ... his effort was generally consistent on film ... posted quality tackle production in 2022 for an interior player.

WEAKNESSES: Very average quickness ... plays upright and can be knocked back by low blockers who get underneath him ... his base strength is average at contact and he will lose ground against double teams ... must develop more effective counters to combat rushers who get on him before he gets going ... not a natural bender with clear stiffness in his tight turns ... his lethargic change of direction shows on tackle attempts and he left too much production on his 2022 tape ... doesn’t create his own rush lanes and his straight-linish pursuit puts a cap on his sack opportunities (his sack totals dropped each season in college) ... has only one season of starting experience and NFL scouts question if his maturity is ready for NFL life.

SUMMARY: A one-year starter at LSU, Roy played multiple alignments in defensive coordinator Matt House’s four-man front. A Baton Rouge native, he stayed home for his college ball and showed incremental improvements each season, including a strong junior campaign. Roy shows quality awareness to track and react to the football, relying on his hand usage and initial quickness to lead him to the football. He grew up and went to high school down the street from LSU’s campus and a change of scenery might yield unpredictable results. Roy is a complicated evaluation – he flashes promise because of his power, but his movement skills are average, and it will take time for him to adjust to pro blockers. He is a draft-and-develop tackle who can work his way into an NFL rotation as a rookie.

16. KARL BROOKS | Bowling Green

6033 | 296 lbs. | 5SR

Lansing, Mich. (Sexton)

5/8/2000 (age 22.97)

#11

BACKGROUND: Karl Brooks was introduced to football when he was 6 years old and it soon became his favorite sport. He attended J.W. Sexton High School in Lansing where he was a three-sport standout. He played wide receiver and safety as a sophomore (185 pounds) and junior (220 pounds) before moving to linebacker as a senior. Brooks led Sexton to an eight-win season and a spot in the playoffs in 2017, finishing his senior year with 108 tackles, 12 sacks and five forced fumbles. He was named second team all-state and first team all-conference. Brooks was a three-year starter on the basketball team, leading the team in rebounds per game (8.1). He was also an accomplished track athlete all four years (hurdler and relays), setting personal-bests in the 60-meter hurdles (8.71), 110-meter hurdles (15.3) and 300-meter hurdles (43.73).

A three-star recruit out of high school, Brooks was the No. 88 outside linebacker in the 2018 recruiting class and the No. 31 recruit in Michigan. The summer between his junior and senior years, he picked up a few Division II offers like Northwood, Ferris State and Davenport. Brooks initially committed to Grand Valley State after his senior year, but Bowling Green entered the picture a few weeks before signing day and extended an offer. He decommitted from Grand Valley State and signed with Bowling Green, which ended up being his only Division I scholarship offer. Brooks took advantage of the extra year of eligibility and returned to Bowling Green for his fifth season. He graduated with undergrad degree. Brooks accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl.

STRENGTHS: Quick first step to easily build up momentum as a bull rusher to drive through contact from different angles ... swipes or jars blockers off balance with his sudden, physical hands ... attacks with natural bend and body control to dip/rip underneath blocks ... his hands/feet stay on the same page ... maneuvers his frame to free himself in the run game and chase down the action ... quickly locates and closes out screen passes ... experienced playing multiple techniques on the line ... voted a team captain in back-to-back years ... was 185 pounds as a high school sophomore and gradually packed on the weight ... durable five-year starter (48 starts) with eye-popping production and finished his career No. 3 in school history in sacks (27.5).

WEAKNESSES: His short-armed, tweener frame will be more noticeable in the NFL ... doesn’t have the speed to capture the corner as an edge player ... lower-body stiffness chips away at his ability to sink and redirect in small space ... gets upright when stacked and has a tough time controlling the point of attack ... his crazed style negates his ability to consistently tap into his play strength ... struggles to handle extra attention ... his awareness in the run game needs to improve to avoid getting washed ... needs to tighten up his pursuit to square ball carriers and avoid the missed tackles.

SUMMARY: A five-year starter at Bowling Green, Brooks was primarily a defensive end in former defensive coordinator Eric Lewis’ 3-4 base, lining up outside as a 7-technique, head up over the tackle or inside as a three-technique. Very few college players can say they led their team in sacks five straight seasons, but Brooks is one of them, including a prolific senior campaign as one of only six FBS players to finished with 18-plus tackles for loss and 10-plus sacks. With his initial quickness and effort, Brooks should be Bowling Green’s first defensive draft pick since 2013. His hands are active, but not always efficient and his sawed-off frame makes it difficult for him to control blockers or stay square. Brooks has a unique package of tools, which creates questions about his ideal position fit, but he has the light feet and urgent hands to be a gap disruptor. He projects best as a three-technique who can be flexed up/down the line.

GRADE: 5th Round

17. KEONDRE COBURN | Texas 6015 | 332 lbs. | 5SR Houston, Texas (Westfield) 5/23/2000 (age 22.93) #99

BACKGROUND: Keondre (kee-AHN-dray) Coburn, who is one of eight children, was born in Los Angeles before the family moved to the Houston area when he was young. He attended Oak Ridge High School as a freshman before transferring to Spring Westfield High School where he played on the same defensive line as Ed Oliver, who was two years older and has been a big brother role model throughout his career. Playing alongside Oliver as a sophomore, Coburn was named the district newcomer of the year with 26 tackles, two tackles for loss and one sack. He took over as the leader of the defensive line as a junior and earned honorable mention all-state and first team all-district honors, helping Westfield to a 10-win season and the 2016 district title. As a senior, Coburn led Westfield to an 11-1 record with 56 tackles, 20 tackles for loss, 7.5 sacks and two forced fumbles. He cleaned up on the award circuit after the 2018 season, including first team all-state, Under Armour All-American; Houston defensive player of the year and district MVP honors.

A four-star recruit out of high school, Coburn was the No. 11 defensive tackle in the 2018 recruiting class and the No. 13 recruit in Texas (No. 1 defensive lineman in the state). Playing next to a five-star recruit in Oliver, Coburn started to get looks from Power 5 programs as a sophomore, including several offers (Baylor, Oklahoma, Texas A&M) after the season. He considered Michigan (he called Jim Harbaugh his “favorite coach”), Alabama and several other schools before committing to Texas the summer before his senior year. Coburn committed to Tom Herman, the same head coach that Oliver committed to at Houston. He graduated with his degree (December 2022). Coburn accepted his invitation to the 2023 East-West Shrine Bowl.

STRENGTHS: Wide-bodied defender with broad shoulders and thick thighs ... flashes the brute strength in his upper body to create knockback at contact or provide a bull rush ... his low center of gravity helps him hold ground vs. double teams ... moves well for a 335-pounder to sidestep or split blocks laterally ... shifts his weight in an efficient manner to sharpen his pursuit angles ... tracks the ball well in the backfield and runs hard to the football ... dialed up the pass rush energy and effort as a senior ... played in every game the last four seasons and averaged 34.8 defensive snaps over those 48 games.

WEAKNESSES: His short arms and small hands delay his ability to quickly detach from blocks ... too much wasted movements with his hands and doesn’t rush with much of a plan ... his secondary rush skills are uninspiring, leaving his rush stalled out ... plays too reactive and needs to key blocks with better quickness ... needs to better anticipate down blocks to maintain his spot ... not a refined technician working through contact ... had more missed sacks than credited sacks in his college career ... needs to finish tackles once he gets his hands on the ball carrier.

SUMMARY: A four-year starter at Texas, Coburn was an interchangeable defensive tackle in defensive coordinator Pete Kwiatkowski’s 4-3 base scheme. While his college stat sheet is underwhelming, his on-field play showed a much more productive player, especially on his 2022 tape. With his low, leveraged position, Coburn creates power at contact to walk blockers backward or reestablish the line of scrimmage. His pass rush instincts and heavy hands are inconsistent, but when he uses them properly, they batter and bully blockers to collapse the pocket. Coburn’s NFL ceiling is lowered by his lack of length and explosive traits, but he is strong, stout and athletic to hold the point or create pressure. He projects as a sawed-off, early-down nose tackle in the NFL.

18. JALEN REDMOND | Oklahoma 6023 | 291 lbs. | 5SR Midwest City, Okla. (Midwest City) 3/12/1999 (age 24.13) #31

BACKGROUND: Jalen Redmond played football growing up, but basketball was always his focus. After middle school, Redmond gave up football to focus exclusively on his basketball career. He enrolled at Midwest City High School and started on the varsity basketball team as a freshman and sophomore. In the spring of his sophomore year, Redmond was convinced by the coaches and his friends to join the football team. He played his first high school football game as a junior and had a breakout season. A 230-pound linebacker, Redmond posted 82 tackles and 14 sacks in 2016. As a senior defensive end and linebacker, he was named first team all-state with 87 tackles, 34 tackles for loss and 19.5 sacks in 2017. Redmond was a three-year letterman in basketball at Midwest City (didn’t play as a senior as an early enrollee at Oklahoma).

A four-star recruit out of high school, Redmond was the No. 8 weakside defensive end in the 2018 recruiting class (a few spots ahead of Azeez Ojulari and Joseph Ossai) and the No. 4 recruit in Oklahoma. After an impressive spring as a sophomore when he joined the football team, Memphis offered him on the spot, giving him his first scholarship offer before even taking a varsity snap. With his breakout junior season, his recruitment blew up and he received offers from Georgia, Iowa State, Kentucky and Nebraska. Redmond officially committed to Oklahoma the summer before his senior year and signed in December. He opted out of the 2022 bowl game and accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl.

PRO DAY	6026	292	32 3/8	10 3/8	78	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	(stood on Combine testing)

STRENGTHS: Athletic big man with a basketball background ... displays the agility and quickness to slant, twist and play in gaps ... flashes twitch in his hands for swim/rip opportunities ... quickly finds the ball once he steps foot in the backfield (44.4 percent of his career tackles came behind the line of scrimmage) ... enough strength in his upper half to hold the point ... low hips help strengthen his base and ability to withstanding multiple blocks ... did a nice job finding passing lanes when he couldn't get home (four batted passes in 2022) ... primarily a linebacker in high school, he added 40-plus pounds of good weight after he arrived in Norman ... his skill set suggests position flex across various techniques.

WEAKNESSES: Needs to time the snap better to take full advantage of his athletic gifts ... finds himself stuck in traffic and gets bogged down through contact ... late to read and react to blocking scheme, especially in the run game ... relies on quickness and hustle over calculated counters to win as a pass rusher ... battled injuries each of his five seasons in Norman and the medical feedback will be paramount; missed most of his first season on campus after extensive tests discovered blood clots in his lungs (summer 2018); missed five games as a junior because of a knee injury (September 2021) – also missed time as a senior when the knee “flared up” again ... arrested on suspicion of DUI (August 2020) ... already 24 years old.

SUMMARY: A three-year starter at Oklahoma, Redmond worked up and down the line in head coach Brent Venables’ multiple fronts. With 29 tackles for loss in 33 games the last three seasons, he put athletic splashes all over his tape and backed them up with outstanding testing at the scouting combine. With his short-area quicks and burst, Redmond gets underneath blockers and bends his frame to keep his pass rush alive. He needs to develop better cohesion with his rush moves and put more of a priority on gap integrity and fundamentals to hold up in the run game. Questions about durability and consistency weigh down his draft grade, but Redmond has flashed the ability to work himself free and be disruptive from multiple techniques. He projects best as a developmental three-technique in an aggressive, active scheme.

19. DJ DALE | Alabama 6007 | 302 lbs. | 4SR Birmingham, Ala. (Clay-Chalkville) 10/30/2000 (age 22.49) #94

BACKGROUND: Devin Jamal “DJ” Dale, who is the oldest of five children, grew up in Birmingham and started playing football at six years old, playing mostly at quarterback. He also played baseball (pitcher) and basketball through middle school, but dropped both sports after his freshman year in high school. On the football field, he started practicing with high schoolers when he was in eighth grade. Dale attended Clay-Chalkville High School and became the only freshman to start on varsity in the 10 seasons Jerry Hood served as head coach. Playing both defensive end and defensive tackle, he earned all-state honors as a junior with 38 tackles and 14 tackles for loss. He was also a blocker on offense in short yardage and recorded a 17-yard touchdown catch in 2017. As a senior, Dale led Clay to a 12-2 record, but the team fell to Pinson Valley High School in the state semifinals for the second straight year.

A four-star recruit out of high school, Dale was the No. 18 defensive tackle in the 2019 recruiting class and the No. 9 recruit in Alabama. He received his first scholarship offer from Mississippi State after his freshman season in May 2016. Dale finished with over a dozen high-profile offers and narrowed down his choice to a final five of Alabama, Auburn, Clemson, Florida State and Tennessee. With his connection to the Crimson Tide coaches, he committed to Alabama and enrolled in January 2019. He proposed to his fiancée (Lexie) on the field at Bryant-Denny Stadium (April 2021). Dale graduated with his bachelor’s degree (December 2021) and earned his master’s degree (December 2022). He accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl.

STRENGTHS: Trimmed big-man and carries his weight proportionately ... displays developed play strength to fight back against cut-offs/reaches ... flashes twitch in his upper half to access violent chop/rip moves or establish contact with his punch ... strikes with leveraged force to stack blocks or handle double teams ... fires with low pad level off the ball and into contact ... maneuvers his frame well through contact, staying balanced in his redirect ... fills run gaps and will attract double teams with his active style ... described as a “program guy” by an NFL scout and limits mental mistakes ... earned two degrees in his four years in college ... durable and missed only one game the last three seasons.

WEAKNESSES: Doesn’t have overwhelming size, arm length or power ... marginal agility and lackluster space player ... aggressive hands, but his moves tend to be predictable with little control ... doesn’t win very often with his secondary measures ... gains some push, but his bull rush is ineffective and slows down quickly ... his pad level will get away from him at contact ... chases with steady effort, but needs to position himself for more plays at the ball carrier ... fatigues and is accustomed to playing as part of a heavy rotation (averaged 30.5 defensive snaps per game) ... underwhelming career backfield production.

SUMMARY: A three-year starter at Alabama, Young was a rotational lineman in head coach Nick Saban’s 3-4 base scheme, lining up everywhere from the nose to the B-gap. After starting all four years in high school and his first three years in Tuscaloosa, he came off the bench as a senior and had his most consistent season as both a pass rusher and run stuffer. Dale is a stout and alert player at the line of scrimmage with dependable play personality and football character. He stacks with strength and redirects well for his size, but will struggle disengaging from sustained blocks to create tackle opportunities for himself. Dale is the latest in the long line of Alabama defensive linemen who might not impress rushing the passer, but can be a quality two-down NFL run defender. He projects as a rotational one-technique at the next level and offers position flex.

GRADE: 6th Round

20. DANTE STILLS | West Virginia 6034 | 286 lbs. | SSR Fairmont, W.Va. (Senior) 12/14/1999 (age 23.37) #55

BACKGROUND: Dante Stills, who is the middle son of three boys, was born and raised in Fairmont with his mother (Janeen Floyd), who is a breast cancer survivor. He played multiple sports growing up, but always wanted to follow in his family’s footsteps on the football field. He attended Fairmont Senior High School and was a four-year varsity letterman, starting as a freshman defensive end. He earned all-area all four years and second team all-state honors as a sophomore. As a junior, Stills helped Fairmont Senior to a 7-3 record with 75 tackles, 17.5 tackles for loss and 6.5 sacks in 2016, earning first team all-state honors. As a senior captain, he led Fairmont Senior to a 12-2 record and 2017 conference championship, finishing with 81 tackles, 31.5 tackles for loss and 11 sacks. He was an Under Armour All-American and again earned first team all-state honors.

A four-star recruit out of high school, Stills was the No. 7 strongside defensive end in the 2018 recruiting class and the No. 1 recruit in West Virginia. Growing up near the West Virginia campus and with his older brother already on the Mountaineers’ roster, he was considered destined for Morgantown. But Stills had plenty of options as a recruit and took numerous visits to other programs. He received offers from notable programs like Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Miami, Oklahoma, Penn State and Tennessee. But Stills followed his heart and signed with West Virginia as the highest-ranked recruit in the Mountaineers’ 2018 class. His father (Gary) was a standout linebacker at West Virginia (1996-98), was a third-round pick (No. 75 overall) in the 1999 NFL Draft and played 10 seasons in the NFL for the Chiefs (1999-2005), Ravens (2006-07) and Rams (2008). Gary made a Pro Bowl in 2003 and ranks second all-time in sacks at West Virginia. Dante’s older brother (Darius) was the Big 12 defensive lineman of the year in 2020 and went undrafted in the 2021 NFL Draft. Gary’s brother (Ken) played safety at Wisconsin before a six-year career in the NFL (1985-89). Ken’s son and Dante’s cousin (Kenny) was a standout wide receiver at Oklahoma and drafted in the fifth round (No. 144 overall) of the 2013 NFL Draft, playing nine seasons in the NFL (2013-21) for five teams. Stills accepted his invitation to the 2023 East-West Shrine Bowl.

(bench and position drills only – choice)

STRENGTHS: Compact with a moldable frame that will appeal to different schemes ... times up his initial movements to spring gaps or stack and shed ... attacks the edge of blockers with contact balance and strong upper half ... plays with natural knee bend to sink, play low and smoothly redirect in his flow ... his hands, feet and eyes stay on the same page with developed football instincts in his attack ... his pursuit is dogged and persistent and he keeps his legs alive for chase-down opportunities in the pocket or outside ... the coaches relied on him to be the leader of the locker room, a responsibility he proudly embraced ... had a pair of blocked kicks over the last three seasons ... filled up the stat sheet with backfield production.

WEAKNESSES: Plays quick, but his lower-body explosion is average ... can get underneath the pads of blockers, but needs to do a better job generating power at contact to create a bull rush ... long-armed blockers are able to neutralize his attack ... can be pushed around and overmatched by down blocks ... active hand fighter, but doesn’t consistently go where he wants ... his foot is stuck on the gas pedal, which disrupts his angles and balance as a tackler ... averaged over 50 defensive snaps per game and wore down at times ... will turn 24 as an NFL rookie.

SUMMARY: A four-year starter at West Virginia, Stills was a three-technique tackle in defensive coordinator Jordan Lesley’s multiple fronts, also seeing snaps over and outside of the offensive tackle. The son of a 10-year NFL linebacker, he had his goals set on high-level football from a young age and leaves Morgantown as the school’s all-time leader in tackles for loss (52.5) and fourth in career sacks (23.5), just behind his father. Stills isn’t a burst player, but he does play quick laterally and up the field to force his way through the outside edges of blockers. While he has the knee bend to play leveraged, his pad level and technique will fall apart deep into games and stall out his attack. Stills doesn’t play with the length or bully strength desired in an interior player, but his athletic movements and disruptive nature can be valuable traits as part of a rotation. He is ideally suited for a one-gap, attacking front in the NFL.

21. NESTA JADE SILVERA | Arizona State 6020 | 304 lbs. | SSR Pembroke Pines, Fla. (Heritage) 1/23/2000 (age 23.26) #4

BACKGROUND: Nesta Jade Silvera (Jade is his middle name), who is the second-youngest of four boys, grew up in Pembroke Pines and started playing youth football at 7. He attended American Heritage High School in Plantation where he was coached by former NFL cornerback Patrick Surtain. Silvera was high school teammates with several current NFL players, including Patrick Surtain II (Broncos), Tyson Campbell (Jaguars), Anthony Schwartz (Browns), Marco Wilson (Cardinals) and James Houston (Lions). Silvera played both ways on the interior of the offensive and defensive lines and helped American Heritage to the 2016 Class 5A state championship. He finished his junior season with 75 tackles, 16 tackles for loss and 5.5 sacks. As a senior, Silvera led the program to its second straight Class 5A state title and recorded 107 tackles, 31 tackles for loss, 12 sacks and a scoop-and-score touchdown, earning U.S. Army All-American and first team all-county honors.

A four-star recruit out of high school, Silvera was the No. 2 defensive tackle in the 2018 recruiting class (behind Ohio State’s Taron Vincent) and the No. 11 recruit in Florida (behind teammates Surtain and Campbell). He was the No. 54 overall recruit nationally. Silvera received his first offer (Florida Atlantic) after his freshman season and later collected several high-profile offers, including Alabama, Auburn, Ohio State and Penn State. He visited Florida and Tennessee, but signed with his hometown Miami (Fla.) and was the No. 3 recruit in the Hurricanes 2018 class (behind Brevin Jordan). After four seasons at Miami, Silvera took advantage of the NCAA extra year of eligibility because of the pandemic and entered the transfer portal. He signed with Arizona State for his final season. His older brother (Justice) was an offensive lineman at Division II Concordia (2016-19). His younger brother (Boogsie) is a rising junior safety at FCS Charleston Southern. Silvera accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl.

STRENGTHS: Burly build with adequate length ... twitchy first step to fire off the ball ... above-average body quickness to threaten gaps and work laterally ... rolls his hips into contact with low pads to walk blockers backward with leverage ... uses bend to contort his frame to avoid latching hands ... his contact balance helps him work through crowded spaces near the pocket ... has a natural feel for blocking development to slant, avoid reaches and cut off run tracks ... pursues from the backside with effort and burst to close ... his 2022 Stanford tape gives evaluators proof that there is more pass rush potential ... jovial personality and doesn’t lack for energy on or off the field.

WEAKNESSES: Spends too much time attached if he doesn’t win with initial quickness ... struggles with move-to-move transitions as a pass rusher ... needs to add more nuance to his rush plan ... can be big boyed by powerful interior blockers who seal and turn him ... will guess wrong at times and abandon his gap responsibilities ... needs to pull up and avoid the unnecessary penalties (has a few unsportsmanlike conduct penalties on his resume) ... underwent right foot surgery as a sophomore after a camp injury (August 2019) and missed the first four games of the 2019 season.

SUMMARY: A one-year starter at Arizona State, Silvera played multiple techniques between the B-gaps in defensive coordinator Donnie Henderson’s scheme. After four years with his hometown Hurricanes, he transferred to Arizona State and quickly adapted to the new system, setting career-bests with 56 tackles. With his initial quickness, Silvera is usually the first out of his stance to cross the neutral zone with low pads and a feel for blocking scheme. He is active as a pass rusher, but doesn’t consistently go anywhere, relying more on effort and first-step burst than a coordinated attack (3.5 sacks in 53 career games represents his current rush skills). Silvera must develop more consistent hand usage to unlock all of his talent, but he flashes disruptive potential when working gaps. He projects best as a 1-tehcnique in a four-man front.

22. JERROD CLARK | Coastal Carolina

6035 | 334 lbs. | SSR

Dorchester, Mass. (Brighton)

#15

BACKGROUND: Jerrod (JER-ROD) Clark grew up south of Boston and started playing football at 7 years old and was often coached by his father throughout the youth levels. He enrolled at Brighton High School and played both ways as a tight end/wide receiver and on the defensive line. After playing sparingly as a freshman and semi-regular as a sophomore, Clark had his breakout campaign as a junior and helped lead Brighton to the 2016 Boston City League Division 4 North title. He finished his junior season with 28 catches and 12 touchdowns (despite wearing a cast on his left hand late in the season because of torn wrist ligaments), adding 78 tackles and three sacks on defense. Clark also was a standout power forward on the basketball team and led Brighton to the 2016-17 Boston City League Championship (22 points in the title game) as a junior.

A three-star recruit out of high school, Clark was the No. 78 tight end in the 2018 recruiting class and the No. 8 recruit in Massachusetts. Primarily recruited for offense as a 230-pound tight end, he heard from several Division II schools, but didn’t receive many offers. Coastal Carolina entered the picture and gave him his lone FBS offer. He redshirted during his first year on campus and added significant weight. Clark has been open that part of the reason behind his weight gain was bouts of depression after his girlfriend became pregnant and then suffered a miscarriage (December 2018) with their daughter. He moved to offensive line briefly before permanently moving to the defensive line in 2019. His older brother (Roland Singleton) was shot and killed in Dorchester in September 2016. Jerrod’s daughter (Nalani) was born March 27, 2023. He graduated with his degree in recreation and sport management (December 2022). Clark accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl.

STRENGTHS: Massive frame with natural girth and long arms ... added over 100 pounds since his senior year of high school as a 230-pound tight end ... occupies a large surface area to clog run lanes ... stacks the point of attack and displays the strength in his hands to pull blockers off balance ... able to walk defenders into the pocket with raw force ... moves better than most his size (his background as a tight end and basketball power forward is evident) ... gathers his feet to find his balance and engulf ball carriers (much better finisher now than his 2021 tape) ... has overcome numerous adversities (personal and football-related) and was voted a team captain as a senior.

WEAKNESSES: Top-heavy with fluctuating weight ... pops upright off the snap and relies on pure strength instead of a low, leveraged attack ... plays controlled, but not rangy and his closing quickness was intermittent ... needs to expand his rush skills beyond basic force ... his inconsistent lower-body bend disrupts his sink-and-balance transitions ... his medical evaluation will be critical: he hurt is back (November 2020) and required offseason spinal surgery (March 2021) to shave the L4 disc (the doctors told him it was a potentially career-ending injury); he missed the 2019 season after tearing the plantar fascia ligament in his foot (August 2019); suffered a partial tear of his shoulder labrum (February 2020).

SUMMARY: A three-year starter at Coastal Carolina, Clark lined up as the nose tackle in former defensive coordinator Chad Staggs' multiple scheme. A high school tight end, he transformed his body, changed positions and overcame multiple injuries to become a legitimate nose tackle prospect on NFL scouts' radars. Clark plays well on his feet to eat up space and uses his length to push the pocket. Stronger than he is explosive, his below-average leverage and hand usage will keep him glued to NFL blockers. Clark relies more on his raw strength than technical skill to win trench battles, but his package of size, length and foot quickness is worthy project for an NFL defensive line coach. He has the tools to become a rotational NFL nose tackle.

SUMMARY: Brodric Martin played his high school football a few miles away from the Alabama campus, going both ways as a tight end and defensive end. A no-star recruit, he landed at FCS-level North Alabama where he spent four years as a nose tackle. Prior to the 2021 season, he entered the transfer portal and was part of an impressive group of transfers to sign with WKU, including quarterback Bailey Zappe. Martin showed improved confidence with each game and turned himself into a legitimate NFL prospect as a senior. Martin is a light-footed big man with a decent first step to attack the outside leverage of blockers and the lateral quickness to stack and defend multiple gaps. He generates easy power from his legs and his upper half, including violent hands, but his technique fades quickly. Martin won't be a high-volume snap defender in the NFL, but he is a wrecking ball who can become a valuable part of a nose tackle rotation if given time to develop.

SUMMARY: Desjuan (DEZ-juan) Johnson grew up on the east side of Detroit and started playing football at age 5. Around the same time, his father (Dion), who played defensive tackle at Kansas, tragically passed away two years after he was paralyzed by a stray bullet to the head (which occurred on the same day he had a tryout with the Chicago Bears). Desjuan was a three-star recruit and signed with Toledo where he grew into one of the top linemen in the MAC. Johnson is a disruptive player (ranks third in school history with 47 tackles for loss) who wins with burst at the snap, violent hands and body control to maneuver his frame through cracks on the offensive line. He has a nose for the ball in the run game, but he plays upright and will struggle to disengage once blockers get into his chest. Overall, Johnson lacks ideal size or length for interior work, but he is quick off the ball with a knack for shooting gaps and disrupting the backfield rhythm with his play violence.

SUMMARY: Scott Matlock was placed with several foster families as a teenager after he tragically lost both parents: his father from testicular cancer (July 2009) and his mother from heart disease (December 2013). A Boise native, he was adopted by the Marose family in Wilder, Idaho, and transferred to Homedale High School. He was an all-conference tight end, offensive lineman and defensive lineman as a senior. A two-star recruit, he signed with Boise State as a defensive lineman, but also caught a pair of touchdowns in his career. His older brother (Steven) was a center at Idaho (2013-16). Matlock has a burly build with functional length and strong hands to stack and shed his man. He needs to be a better short-area finisher, but he bursts off the ball to make stops in his gap. Matlock had underwhelming backfield production at Boise, but his athletic profile and upfield skills to string together rush moves give him a chance to make an NFL roster as a three-technique.

SUMMARY: Patrick “PJ” Mustipher grew up in a football family. His older brother (Sam) was an offensive lineman at Notre Dame (2014-18) and played two seasons with the Bears while his father (Sam) played at West Virginia. He was a four-year starter at McDonogh School (14 sacks as a senior) and was the No. 1-ranked heavyweight wrestler in Maryland. A four-star recruit, he was Penn State’s starting nose in 2020 and returned from an ACL injury in 2022 to earn All-Big Ten honors. Mustipher is stout at the point of attack with the upper-body strength to work his way under blocks. He was a two-time team captain and “coach on the field,” according to defensive coordinator Manny Diaz. However, he is a heavy-footed plugger and lacks explosiveness in his hands and lower body to easily unwind and detach. Overall, Mustipher can fight for a spot in a rotation, but his labored movements and limited athleticism puts a cap on what he can provide an NFL defense.

SUMMARY: Devonnsa (duh-VAWN-shay) Maxwell, who is one of five children, prepped at Valdosta High where he was a defensive end and tight end. He led the program to a 14-2 record and a state title in 2016, finishing his senior year with 69 tackles, 10 tackles for loss and 5.5 sacks. He also threw the shot put and discus. He signed with FCS Chattanooga and became a five-year starter, setting school and SoCon records for career sacks (37.5). Maxwell showed his disruptive nature from various alignments (everywhere 4i to nose), generating pressure with his quickness off the ball and nimble feet to feel his way through gaps (55.5 tackles for loss in 47 career games). He was asked to play a lot of snaps and would coast on some plays but played well versus top competition (two sacks on 2022 Illinois tape). Overall, Maxwell will struggle to control blocks and maintain his base laterally, but his first step burst and power create havoc, projecting best as a rotational one-gapper.

SUMMARY: Jacob Slade grew up in the heart of Buckeye country and attended Olentangy High. As a senior, he earned All-State honors as a left tackle while also being named All-District on defense with 73 tackles and 13 tackles for loss. A three-star recruit, he committed to Michigan State along with his twin brother (Zachary), who is also a defensive end. His college production doesn't jump off the page, but he was disruptive versus the run on his 2021 tape and when healthy in 2022. Slade plays under his pads with the quick hands to get into blocks and establish gap leverage. Against double-teams, he can hold his ground or knife through to make stops in the hole. His pass rush is based more on effort and desire than a technically proficient attack. He missed too many tackles on his 2022 tape. Overall, Slade's tight lower body restricts his range and movements, but he is stout and instinctive at the point of attack, projecting as a rotational one-technique run stuffer.

SUMMARY: Cory Durden, who has a young son (Jaxxon) and daughter (Olivianna) with his fiancée (Briana), prepped at Newberry with 52 tackles and six sacks as a senior to go along with 22 catches as a tight end. A three-star recruit, he committed to Florida State (over Alabama, Georgia and others) and played four seasons before transferring to NC State. He became a team captain for the Wolfpack and earned All-ACC honors in both of his seasons in Raleigh. Durden has a long, workable frame with the foot quickness to elude blockers and attack gaps, despite body tightness that leads to missed backfield tackles. He displays a leveraged, upward strike with his heavy hands to shock, press and find the ball carrier. But excessive leaning and technique that seems to come and go leaves him on the ground too much. Overall, Durden flashes disruptive qualities when all cylinders are firing, but he needs to improve his overall consistency to warrant an extended look in the NFL.

SUMMARY: Taron Vincent grew up around the game as the son of an All-Pro cornerback. His father (Troy) currently serves as the Executive Vice President of Football Operations for the NFL. Taron started his prep career at Gilman School in Baltimore before transferring to IMG Academy where he was named the 2017 National High School Defensive Player of the Year. A five-star recruit, he signed with the Buckeyes to play for legendary defensive line coach Larry Johnson. His career production doesn't jump off the page, but he would often do the dirty work, eating up blocks and allowing the linebackers to flow to the football. He allows himself to get high at times and can be moved from his spot (see 2022 Rutgers tape), but with proper leverage and gap discipline, he anchors and controls the point of attack. Overall, Vincent isn't a disruptive pass rusher, but he is assignment sound with a consistent motor and could find a rotation in the NFL as a run-plugging three-technique.

1. DREW SANDERS | Arkansas 6043 | 235 lbs. | 3JR Denton, Texas (Ryan) 12/31/2000 (age 22.33) #42

BACKGROUND: Drew Sanders, who is the youngest of two children, grew up in Oregon and spent his childhood in Hood River (his parents' hometown), Tigard and Pendleton as his father (Mitch) was a high school football coach and athletic director. At age 5, Drew started playing multiple sports, but his focus was wrestling and football where he was coached by his father throughout the pee-wee and youth levels. In the summer of 2016, the family moved from Oregon to North Texas where Mitch was hired as the wide receivers coach at Lake Dallas high School. Drew enrolled at Lake Dallas for his freshman season in 2016 and made varsity as a linebacker before he was pressed into action at quarterback because of injuries, leading the team in rushing yards (438) and touchdowns (8). Mitch accepted a position as the assistant head football coach at Colleyville Heritage in 2017, and Drew followed for his sophomore season, recording 44 tackles and serving as the backup quarterback. Mitch switched jobs again in 2018 when he accepted an assistant coaching position at Denton Ryan, and Drew followed for his final two prep seasons. As a junior linebacker and wildcat quarterback, Sanders finished with 119 tackles, 18.0 tackles for loss, 8.0 sacks and three interceptions (two returned for touchdowns), adding 17 touchdowns (13 rushing, 4 passing) on offense. As a senior, he moved to defensive end and posted 54 tackles, 32.0 tackles for loss, 11.0 sacks and two interceptions, earning the 2019 Landry Player of the Year as the top player in North Texas. On offense, he scored 15 touchdowns as a quarterback (10 rushing, 5 passing) while also seeing more action at receiver, where he had 34 receptions for 717 yards and 12 touchdowns as a senior. Sanders ran track throughout high school and posted one of the best 100-meter times (10.91) in Denton Ryan history as a junior. He also set a personal best in the 200-meters (22.41).

A five-star recruit, Sanders was the No. 1 athlete in the 2020 recruiting class (No. 22 overall) and the No. 3 recruit in Texas behind RB Zach Evans (TCU/Ole Miss) and CB Jaylon Jones (Texas A&M). The summer after his freshman year, he collected offers from several national programs like Baylor, Oklahoma and Oregon. He initially committed to the Sooners during his sophomore season but added offers from Alabama, Georgia, Notre Dame and others and flipped to the Crimson Tide after his junior season. Sanders was one of four five-star recruits in Alabama's 2020 class, joining QB Bryce Young, DE Will Anderson and LB Chris Braswell. After Christopher Allen was injured in the 2021 season opener, Sanders took over as the Tide's starting SAM outside linebacker, but he suffered a hand injury (October 2021) and Dallas Turner took over the starting role the rest of the season. After the 2021 season, Sanders entered the transfer portal and considered Oklahoma and Texas before signing with Arkansas (and moved to MIKE linebacker). His father played college football at Willamette and Oregon State (redshirted) before retiring because of knee injuries. Drew's older sister (Shelby) played college basketball at Portland State (2014-15). Sanders opted out of the Razorbacks' 2022 bowl game and elected to skip his senior season to enter the 2023 NFL Draft.

STRENGTHS: Rangy off-ball athlete with length and moldable frame ... maneuvers around blockers with his twitch and body flexibility ... quick to trigger laterally and cut off outside lanes before redirecting and trapping cutbacks ... competes with shock in his hands as a downhill player ... effective rusher with the physical hands and knee bend to convert his speed to power ... play strength through contact and active limbs help him escape blocks ... flies around with nonstop energy and doesn’t know how to go half-speed ... plays with instincts in reverse to track the eyes of quarterback and find passing lanes ... lives in the weight room and his disciplined approach to training and nutrition have been a part of his life since childhood ... the son of a coach, he is highly determined and has been mentally preparing for this opportunity for a long time ... was a core special-teamer in his two seasons at Alabama ... experienced at multiple positions in the front seven and can play both off the ball or as an edge rusher ... highly productive junior season and joined Will Anderson as the only two SEC players with 9.0-plus sacks in 2022 ... became just the second FBS player since 2000 (Khalil Mack in 2013) with 95-plus tackles, 12.0-plus tackles for loss, 8.0-plus sacks, three forced fumbles, a fumble recovery and an interception in the same season.

WEAKNESSES: Frustrating missed tackles ... needs to be a stronger finisher and not allow runners to step out ... overaggressive vs. the run and must continue to mature his understanding of field leverage ... leaves open lanes for runners when he gets sucked up or out-angled by climbing blocks ... his take-on skills and disengagement require maturation before he can be a consistent NFL player ... over-reliant on build up speed and forward lean as a pass rusher and must develop a more consistent plan ... his momentum stalls quickly when he rushes high and blockers get underneath him ... his high-cut body type hinders his change of direction at times ... missed three games as a sophomore because of a right hand injury (October 2021) and wore a cast/club when he returned to the field.

SUMMARY: A one-year starter at Arkansas, Sanders played MIKE linebacker in former defensive coordinator Barry Odom’s 4-2-5 base scheme, also seeing snaps as an edge rusher. A five-star “athlete” out of high school, he spent two seasons at Alabama before betting on himself and flourishing as a transfer at Arkansas in 2022, becoming just the eighth unanimous All-American in school history (the first linebacker). A long, lean athlete, Sanders is cunning and agile with the instincts of both an off-ball player and pass rusher. He posted impressive numbers as a first-year starter, but there were too many “almost” tackles on tape, and he left production on the field with his tendency to overpursue (had 3-plus missed tackles in five games in 2022). Overall, Sanders must become a more skilled tackle finisher and take-on player, but he offers intriguing versatility as a “do-everything” front-seven defender thanks to his size and athletic range. He is an ascending player with the talent to be a matchup linebacker and occasional pass rusher in the NFL.

GRADE: 1st-2nd Round (No. 28 overall)

2. TRENTON SIMPSON | Clemson 6023 | 235 lbs. | 3JR Charlotte, N.C. (Mallard Creek) 6/14/2001 (age 21.87) #22

BACKGROUND: Trenton “Trent” Simpson was born in Columbus, Ga., (at Fort Benning) and raised by his mother (Dionna Ford) while his father served in the U.S. Army. As part of a military family, he spent his childhood moving around to different bases, mostly in Georgia, and made friends by playing football at each stop (started playing football at age 6). The family settled in Charlotte, and Simpson enrolled at Mallard Creek High School, where he was teammates with Philadelphia Eagles defensive tackle Jordan Davis (also the alma mater of Jalen Samuels and DJ Humphries). As a sophomore running back, he rushed for 428 yards and one touchdown, helping Mallard Creek to a 14-1 record and the 2017 4AA state championship game. After adding linebacker duties as a junior, Simpson led Mallard Creek to an undefeated regular season as a senior (lost in the first playoff game) with 98 tackles, 45.0 tackles for loss and 18.0 sacks, adding 371 rushing yards and six touchdowns on offense. He was named a first team All-American and won the 2019 Arnold R. Solomon Award as the top high school football player in North Carolina. Simpson also lettered in basketball and track, setting a personal best in the 100 meters (11.15) as a junior.

A five-star recruit, Simpson was the No. 1 outside linebacker in the 2020 recruiting class and the No. 1 recruit in North Carolina. He was ranked as the No. 26 overall recruit nationally. Simpson started collecting offers from almost every ACC and SEC program and initially announced a final five of Auburn, Georgia, Miami (Fla.), North Carolina and Tennessee. He committed to Auburn the summer prior to his senior season but decommitted midway through his senior year. He was still considering Auburn and North Carolina, but he considered Clemson his “dream school” and signed with the Tigers just days after head coach Dabo Swinney offered him. His father (Timothy), who was also a standout running back and linebacker in high school and was a decorated Command Sergeant Major in the U.S. Army Rangers (1994-2021), including 17 overseas tours. Simpson graduated with his degree in sports communications (December 2022). He skipped his senior season to enter the 2023 NFL Draft.

STRENGTHS: Outstanding athleticism and play range ... unlocks his hips, beelines to the football and closes with burst ... routinely makes perimeter tackles outside the numbers ... long-limbed, explosive striker, regardless of angle ... rallies to the football with urgency ... physical hands to work off climbing blocks or create knock back downhill ... above-average blitzzer and infiltrates the backfield in different ways ... demolishes running backs in pass protection ... has no problem matching tight end speed on vertical seams/posts ... alert in zone to pick up backside crossers ... saw coverage snaps vs. slot receivers ... body beautiful with a trim, muscular frame and room to add additional mass ... proven versatility and the coaches felt comfortable moving him around the field ... wasn’t a core special teamer in college, but has the profile to be one in the NFL.

WEAKNESSES: Average anticipation and processing ... often late to read/react to the mesh point ... his take-on hands are more physical than refined ... his missed tackles are usually of the fly-by variety because his angle was off a few degrees ... his pursuit gets stuck in overdrive, which disrupts his finishing fundamentals ... guilty of tackling high and falling off his man ... leggy and upright in his transitions ... wasn't a playmaker in coverage and left some production on the field (zero career interceptions) ... struggles to find the football once his back is turned ... pass rush arsenal isn't fully realized yet ... missed two games because of an ankle injury (November 2022) and was hampered down the stretch.

SUMMARY: A two-year starter at Clemson, Simpson played both WILL and SAM linebacker in defensive coordinator Wes Goodwin's 4-3 base scheme. The son of an Army Ranger, he was a hybrid performer for the Tigers, and the coaches relied on his versatility, using him as a nickel on one play and an edge rusher the next. An impressive size/speed athlete, Simpson plays physically to work off blockers and appears to be moving at a different gear than the rest of the pursuit thanks to his short-area burst and acceleration. Though he plays with urgency, he must show better control as a tackler and improve his coverage awareness to lock down a full-time gig versus NFL skill players. Overall, Simpson must continue developing his play recognition to translate his immense talent into playmaking production, but he is an active ball hunter with the pursuit speed and appetite for contact to fill multiple roles. He projects best in a fast-flowing defense where he can be a run-and-hit backer and handle overhang responsibilities.

GRADE: 1st-2nd Round (No. 38 overall)

3. JACK CAMPBELL | Iowa 6045 | 249 lbs. | 4SR Cedar Falls, Iowa (Cedar Falls) 8/22/2000 (age 22.68) #31

BACKGROUND: Jack Campbell, the oldest of three boys, grew up in Cedar Falls (110 miles northeast of Des Moines) and was a three-sport standout at Cedar Falls High School. He became a varsity starter as a sophomore and recorded 59 tackles, 6.0 tackles for loss and 1.0 sack. Campbell moved from the weakside to middle linebacker for his final two seasons, and he finished his junior year with 111 tackles, 8.0 tackles for loss, 5.0 sacks and one interception to earn first team All-District honors. As a senior, he set the school record for tackles (168) and helped lead Cedar Falls to the 2018 4A state championship game. Campbell was voted captain of the Class 4A All-State team and was the district's Defensive Player of the Year. He still holds the school record for career tackles (338). Campbell was the leading rebounder for the Cedar Falls boys' basketball teams that won back-to-back 4A state titles his junior and senior seasons. He also lettered in track and competed in sprint events.

A three-star recruit, Campbell was the No. 44 outside linebacker in the 2019 recruiting class and the No. 4 recruit in Iowa. He was also considered a college basketball recruit, but his dream was to play college football. Campbell received his first scholarship offer from Iowa the summer prior to his junior year. He considered offers from Iowa State, Minnesota and Northern Iowa before committing to the Hawkeyes. His father (Dave) was a high school tight end before he transitioned to the offensive line at Northern Iowa (1985-89). Jack's parents divorced when he was young, and both remarried (he has several step-siblings along with his two younger brothers). His younger brother (Drew) is a junior defensive end at Cedar Falls High School and has received scholarship offers from Iowa and Iowa State. Campbell graduated with his degree in enterprise leadership (December 2022) with a 3.49 GPA. His girlfriend (Megan Meyer) played college basketball for two seasons at Iowa (2019-21) before transferring to Drake. Campbell declined his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl.

PRO DAY	6045	251	31 1/4	10 1/4	78 1/2	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	(no bench press – left elbow)

STRENGTHS: Above-average size and frame with room to add more mass ... anticipates well and trusts his eyes to play out in front ... has the range and awareness to mirror the run at the line of scrimmage ... shows the gap-to-gap quickness and lateral shuffle to work around the noise and find the ball carrier ... transitions well in his zone coverage drops (his 6.74 three-cone and 4.24 short shuttle were No. 1 among linebackers at the Combine) ... displays a keen sense for route spacing and finds passing lanes (15 career passes defended) ... plays with the body strength to match up with blockers ... elite toughness ... two-year team captain in high school and again in college ... not very vocal, but his teammates say he sets the tone with his tenacious effort, and his coaches call him an "amazing" practice player (Iowa head coach Kirk Ferentz: "Everything he does, he goes hard") ... egoless and humble off the field (didn't pursue NIL deals and considers social media a "distraction") ... film study in the foundation of his game ... became the first Iowa player to win the William V. Campbell Trophy (Academic Heisman) ... combined for 271 tackles over his final two seasons.

WEAKNESSES: Doesn't play with sudden twitch in his lower half to quickly react to ball carriers or blockers, especially in space (his testing showed better short-area suddenness than on tape) ... average lateral and closing burst ... occasionally waits for the action instead of thumping downhill consistently ... inconsistent stack-and-shed skills and must improve his leverage, reach and handwork ... vision is focused on the ball and late to locate climbing or side-angled blocks ... needs a clear lane to be effective as a blitzing ... strong tackler, but not an explosive tackler ... missed 2022 spring practices because of a knee injury ... has battled a nagging left UCL injury.

SUMMARY: A two-year starter at Iowa, Campbell was the "MIKE" linebacker in defensive coordinator Phil Parker's 4-3 base scheme. Head coach Kirk Ferentz wanted to move him to defensive end or center as a freshman because of his frame, but Campbell pushed to stay at linebacker and averaged 10.0 tackles in his 27 starts, and became the first Hawkeyes player to win the Butkus Award (nation's top linebacker) and William V. Campbell Trophy (academic Heisman). Fueled by his preparation and smarts, Campbell plays with impressive play speed and awareness vs. both the run and the pass, working relentlessly to maximize everything in his tool box. Though he has a keen eye for tendencies and a nose for the ball, he tends to wait instead of attacking downhill and struggles to quickly redirect/react when ball carriers or route runners put a move on him. Overall, Campbell is inconsistent as a thumper, but his athleticism, intangibles and instincts will keep him in the NFL for a long time. He has the talent to compete for starting reps as an NFL rookie.

GRADE: 2nd Round (No. 52 overall)

4. DAIYAN HENLEY | Washington State 6007 | 225 lbs. | 6SR Los Angeles, Calif. (Crenshaw) 11/18/1999 (age 23.44) #1

BACKGROUND: Daiyan (Day-on) Henley, who is one of four children, grew up in South Central Los Angeles and started playing football at age 5. He also played multiple other sports throughout his childhood, including martial arts. He played primarily quarterback throughout youth leagues and into high school. Throughout his childhood, Henley was the ball boy for Crenshaw High School, including when De’Anthony Thomas led the team to the state championship game in 2019. He enrolled at Crenshaw for high school and became the starting quarterback as a sophomore. Henley was named co-MVP of the Coliseum League as a junior, leading Crenshaw to the playoffs in 2016. The team was forced to replace a lot of key contributors in 2017, and Henley filled in at defensive end, safety, wide receiver and kicking duties as a senior, along with his regular quarterback duties.

A two-star recruit, Henley was the No. 150 pro-style quarterback in the 2018 recruiting class and the No. 380 recruit in California. At only 180 pounds, he wasn’t highly recruited and received walk-on opportunities from nearby UCLA and USC. However, Henley opted for Nevada, the only program to give him a full scholarship. He signed as an “athlete” and moved to wide receiver for his first two seasons in Reno. After seeing defensive reps in 2018, Henley moved full-time to safety in 2019 and linebacker in 2020. After leading the team in tackles as a first-year starter in 2021, he took advantage of the extra year of eligibility because of COVID rules and entered the transfer portal for his sixth season. More widely recruited the second time around, Henley considered Kansas State, USC and Washington before choosing Washington State. He followed newly hired Cougars’ defensive coordinator Brian Ward, who was Henley’s linebacker coach and defensive coordinator at Nevada. Henley graduated with his degree in criminal justice at Nevada and enrolled at Washington State in January 2022. His father (Eugene or “Big U”), who was profiled on the FX documentary “Hip Hop Uncovered,” is a well-known music executive who has worked with famous artists like Snoop Dogg and the late Nipsey Hussle. The former kingpin of a violent gang, Eugene was sentenced to 23 years (served 12 years) in prison for attempting to steal 33 pounds of cocaine from an undercover police officer in 1992. Eugene, who was released from prison in 2004 when Daiyan was 4, now runs a non-profit foundation called “Developing Options” to help put youth on the path to success. Daiyan’s mother (Stacey) also works with the foundation. Henley opted out of the 2022 bowl game and accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl.

STRENGTHS: Cut-up, muscular build with long arms and low body fat ... displays determined play range and recovery speed ... scrapes well laterally at the line of scrimmage to move from gap to gap or chase down plays outside the numbers ... gets a head start and gives blockers the slip thanks to his play recognition ... strong hands as a tackler and finishes well in the open-field ... wasn’t asked to play much man coverage in college, but showed patient feet and quick change of direction during Senior Bowl drills ... was a newcomer to the WSU program but was well-liked in the locker room ... attacked multiple position changes over his college career with the mindset of “whatever I can do to get on the field” ... talent translates very well to special teams (630 special teams snaps in college) and led WSU in special teams tackles (five) in 2022 while only playing on punt coverages.

WEAKNESSES: Average play strength and can be washed or bullied once blockers get their hands on him ... late to disengage when working through congestion ... has shown improvement as a take-on player to stack and work off blocks, but he is better off eluding blockers ... not a knock-back tackler ... has room to tighten up his pursuit angles and finish techniques ... gives up too many completions in front of him and is often a tick late jumping underneath routes in zone coverage ... inconsistent blitz and his pass rush quickly stalls at contact, even by running back blocks.

SUMMARY: A one-year starter at Washington State, Henley played WILL linebacker in former defensive coordinator Brian Ward’s 4-2-5 base scheme. A high school quarterback in Los Angeles, he played multiple positions (wide receiver, safety, nickel) at Nevada before moving to linebacker in 2020 and transferring to Washington State in 2022 (led the Cougars in tackles, tackles for loss and forced fumbles). A determined chaser, Henley has the play speed to find quality fits in the run game, and his quick-reaction skills are a solid starting point as he builds his coverage ability. With only average core power, he can get hung up in traffic in the tackle box, but missed tackles were tough to find on his tape. Overall, Henley has only been playing linebacker since 2020, and that inexperience shows at times, but he is quick to key and close with sideline-to-sideline range and tackling skills. He is an ascending run-and-chase backer and core special teamer in the NFL.

GRADE: 2nd-3rd Round (No. 65 overall)

5. NICK HERBIG | Wisconsin 6021 | 240 lbs. | 3JR Kauai, Hawaii (Saint Louis) 11/21/2001 (age 21.43) #19

BACKGROUND: Nicholas “Nick” Herbig, who is the youngest of three boys, was born and raised on the Hawaiian island of Kauai, where he played multiple sports starting at age 6. His football journey started in the second grade and continued through middle school. For the Herbig boys to play high school football at the highest level, their maternal grandparents moved from Kauai to Oahu, allowing the boys to move in with them and enroll at Saint Louis School (an all-boys Catholic school in Honolulu that has produced several NFL players, including Marcus Mariota and Tua Tagovailoa). Playing primarily as a hybrid edge defender, Herbig helped lead Saint Louis to four consecutive state championships, earning All-State honors as a junior and senior. He finished his final season with 54 tackles, 21.0 tackles for loss, 11.0 sacks and 2 forced fumbles (missed one game because of a suspension), earning 2019 Defensive Player of the Year honors in Hawaii. Herbig also played basketball growing up and in high school.

A four-star recruit, Herbig was the No. 9 outside linebacker in the 2020 recruiting class and the No. 2 recruit in Hawaii (behind Notre Dame linebacker Jordan Botelho). He collected several impressive West Coast offers, including Cal, Stanford, UCLA, USC and Washington (plus offers from Oklahoma and Tennessee). However, Herbig had his mind set on creating his own path at a culture-rich program away from the Pacific Ocean. Despite never traveling to the Midwest, he loved his recruiting trip to Wisconsin prior to his senior year in June 2019 and committed before he got on the plane back home. His older brother (Nate) was an All-Pac-12 guard at Stanford (2016-18) and signed with the Philadelphia Eagles as an undrafted free agent, playing three seasons (2019-21) with the Eagles before signing with the New York Jets (2022). Two years ago, his mother (Robyn) and father (Bruce) bought a home on the west side of Madison where they live in the basement while Nick and two teammates (Kaden Johnson and Kamo'i Latu) live upstairs. Herbig elected to skip the 2022 bowl game and skip his senior season to enter the 2023 NFL Draft.

STRENGTHS: Natural bender with the take-off speed to put blockers on their heels ... strong arc acceleration and uses a physical chop move to dip his inside shoulder and grease the corner ... inside quickness to cross the face of blockers ... flashes shock and violence in his hands ... shows the hip flexibility to stunt, drop or work tight spaces ... always in chase mode with dogged pursuit from the backside ... quick to redirect and get back up to full speed ... beneficiary of the “older brother” theory and frequently trains with his NFL brother (Herbig: “I wouldn’t be here without my older brother ... he is my backbone.”) ... he already understands the work ethic and training required for the next level ... one of three 2022 captains for the Badgers ... intense competitor and wired a little differently than most players (former Badgers defensive coordinator Jim Leonhard: “He’s a guy who brings energy and passion to the game of football.”) ... above-average backfield production in college.

WEAKNESSES: Narrow-framed and lacks desired bulk or arm length for edge work ... play strength is average at best in the run game ... will struggle to hold the point-of-attack vs. NFL blockers ... gets himself in trouble trying to jump the snap count as a rusher ... often finds himself too far upfield in his rush, opening lanes for the quarterback ... hands are more violent than nuanced ... inexperienced as a true drop-and-cover player ... unproven ball and movement skills for man-to-man responsibilities ... arrives at the ball with bad intentions, but needs to stay controlled to be a more functionally-sound tackler (also had two personal fouls in 2022) ... suspended one game as a senior in high school for an off-campus fight (October 2019) ... missed one game as a junior because of a knee injury (October 2022).

SUMMARY: A three-year starter at Wisconsin, Herbig was a stand-up edge rusher in former defensive coordinator Jim Leonhard’s 3-4 base defense. Accounting for more tackles for loss (36.0) than games played (31) in his career, he was a frequent visitor in the opponent’s backfield and led the Badgers in sacks each of the past two seasons. Despite being undersized, Herbig rushes with the intensity and hand strength of a defensive end to skirt blockers both inside and out. He never shuts down his motor in pursuit, but he is an inconsistent edge-setter and NFL teams won’t hesitate to run at him. Overall, Herbig isn’t built to handle multiple gaps or align in closed areas in the NFL, but he has the explosive get-off, hand usage and backfield instincts to pester quarterbacks. While currently not a true every-down NFL player, his impact will be felt as a sub-rusher and offers additional value if he evolves his off-ball skills.

6. HENRY TO’OTO’O | Alabama 6010 | 227 lbs. | 4SR Sacramento, Calif. (De La Salle) 1/5/2001 (age 22.31) #10

BACKGROUND: Henry To’oto’o (TOE-oh-TOE-oh), who is the second-oldest of eight children, is of Samoan and Tongan descent and grew up in south Sacramento (also spent two years in Utah). His father (Iese), who played linebacker in high school and had an offer from San Diego State before off-field trouble, started training Henry and his brothers at a young age and used football as a way to keep them away from gang-related trouble. To’oto’o attended Burbank High School in Sacramento as a freshman before his family moved to the Bay Area so he could attend De La Salle High School, a private Catholic school east of Oakland. He originally started on the JV squad as a sophomore before he was called up to varsity, where he was teammates with Isaiah Foskey and his older brother (Sos). To’oto’o played both ways as a linebacker and running back in his three seasons on varsity. As a senior captain, he finished with 76 tackles, 17.0 tackles for loss and 4.0 sacks, adding 489 rushing yards (8.9 yards per carry average) and three touchdowns on offense. To’oto’o led De La Salle to a 12-1 record with its lone loss coming in the state championship game against Mater Dei (he played the game with a broken left foot that he suffered in practice). He won numerous All-American awards and was named the 2018 Defensive Player of the Year in California (Kayvon Thibodeaux won the award the year prior).

A four-star recruit, To’oto’o was the No. 3 outside linebacker in the 2019 recruiting class (No. 44 recruit nationally) and the No. 7 recruit in California (second-highest ranked defender behind Thibodeaux). He received dozens of offers throughout his junior and senior years before whittling down his choice to Alabama, Tennessee or Washington. To’oto’o was considered a strong Alabama lean, but that changed when defensive coordinator Tosh Lupoi (De La Salle alum) left to join the Cleveland Browns’ coaching staff. On signing day, he committed to Tennessee partly because of his connection with head coach Jeremy Pruitt and Director of Player Development Kevin Simon (De La Salle alum). After two seasons with the Volunteers, To’oto’o decided to enter the transfer portal in January 2021 after Pruitt’s dismissal. He chose Alabama over Ohio State and several other top programs. To’oto’o graduated with his degree (December 2020). He accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl.

STRENGTHS: Instinctive player and keys quickly ... excellent twitch in his lower body to trigger-and-go ... stays on his toes to quickly redirect and make open-field stops ... plays decisively and quickly accelerates, which expands his range ... veteran football sense to be in the right spot or leverage gaps with his pursuit angles ... sees through climbing blocks to navigate all the moving parts ... fearless tackler and attacks with teeth ... highly trustworthy, and teammates say he is an extension of head coach Nick Saban on the field ... raised in the Polynesian culture, and family and faith are the most important parts of his life (his father is ordained in the Church of Latter Day Saints) ... versatile experience, playing weakside backer at Tennessee before moving inside at Alabama ... started 50 games in his career, averaging 7.1 tackles per start.

WEAKNESSES: Maxed-out body type and lacks ideal length, which often shows on tape ... not a powerful tackler with average-at-best finishing strength ... needs to show better patience when settling his feet as a tackler ... guilty of too many fly-by or shoe-lace tackle attempts in space ... hasn't been a playmaker in coverage ... needs to do a better job sniffing out pass lanes before throws are by him ... didn't miss a game in college but cracked the fifth metatarsal on his left foot prior to his final game in high school (December 2018).

SUMMARY: A two-year starter at Alabama, To'oTo'o played MIKE linebacker in Nick Saban's multiple scheme and was responsible for all the defensive calls. After leading Tennessee in tackles as a sophomore, he transferred to the Tide and quickly established himself as both the sparkplug and conscience of the defense, totaling 206 tackles over his two seasons in Tuscaloosa. To'oTo'o doesn't know how to play slow and covers a ton of ground thanks to his diagnose skills and reaction quickness. He can be inconsistent as a take-on player, especially vs. climbing blocks, and he needs to improve his feel for passing lanes in zone coverage. Overall, you wish To'oTo'o were longer, bigger and stronger, but he is a right place-right time type of player because of his instinctive run fits and play range. He has the football smarts and trigger to see the field on defense as an NFL rookie.

GRADE: 3rd-4th Round (No. 99 overall)

7. DORIAN WILLIAMS | Tulane 6010 | 228 lbs. | 4SR Indian Land, S.C. (Indian Land) 6/28/2001 (age 21.83) #2

BACKGROUND: Dorian Williams, who is the youngest of four children, enrolled at Indian Land High School where he was a four-year letterman and became a starter as a sophomore safety. Despite a 2-11 record in 2017, he had a productive junior season with 73 tackles, 17.0 tackles for loss, seven pass break-ups and two interceptions, earning All-Region honors. Williams played more of a hybrid safety/linebacker role as a senior and helped Indian Land to a postseason berth and the school's first playoff win since 2005. He finished his final season with a team-best 97 tackles, 11.0 tackles for loss, six pass break-ups, two interceptions and one forced fumble. Williams also lettered in basketball and was in the chorus at Indian Land.

A three-star recruit, Williams was the No. 176 outside linebacker in the 2019 recruiting class and the No. 47 recruit in South Carolina. Coming from a smaller high school not known for producing Division I football recruits, he wasn't a well-known player on the recruiting trail. After his junior season, Williams picked up offers from FCS Campbell and Charleston Southern and a pair of FBS programs, Coastal Carolina and Troy. He originally committed to Coastal in June 2018 prior to his senior year, but Tulane entered the picture toward the end of his senior season, and he flipped to the Green Wave (Williams: "The academics were important to me and my parents."). Williams was part of the same Tulane recruiting class as fellow three-star Tyjae Spears. He accepted an invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl but pulled out after the second practice because of a fractured wrist.

PRO DAY	6006	227	-	-	-	-	-	-	35	-	-	-	-	(vertical and position drills only – wrist)

STRENGTHS: Rangy athlete with plus speed and length for the position ... physical in the run game with the lateral quick to scrape and pursue ... accelerates in a flash to string out runs without the ball carrier reaching the corner ... doesn't have a ton of power behind his tackles, but he uses knee-bend and steady form to spring into his strikes ... his missed tackle rate decreased each season ... drops to his landmarks with ease in zone while also showing the speed to stick with backs and tight ends on wheels ... displays a natural feel for timing and closing ability as a blitzing ... young for his class ... NFL scouts say he has dependable character and is "well-liked" in the locker room ... was a core special-teamer in college (759 special team snaps) ... led the team in tackles two of the past three seasons.

WEAKNESSES: Lean-framed and lacks desired bulk ... needs to see plays unfold quicker to get a head start ... long-levered, but his shed skills are inconsistent, and he can be bounced around when stuck in traffic ... bad habit of attacking blockers with his shoulder instead of using repeatable hands to punch his way off contact ... usually gets his man on the ground, but average tackling strength means the ball carrier will often get an extra yard or two on his way down ... moves well in coverage but awareness vs. the pass isn't on an NFL level just yet ... suffered a fractured wrist in the second Senior Bowl practice (February 2023) and required surgery, which limited him the rest of the pre-draft process.

SUMMARY: A three-year starter at Tulane, Williams played WILL linebacker in head coach Willie Fritz's 4-2-5 base scheme and combined for 303 tackles the last three seasons. He had a career year as a senior and played a key role in the greatest one-year turnaround in college football history as the Green Wave went from 2-10 in 2021 to 12-2 in 2022, including a Cotton Bowl win against USC (Williams was the defensive MVP of the game). With his rangy athleticism, Williams is fluid-moving in pursuit and coverage with the tackling skills that fill up the stat sheet. However, he can be caught going with the flow because of inconsistent key-reads, and he doesn't have the power to be a line-of-scrimmage thumper. Overall, you wish Williams played with better anticipation, but once he sees it, he gets there in a hurry and has the tools desired for a modern-day developmental linebacker. He has the profile of a key special teamer with the talent to eventually compete for NFL starting reps.

GRADE: 3rd-4th Round

8. DEMARVION OVERSHOWN | Texas 6025 | 229 lbs. | 5SR Arp, Texas (Arp) 8/13/2000 (age 22.71) #0

BACKGROUND: DeMarvion (deh-MAR-vee-on) Overshown, who is one of four children, was born in Tyler, Texas, and started playing football at age 6. He attended Arp High School, where he started as a defensive end and linebacker as a sophomore. Overshown moved to safety as a junior and had his breakout season with 173 tackles and three interceptions as he helped Arp advance to the Class 3A Division-II state semifinals. As a senior, he finished with 142 tackles, 14.0 tackles for loss, 5.0 sacks, five interceptions and four forced fumbles. Overshown, who also lined up as a receiver on offense, received a number of accolades for his 2017 season, including first team All-State and District Defensive MVP honors.

A four-star recruit, Overshown was the No. 6 ranked safety in the 2018 recruiting class (No. 52 overall) and the No. 5 recruit in Texas. He received more than two dozen scholarship offers from several of the top programs, including Alabama, Clemson, LSU, Ohio State and USC. Overshown verbalized to Texas after his junior season and stayed true to that commitment by signing with the Longhorns. He played safety in his first two seasons in Austin before moving to linebacker prior to his junior year. Overshown took advantage of the extra year of eligibility due to COVID rules and returned to Austin for his fifth season. He graduated with his degree in December 2022. Overshown opted out of the 2022 bowl game and accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl.

STRENGTHS: Plays with the explosive range of a former safety to make plays at either sideline ... can really run and looks like he was shot out of a cannon when he pulls the trigger in pursuit ... mirrors with ease laterally to find run lanes ... his downhill speed as a blitzing safety is a tough ask for any offensive lineman in space ... flexible movements to avoid and slip blocks ... fierce tackler, and doesn't hold back at contact ... seeks out the de-cleating hit, but also judicious about dishing out his play violence ... can run with backs or tight ends in coverage ... has the speed and mentality to be a core special teamer ... logged 472 special teams snaps in his career, including a career-high 147 snaps as a senior (five tackles) ... finished his career with 30.5 tackles for loss ... experienced at multiple positions.

WEAKNESSES: Slightly undersized with lean muscle tone ... plays physically, but his take-on skills are immature ... too easily neutralized and taken for a ride by climbing blockers ... has to see it and process it before attacking ... pursuit is often stuck in overdrive and struggles to break down in space vs. shifty ball carriers, leading to missed tackles ... strike zone is wildly inconsistent, frequently attacking high and falling off his target ... plays fast but not always loose ... disappointing coverage anticipation on tape ... missed time over the years with minor injuries, including a knee injury (August 2018), back issue (September 2019), shoulder injury (March 2021), concussion (October 2021) and left toe injury (November 2021) ... issued a citation for possession of marijuana (December 2021).

SUMMARY: A three-year starter at Texas, Overshown played the SAM linebacker position in defensive coordinator Pete Kwiatkowski's 4-3 base scheme. After moving from defensive back to linebacker under Chris Ash in 2020, he learned a new scheme under Kwiatkowski in 2021 and expanded his role as more of an edge presence in 2022. Overshown has the frame of a lean, oversized safety and creates plays with his sideline-to-sideline range and attacking mentality. A see-ball, get-ball type of player, he diagnoses well and keeps his eyes locked on the ball carrier, but not the climbing blocker ahead of him and will struggle to sift through traffic. Overall, Overshown must continue developing his strength and awareness within the flow of the play, but he has above-average speed to be an energetic run-and-hit pursuit player with upside in coverage. He projects as core NFL special teamer and subpackage rush/drop linebacker.

9. IVAN PACE JR. | Cincinnati 5104 | 231 lbs. | 4SR Cincinnati, Ohio (Colerain) 12/16/2000 (age 22.36) #0

BACKGROUND: Ivan Pace Jr. grew up in Cincinnati and developed a love for football at a young age. His father (Ivan Sr.) played on the defensive line at Colerain High School (1992-95), and Ivan Jr. followed in his footsteps, playing both ways at Colerain as a linebacker and fullback. A three-year varsity starter, he led Colerain to a 14-1 record as a senior with the only loss coming to St. Edward in the 2018 state championship game. In his final season, Pace was named Ohio's Defensive Player of the Year with 84 tackles, 6.5 sacks, four forced fumbles and a pick-six interception. In Colerain's triple-option offense, he rushed for 1,441 yards and 22 touchdowns as a senior. Pace finished his prep career with 211 tackles and 2,434 rushing yards. He also lettered in wrestling and won the conference title as a senior in the 220-pound weight class.

A two-star recruit, Pace was the No. 142 inside linebacker in the 2019 recruiting class and the No. 113 recruit in Ohio. With questions about his size and position fit, he went vastly underrecruited and had more offers from Division II programs than Division I. Pace finished with three FBS-level offers and committed to nearby Miami (Ohio) over Ohio and Toledo. After three seasons with the RedHawks, including leading the MAC in tackles in 2021, Pace entered the transfer portal and was a popular target for several programs. Despite offers from SEC programs like Arkansas, Missouri and LSU, he decided to return home and play with his brother, signing with Luke Fickell and the Bearcats for the 2022 season. His younger brother (Deshawn) is a rising senior linebacker at Cincinnati. Pace accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl (voted the National team's linebacker practice player-of-the-week).

STRENGTHS: Energetic, violent on-field demeanor ... impressive play strength for his size, especially in his lower body, and can squat a house (thick thighs, balled-up calves) ... terrific box instincts and understands angles ... has the blitzing quickness to cross the face of blockers or force holds (led all FBS off-ball linebackers with 55 pressures in 2022) ... uses his natural leverage and contact balance to slither around blocks (no surprise he was a wrestling champion in high school) ... tackles like a rattlesnake, playing low and striking in a blink ... mean-spirited through the whistle and doesn’t know how to go half-speed ... consistently productive at two different programs ... has decent experience on kick and punt return coverages ... only the fourth player in Cincinnati history with double-digit sacks in a season and first since Connor Barwin in 2008.

WEAKNESSES: Undersized and lacks the length that NFL teams desire in a downhill player ... struggles to shake free from blockers once engaged/engulfed inside the tackle box ... can be sealed off if he doesn’t stay ahead of the play ... his animated play style will lead to false steps when he takes the cheese ... plays in overdrive, which leads to missed tackles ... not overly fluid and will struggle to finish ball carriers that he can’t wrap-and-drive ... inconsistent in reverse with match-up concerns as a coverage player ... questionable position fit at the next level.

SUMMARY: A one-year starter at Cincinnati, Pace was a downhill MIKE linebacker in defensive coordinator Mike Tressel’s 3-3-5 base scheme. A few months removed from having nine players drafted, including Sauce Gardner, Pace became the first player in Cincinnati history to earn unanimous All-American honors and was the only player in college football to register at least 20 tackles for loss, 10 sacks and three forced fumbles in 2022. With his sheriff’s mentality and recognition skills, Pace trusts what he sees and runs around the field like my toddler on a sugar buzz after a weekend at grandma’s house. Although his frenetic play will take him out of plays at times, he is scrappy, strong and competes like a UFC fighter. Overall, Pace is undersized and faces questions about his ability as an every-down player in the NFL, but he is instinctive with the play speed, urgency and contact balance to consistently affect the game with his effort. His exact NFL position fit will be different from scheme to scheme, but it will be important for him to carve out a role on special teams to secure a roster spot.

10. YASIR ABDULLAH | Louisville 6005 | 237 lbs. | 5SR Miramar, Fla. (Carol City) 4/12/2000 (age 23.04) #22

BACKGROUND: Yasir (yuh-SEAR) Abdullah, who has a twin sister (Halima), grew up in the Miami area and played multiple sports throughout his childhood. He learned the game of football from his father (Xavier McCray), who played linebacker at Florida and was part of the Gators’ 1996 national championship team. After McCray was hired as the head coach at Cypress Lake High School in Fort Myers, Abdullah moved to Lee County to play for his father, playing primarily as a nickelback and strong safety as a sophomore starter. McCray was fired after the 2015 season, and Abdullah returned to Miami and enrolled at Miramar High School for the remainder of his sophomore year. He transferred to Carol City High School (his parents’ alma mater) for his final two years of high school. He was asked to move to defensive end as a junior and helped lead Carol City to an 11-3 record and the 2016 6A state championship. He earned “Player of the Week” honors from the Miami Dolphins after he sacked future teammate Tutu Atwell five times in the second round of the 2016 playoffs. Abdullah played linebacker and wide receiver as a senior captain and finished his career with 137 tackles and 20.0 sacks. He was also a standout track athlete throughout high school and set personal bests in the 100 meters (10.75), 200 meters (21.97) and long jump (21 feet 3 inches).

A three-star recruit, Abdullah was the No. 53 outside linebacker in the 2018 recruiting class and the No. 118 recruit in Florida. After his junior season, he picked up several Power 5 offers from LSU, Purdue, Syracuse and Wake Forest. However, Abdullah committed to Louisville, partly because of the area’s Muslim ties (he is a devote Sunni Muslim), including being the hometown of Muhammad Ali. He took advantage of the extra year of eligibility because of COVID rules and returned to Louisville for his fifth season in 2022. Abdullah accepted his invitation to the 2023 East-West Shrine Bowl.

(no shuttle, 3-cone, bench press – choice)
(stood on Combine runs and jumps)

STRENGTHS: Explodes out of his stance to stay ahead of blockers ... terrific speed and short-area quickness to turn the corner as a pass rusher ... quick to flatten and chase down plays ... has toned, muscled frame and strikes with power and pad level ... displays a natural feel for locating the football ... strong, balanced open-field tackler ... finds passing lanes at the line of scrimmage to knock down passes ... has the athleticism to turn-and-run with pass-catchers down the field (see his interception on the 2022 Pittsburgh tape) ... coaches call him the “example of how to work and act” in the program (giving back to the community is an important part of his Muslim faith) ... core special-teamer as an underclassman (516 career snaps) ... led the team in tackles for loss and sacks each of the last two seasons.

WEAKNESSES: Average length and body type with some tweener traits ... relies more on quickness than speed-to-power as a rusher ... can get pinballed inside, losing outside leverage and giving up the corner to ball carriers ... bigger bodies can engulf him on the edges ... his hands and feet work together on some plays, but fall apart on others ... arrives hot at times and slides off his man ... was primarily a downhill defender in college and wasn’t tasked with developing his awareness in coverage ... needs to stay disciplined as a backfield finisher (two roughing the passer penalties on the 2022 Pittsburgh tape).

SUMMARY: A four-year starter at Louisville, Abdullah was a stand-up rush linebacker in former defensive coordinator Bryan Brown’s 3-4 base scheme. He posted above-average backfield production with 32.0 tackles for loss and 19.5 sacks over his final 26 games and led the ACC in quarterback pressures (59) in 2022. With his natural pass rush skills and first-step quickness, Abdullah was at his best as a pass rusher on tape and showed savvy when working the edges. But he also looked comfortable when asked to drop, read and then go make open-field finishes. Overall, Abdullah has some tweener traits and will be asked to play more in reverse in the NFL than he was in college, but his read/react athleticism and finishing skills are solid base skills for a linebacker. His ideal role in the NFL is an off-ball linebacker and pass-rush specialist in subpackages.

11. OWEN PAPPOE | Auburn 6002 | 225 lbs. | 4SR Lawrenceville, Ga. (Grayson) 9/29/2000 (age 22.58) #0

BACKGROUND: Owen Pappoe (PAP-oh), who is one of four children, is a first-generation U.S.-born citizen after his parents (Rhoda and Lorenzo) escaped war-torn Liberia. Growing up focusing primarily on basketball, he tried football for the first time in seventh grade and joined the Gwinnett Chargers, a youth football team coached by former NFL player Kenyatta Watson. With his size and talent, Pappoe quickly earned the nickname “The Freak” and was considered the best eighth grade recruit in Georgia, finishing the 2014 season with 50 tackles, 17.0 sacks and 16 total touchdowns as a pass rusher and running back. He enrolled at Grayson High School, where he was a four-year letterman linebacker while also seeing time on offense, collecting 104 tackles as a freshman. After helping Grayson to the 2016 state championship game as a sophomore, Pappoe recorded 62 tackles, 9.0 tackles for loss and 3.0 sacks as a junior. He had an All-American senior year with 112 tackles, 14.0 tackles for loss and 4.0 sacks, adding two blocks on special teams and four total touchdowns (three rushing, one fumble return). He was named first team All-State and the USA Today Georgia Defensive Player of the Year.

A five-star recruit, Pappoe was the No. 1 outside linebacker in the 2019 recruiting class (No. 25 recruit overall) and the No. 4 recruit in Georgia (behind wide receiver Jadon Haselwood, defensive end Tramon Markum and cornerback Andrew Booth). He was considered a football prodigy in middle school, and national programs quickly took notice. Pappoe received scholarship offers from 11 college programs in eighth grade, including Auburn, Florida State, Georgia and Tennessee. During his freshman year, several other top programs (Alabama, Michigan, Ohio State, USC) joined the mix. Pappoe originally considered Tennessee his “dream school” before narrowing his final choice to Auburn and Georgia. He committed to the Tigers the summer before his senior year and was the highest-ranked player in Auburn’s 2019 recruiting class (QB Bo Nix was the other five-star in Auburn’s class). Pappoe graduated with his degree (December 2022), becoming the second in his family to graduate college. He accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl but was unable to play because of an injury.

STRENGTHS: Freaky speed/strength athlete with decent arm length (his 4.39 40-yard dash, 1.50 10-yard split and 29 bench press reps were No. 1 among linebackers at the NFL Scouting Combine) ... owns the first-step explosion to get where he is going in a hurry ... not unusual for him to chase down wide receivers ... agile and physical-natured to stack, fill and drop ball carriers in the hole ... has the grip strength to finish the tackles that he starts ... trusts his reads to get a head start and diagnoses the screen game well ... has the change-of-direction skills to react with route runners ... fights for body position when the ball is in the air (one of only three SEC defenders to intercept Bryce Young in 2022) ... was a mainstay on punt coverage teams ... two-time team captain (just the fourth in school history), and teammates speak highly of his focus and attitude (has been in the spotlight since middle school and handled himself with maturity).

WEAKNESSES: Undersized by NFL standards, lacking ideal height, weight or build ... inconsistent instincts, taking the cheese and creating wasted steps ... doesn’t play with the peripheral vision to anticipate blocks and weave through traffic ... flows quickly downhill, but his attack is often too aggressive, closing down one gap and opening another ... struggles to recover vs. cutback quickness when he overpursues his angle ... missed the Senior Bowl because of a “SLAP” tear in his labrum (January 2023); suffered a left ankle injury (September 2021), which derailed his junior season and required offseason surgery; played through a hip labrum tear as a sophomore in high school and required offseason surgery (January 2017).

SUMMARY: A four-year starter at Auburn, Pappoe played MIKE linebacker in former defensive coordinator Jeff Schmedding’s 4-2-5 base scheme. Considered a youth phenom with double-digit scholarship offers before he reached high school, Pappoe put together a solid career on The Plains and returned from an injury-plagued junior season to lead the team in tackles as a senior (his 7.6 tackles per game in 2022 ranked No. 8 in the SEC). With his strength, speed and range, Pappoe has freaky physical traits that the NFL covets. He is an explosive tackler and creates violent collisions at contact (ask Penn State quarterback Sean Clifford), but he is an inconsistent run fitter and spends too much time attached to blocks. Overall, Pappoe lacks a great feel for navigating through traffic as an inside backer and doesn’t have playmaking instincts in coverage, but there is a place in the NFL for his twitched-up athleticism and explosive power. He should be a core special teamer as a rookie while he competes for defensive snaps.

GRADE: 4th-5th Round

12. NOAH SEWELL | Oregon 6014 | 246 lbs. | 3JR Malaieimi, American Samoa (Orem) 4/26/2001 (age 22.00) #1

BACKGROUND: Noah Sewell, who is the youngest of five children (four boys, one girl), grew up playing football in a beach village in American Samoa. The family decided to move from the South Pacific islands to St. George, Utah, in 2012 when his father (Gabe Sr.), who coached high school football, started to experience chest pains and required additional medical care. Sewell enrolled at Desert Hills High School as a freshman and was teammates with his older brother (Penei). He was called up to varsity for five games as a freshman and posted 17 tackles, 1.0 sack and 1 interception. As a sophomore, Sewell played quarterback at Desert Hills and combined for 1,482 yards (848 rushing, 634 passing). After his mother was hired at BYU, the family moved to Utah County, and Sewell transferred to Orem High School for his final two seasons as a linebacker and running back. As a junior, he led Orem to the 2018 5A state championship with 103 tackles, 16.0 tackles for loss, 3.5 sacks and two interceptions, adding 694 rushing yards and 18 total touchdowns (15 rushing, 3 receiving). As a senior, Sewell missed the first five games because of injury, but he still finished with 95 tackles on defense and 752 rushing yards and 13 touchdowns as Orem won its third consecutive 5A state championship. He was named the 2019 Utah Valley Football Player of the Year and first team All-USA on defense. Sewell finished his prep career with 224 tackles and 2,316 rushing yards and 40 touchdowns.

A five-star recruit, Sewell was the No. 2 inside linebacker in the 2020 recruiting class (No. 13 overall nationally) and the No. 1 recruit in Utah. He became just the second consensus five-star recruit from the state of Utah, joining Haloti Ngata. Sewell received his first scholarship offer in the seventh grade (FCS Southern Utah) followed by his first FBS offer in the eighth grade (Hawaii). He collected more than 35 scholarship offers and narrowed that list down to his top eight of Alabama, Florida, Georgia, LSU, Ohio State, Oregon, Tennessee and Texas A&M. Sewell decided to follow in Penei’s footsteps and enroll at Oregon, where he was the second-highest ranked recruit in the Ducks’ 2020 class (behind linebacker Justin Flowe). He grew up in a football family: his older brother (Gabe Jr.) played linebacker at Nevada (2015-19). His older brother (Nephi) was an undrafted free agent linebacker out of Utah in 2022 and signed with the New Orleans Saints. His older brother (Penei) was an offensive tackle at Oregon and taken seventh in the 2021 NFL Draft by the Detroit Lions. His uncle (Isaac Sopoaga) was a nose tackle at Hawaii, was picked in the fourth round of the 2004 NFL Draft (No. 104 overall) and played 11 seasons in the NFL. His uncle (Richard Brown) played 10 seasons in the NFL at linebacker. Sewell is also very close with his mother (Arlene) and older sister (Gabriela). He elected to skip the 2022 bowl game and declare for the 2023 NFL Draft.

PRO DAY	6015	247	31 5/8	9 7/8	77	-	-	-	-	-	4.37	7.28	-	(stood on Combine runs, jumps, bench)

STRENGTHS: Stout, powerfully-built athlete ... meets blockers with firm, strong hands and knocks back tight ends at contact ... patient run fits and his eyes play beyond the blocker ... displays open-field control as a tackler ... explodes into ball carriers to create immediate stopping power ... head-to-toe strength to finish fingertip tackles ... functional range between the tackles ... moves with enough lateral quicks to mirror and flatten down the line ... earned his degree in delayed A-gap blitzes in college ... does his job as a low-hole cover defender ... allows the eyes of the quarterback to lead him to passing lanes ... NFL scouts have zero questions about his competitive nature or toughness as he often played through minor injuries (didn’t miss a game due to injury in college).

WEAKNESSES: Average speed by NFL standards and lacks sideline-to-sideline range ... doesn’t play with suddenness in his reactions ... physical hands, but spends too much time hand-fighting and needs to punch off contact more quickly ... his eyes get stuck between blocker and ball, making him late to react to both ... inconsistent break down vs. elusive athletes and can be juked in space ... doesn’t have the speed or feel for steady helpings of man coverage ... the more ground he has to cover vs. the pass, the more he struggles ... not a creative blitz and he didn’t look as explosive in 2022 compared to his underclassman tape ... tackle production was cut in half between his sophomore and junior seasons.

SUMMARY: A three-year starter at Oregon, Sewell played MIKE linebacker in head coach Dan Lanning’s 3-4 base scheme. He was physically ready for big-time college football the moment he arrived in Eugene and quickly stepped out of his older brother Penei’s shadow, leading the Ducks in tackles as a freshman and sophomore. However, he lacked the same energy and on-field impact as a junior and wasn’t the team’s leading tackler in any game in 2022 (had six games of 10-plus tackles in 2021 compared to zero in 2022). Sewell is a thick, powerful backer with the point-of-attack strength to fill, stack and strike. However, his reactionary athleticism and play range are mediocre, and he struggles to consistently stay ahead of both run and pass plays. Overall, Sewell doesn’t have the tape of a modern-day playmaker with clear limitations in man coverage, but he thumps downhill with the physicality, pedigree and competitive spirit to make plays between the tackles. He projects as a rookie backup who can become a valuable role player – off-the-ball on early downs and rushing off the edge on passing downs.

GRADE: 4th-5th Round

13. SIRVOCEA DENNIS | Pittsburgh 6004 | 226 lbs. | 4SR Syracuse, N.Y. (Christian Brothers) 3/9/2000 (age 23.13) #7

BACKGROUND: SirVocea (sir-voss-E-ay) “Vossy” Dennis, who is one of three children, was born in Georgia and moved around a lot (seven different places) growing up in a military family as both his mother (Corliss) and father (SirVantis) served in the U.S. Army (as did multiple uncles and both set of grandparents). Shot and wounded while serving in Iraq, his father was awarded a Purple Heart. The family settled in the Syracuse area (his mother’s hometown) in 2005, and Dennis started playing football at the Pop Warner level at Kirk Park, Geddes/Westvale and Cicero. He enrolled at Christian Brothers Academy, a private Catholic school, where he earned a spot on the junior varsity team while in eighth grade. Dennis moved up to varsity as a sophomore and was a two-way player at quarterback and defensive back. As a junior, he led Christian Brothers to a 10-win season and earned All-State honors, accounting for 829 passing yards, 554 rushing yards and 19 total touchdowns (12 passing, 7 rushing). As a senior in 2017 he suffered a season-ending torn Achilles injury four games into the season. Dennis, who also lettered in lacrosse, worked his way back from the injury to play basketball as a senior.

A no-star recruit, Dennis wasn’t ranked by recruiting services, mostly because of multiple injuries that limited his film résumé. He did enough to pick up three scholarship offers – all from the FCS level (Albany, Colgate, Dartmouth). Looking to boost his recruiting profile, he spent a prep season at The Peddie School in Hightstown, N.J., where he moved to linebacker and was named the league’s Defensive Player of the Year in 2018. He was bumped up to a two-star recruit and the No. 225 outside linebacker in the 2019 recruiting class. He verbally committed to Air Force but had second thoughts because of concerns that his allergies might disqualify him from service. Despite playing his high school games in the Carrier Dome, hometown Syracuse never offered. A week before signing day, Pittsburgh offered Dennis, who grew up watching Big East football. His older brother (SirVantis II) was a cornerback at Hampton (2016) and Albany (2017-18). SirVocea was named after the French Cognac “Courvoisier” after his father heard the drink mentioned one night at a restaurant. He graduated with his degree in Criminal Law. Dennis skipped the 2022 bowl game and accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl, but suffered an ankle injury during the week.

STRENGTHS: Rangy and plays fast ... lean, cut body type (seven percent body fat) ... makes plays up-and-down the line of scrimmage, never shutting things down ... aware player and consistently reads his keys to stay ahead of cut-offs ... strong tackling form and strikes low and physical to make misses rare (only four missed tackles in 2022) ... undersized but plays with surprising length and large hands to punch himself off contact and make stops in the hole ... explosive A-gap blitzter and fast downhill (36.0 tackles for loss over his last 35 games) ... does a great job returning his eyes to the quarterback as a zone dropper to find passing lanes ... made all of the defensive calls in 2022, and everything went through him ... vocal, passionate leader on and off the field with the type of personality that draws in his teammates ... 400 career special teams snaps.

WEAKNESSES: Smaller-framed athlete and lacks desired height/weight for the position ... if his hands aren't on time, can be eaten up, and struggles to unwind from blockers ... occasionally sucked up by play-action and lost in the crowd ... can be bounced by running back blocks ... strong tackler but not explosive through contact, allowing the ball carrier to pick up an extra yard or two ... room to improve his spatial relationships and anticipation in man coverage ... missed the Senior Bowl game because of an ankle injury (February 2023).

SUMMARY: A three-year starter at Pittsburgh, Dennis originally played the "Money" position before moving to "MIKE" linebacker in head coach Pat Narduzzi's 4-3 base scheme. He led the team in tackles each of the past two seasons and developed into the captain of the defense with dependable personal and football character. With his agility and play recognition, Dennis has the range to cover every inch of the field vs. the run and in zone coverage (can get better in man-to-man). Though he is a strong form tackler, he lacks knock-back striking power, and he can be too easily overpowered and engulfed in the tackle box when his take-on timing isn't precise. Overall, Dennis lacks desired size for every-down duties in the NFL, but he is fast-flowing with the eyes and tackling skills that lead to NFL production. He should be an immediate special teamer who can carve out a role on defense.

14. ANFERNEE ORJI | Vanderbilt 6010 | 230 lbs. | 4SR Rockwall, Texas (Rockwall) 10/6/2000 (age 22.56) #0

BACKGROUND: Anfernee (ann-fer-NEE) Orji (OR-jee), who is the middle child of three boys, was born in Dallas to Nigerian parents and started playing football at age 7 for the Rockwall Yellow Jackets Pee Wee team. He continued playing football at Utley Middle School and at Rockwall High School, lettering in football, track and wrestling (also played in the school orchestra through his junior year). Orji played primarily at safety at Rockwall and was high school teammates with Ohio State wide receiver Jaxon Smith-Njigba. Orji was named Regional Defensive Newcomer of the Year as a sophomore with 96 tackles in 2016. He earned All-District honors as a junior with 84 tackles, 13.0 tackles for loss, 4.0 sacks and three interceptions. As a senior captain, Orji collected 94 tackles and two interceptions (both returned for touchdowns) in 2018.

A three-star recruit, Orji was the No. 38 safety in the 2019 recruiting class and the No. 59 recruit in Texas. He collected more than a dozen FBS offers, including Arkansas, Baylor, Auburn, Oklahoma, UCLA and Utah. However, Orji wanted to join his older brother (Alston) and liked the fit (both athletically and academically) at Vanderbilt. His older brother played linebacker at Vanderbilt (2018-21) before transferring to FCS Campbell for the 2022 season (he medically retired midway through the 2022 season because of multiple concussions). His younger brother (Alex) was a three-star quarterback recruit and signed with Michigan in the 2022 recruiting class. His father (Willy) is an engineer and immigrated to the United States in 1987. His mother (Mariam) is a medical surgeon and arrived in the United States in 1996 (Willy and Mariam met at North Texas in the late 1990s). The Orji family travels to Nigeria at least once a year to visit family and give back to the community (they traveled to Nigeria with the Acho family, including former NFL players Sam and Emmanuel Acho, in 2016). Orji accepted his invitation to the 2023 East-West Shrine Bowl.

PRO DAY	6012	231	32 5/8	10 1/4	79	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	(no bench press – choice)

STRENGTHS: Fills out his uniform well with his V-shaped back and muscle definition ... chases the football all over the field with smooth range/redirect ... explosive in his lower body (his 38.5-inch vertical was No. 1 among linebackers at the NFL Scouting Combine) with the lateral quicks to avoid and work around blocks at the line of scrimmage ... plays strong and balanced through contact to keep his pursuit alive ... uses his large hands to be a physical wrap-and-throw down tackler ... explosive pass/run blitzter through the A-gaps ... plays hard all the time with overflowing adrenaline ... accountable leader and was voted a senior captain in 2022 ... was a regular on punt coverages all four seasons (447 career special teams snaps) ... durable and didn't miss a game the past three seasons ... outstanding production and combined for 200 total tackles over his final two seasons in college.

WEAKNESSES: Fills with a head of steam but late to trigger and sort at times ... strength doesn't always match his intentions ... inconsistent ability to leverage gaps and looks like a folding chair when linemen reach him ... tight-hipped when working off contact and doesn't consistently use his length ... needs to better anticipate pullers to work over the top vs. counters and avoid being cut off by tight ends ... must become a more reliable open-field tackler (accounted for multiple missed tackles in seven of 12 games in 2022) ... too reactive in coverage and lacks the fluidity to be a reliable man-coverage player (when he was targeted in coverage, 90.3 percent of the passes resulted in a completion in 2022).

SUMMARY: A three-year starter at Vanderbilt, Orji was an inside/outside linebacker in defensive coordinator Nick Howell's multiple scheme. Recruited as a safety, he moved to linebacker full-time in 2020 and led the Commodores in tackles each of the past three seasons (33 consecutive starts), finishing No. 1 in the SEC in tackles per game (9.0) in 2022. With his active play personality, Orji trusts his run fits and does a great job scraping, mirroring and finishing in gaps at or near the line of scrimmage. He shows some awareness in coverage (including in East-West Shrine practices), but struggles to make plays because of below-average body control in his drops. Overall, Orji is a high-effort pursuit player with short-area quickness and thump as a tackler, but he is often a half-second late working through the action, and his coverage limitations likely restrict his NFL role. He has the makings of a two-down defender and special-teamer at the next level.

GRADE: 5th Round

15. CAM JONES | Indiana 6012 | 226 lbs. | 5SR Memphis, Tenn. (St. Benedict) 10/21/1999 (age 23.52) #4

BACKGROUND: Cam Jones, who has an older brother, grew up in Memphis and started playing football in elementary school, initially as an offensive lineman before moving to running back. After his parents (Herb and Diane) moved the family to east Memphis and the Cordova community, he enrolled at St. Benedict at Auburndale High School, where he was a four-year varsity starter at multiple positions. After recording four interceptions as a freshman cornerback, Jones moved to safety as a sophomore and earned All-Region honors with six interceptions. He was moved to defensive end as a junior and over his final two seasons combined for 160 tackles, 60.0 tackles for loss, 34.0 sacks, five interceptions and three forced fumbles, earning All-State honors both years. On offense, Jones played wide receiver and wildcat quarterback and finished his prep career with 1,534 receiving yards, 1,049 rushing yards and 32 total touchdowns (15 receiving, 12 rushing, four punt returns and one interception return). He led St. Benedict to a school-record seven wins and a playoff berth in 2017 and was a senior captain. Jones was named the team’s special teams player of the year all four seasons. He also lettered two years in track.

A three-star recruit, Jones was the No. 79 athlete in the 2018 recruiting class and the No. 32 recruit in Tennessee. As a do-everything player in high school, he was recruited at different positions by different schools. His hometown Memphis became his first offer after his junior season followed by Middle Tennessee State, Tennessee and Indiana. Jones committed to Indiana in April 2017 but had a change of heart two months later and reopened his recruitment. He named a final five of Memphis, Mississippi State, Missouri, Indiana and Tennessee and decided to re-commit to head coach Tom Allen and the Hoosiers. His father (Herbert) was a star high school running back in Memphis and played at Northeast Mississippi Junior College. Cam’s older brother (LaRon Harris) was a high school All-American and signed with Tennessee, but academic issues led him to Northwestern Oklahoma. Harris, who also coached Cam’s youth teams, signed an undrafted free agent contract with the Buffalo Bills after the 2007 NFL Draft. Jones took advantage of the extra year of eligibility because of COVID rules and returned for a fifth season in 2022. He accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl.

STRENGTHS: Determined run defender ... above-average backfield vision with the read/react to halt ball carriers in the hole ... low, violent striker and explodes through his target as a tackler ... unmatched fight mid-tackle to finish his prey ... shows pouncing patience, which helps limit in-the-box missed tackles ... displays the sorting quickness to avoid blocks and rally to the football ... intense competitor and flips a switch on the field, pushing himself to play through injuries ... vocal leader and knows how to motivate his teammates in-game (head coach Tom Allen: “I have so much respect for him as a person, as a player.”) ... played on kick and punt coverages all five seasons ... was on pace for 130 tackles as a senior prior to his season-ending injury.

WEAKNESSES: Average size profile (height/weight/length) will be more pronounced at the next level ... has ordinary take-on strength and can be physically moved once blockers engulf him ... flies to the ball on the outside, but often late to gear down and collect himself to square targets ... will get sucked up with play-fakes and run-pass options ... aggressive mentality leaves him out of position in coverage, biting on pumps and abandoning the middle-of-the-field ... alert in zone coverage, but not as comfortable in man-to-man ... some body stiffness shows the farther from the line of scrimmage he gets ... suffered a left foot injury (October 2022) that sidelined him for the final seven games of his senior year; fought through a sprained ankle as a sophomore (August 2019).

SUMMARY: A three-year starter at Indiana, Jones played WILL linebacker (“Stinger”) in former defensive coordinator Charlton Warren’s 4-2-5 base scheme. Recruited as a wide receiver and safety, he moved to linebacker (for the first time in his life) in 2019 and was having a career year in 2022 before his season-ending foot injury (led the Big Ten with 10.8 tackles per game through five games). If linebackers were drafted solely based on their competitive grit, football character and tackling violence, Jones would be picked much higher (he remained on the sideline as an extra coach during his 2022 injury and was just the third three-time team captain in school history). Though he shows promise in zone coverage, his man-cover abilities will need to catch up quickly vs. NFL skill players. Overall, Jones’ take-on and shed skills require further maintenance, but his instincts and short-area quicks lead him to the football, where he looks to create violent collisions as a tackler. He is a ready-made special teamer with the talent to inch his way up the linebacker depth chart.

GRADE: 5th-6th Round

16. DEE WINTERS | TCU 5110 | 227 lbs. | 4SR Brenham, Texas (Burton) 10/17/2000 (age 22.53) #13

BACKGROUND: De’Monderick “Dee” Winters grew up in Brenham (midway between Austin and Houston), where he was a do-everything athlete throughout his childhood. Shortly before high school, he transferred to the nearby Burton school district and enrolled at Burton High School, where he was a big fish in a small pond (only 27 students in his graduating class). Winters was a four-year varsity letterman and two-way player, lining up running back and wide receiver on offense and linebacker, cornerback and safety on defense (also punted). After earning District MVP honors as a sophomore, he again won the award as a junior and led Burton to a 13-2 record. Winters finished the 2017 season with 64 receptions for 1,170 receiving yards and 19 touchdowns, adding 640 rushing yards and 14 rushing scores. As a senior, he earned second team All-State honors with 987 receiving yards and 690 rushing yards, adding 52 tackles and three interceptions at safety. Winters finished his prep career with 4,943 total yards and 74 touchdowns. He also lettered in basketball (point guard) and track (sprints and relays) and was a standout centerfielder on the baseball team, earning Second Team All-State honors.

A three-star recruit, Winters was the No. 38 athlete in the 2019 recruiting class and the No. 90 recruit in Texas. Despite playing in a lower classification at the 2A level, he put himself on the recruiting radar as a sophomore and started to receive FBS offers his junior season. SMU was his first offer followed by Houston, Northwestern and UTSA. However, Winters started following TCU football in middle school and attended the program’s junior day in January 2018, which was his only college visit. After former head coach Gary Patterson extended an offer during his visit, Winters committed the next day. He stayed loyal and signed with the Horned Frogs despite picking up other Power 5 offers like Arizona State, Arkansas and Texas Tech. Once he enrolled in Fort Worth, Winters moved to defense full-time and transitioned from safety to linebacker. He accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl.

STRENGTHS: Above-average play speed and testing speed ... unlocks his hips for fast angles working downhill to make plays at or behind the line of scrimmage (led team in tackles for loss in 2022) ... flies around the field and never shuts it down early ... chases runners down before they can turn the corner ... quick with his ball reaction to play the cutback angles ... hits with stopping power and toughness as a tackler ... active play style boosts his chance as a blitzter ... was a regular on punt return and punt coverage ... voted a senior captain and started every game the last three seasons.

WEAKNESSES: Undersized frame and lacks ideal arm length ... can be late to sort through traffic, leaving him sealed/walled-off ... prematurely attacks blocks and takes himself out of the play ... late to feel climbing blockers, and struggles to get free once engaged ... appears tight when trying to redirect in open space with below-average lower body explosion (his 30.5-inch vertical was the lowest among linebackers at the Combine) ... bigger backs can take him for a ride when his tackling technique isn’t perfect ... doesn’t consistently bring his feet or lower body as a tackler ... undeveloped coverage anticipation and the ball is more likely to find him than the other way around.

SUMMARY: A three-year starter at TCU, Winters played SAM linebacker in defensive coordinator Joe Gillespie’s 3-3-5 scheme, playing primarily to the field side. After three seasons in Gary Patterson’s two-linebacker defense, he produced some of his best tape as a senior, including a career-best performance in the College Football Playoff semifinals against Michigan. With his active play speed, Winters is a terrific run blitzter with his timing, bend and burst. Though he beelines to the football, he has an inconsistent batting average as a run defender and is too reactive in coverage. Overall, Winters will run himself out of plays and can be engulfed in tight quarters, but he is in perpetual chase mode and covers a lot of green. He is a run-and-hit linebacker prospect with special-teams abilities.

GRADE: 5th-6th Round

17. ISAAH MOORE | NC State

6022 | 233 lbs. | 6SR

Chester, Va. (L.C. Bird)

BACKGROUND: Isaiah Moore grew up outside of Richmond, Va., and started playing football soon after he could walk. He was a linebacker and tight end at Lloyd C. Bird High School in Chesterfield County. As a sophomore starter, he posted 67 tackles, 14.5 tackles for loss and 4.0 sacks, helping lead Bird to a 13-win season and the 2014 5A state championship. Moore finished his junior season with 88 tackles, 22.5 tackles for loss, 8.0 sacks and a pair of interceptions. As a senior captain, he led Bird to an 11-2 record and posted a team-best 106 tackles, 29.0 tackles for loss, 15.0 sacks, three interceptions and five blocked kicks on special teams. Moore earned first team All-Metro, All-Region and All-Conference for the second consecutive season.

A three-star recruit, Moore was the No. 54 outside linebacker in the 2017 recruiting class and the No. 22 recruit in Virginia. He received his first FBS offer midway through his junior season from Old Dominion and later added Army, Coastal Carolina, Navy and UTSA. Moore visited Virginia Tech, but the Hokies and other in-state schools never offered. The summer before his senior season, he committed to NC State, which was his lone Power 5 scholarship offer. Moore didn’t plan on utilizing his extra season of eligibility until his midseason ACL injury in 2021. He graduated with his degree in communication (Summer 2021). Moore accepted his invitation to the 2023 East-West Shrine Bowl.

STRENGTHS: Smashmouth run defender and navigates traffic near the line of scrimmage ... uses proper hand timing for violent stack-and-shed action ... his backfield production reflects his quick read-and-trigger skills (see 2022 Maryland tape — he left it all on the field in his final game) ... correctly diagnoses play-action and misdirection ... understands leverage and rarely overruns his gap ... comes to balance and drives through his target as a tackler ... mental mistakes are rare on his film (zero penalties in 2022) ... three-time team captain with outstanding intangibles ... his coaches rave about his work and preparation habits ... passionate about the game, and coaching is in his future (served as a part-time coach at Cardinal Gibbons High School while at NC State) ... has played a lot of football with 55 career starts.

WEAKNESSES: Squatty body type with only average length and hand size ... plays fast, but not a naturally explosive mover ... can be bumped from his pursuit path by blockers ... questionable cover range and playmaking potential vs. the pass, especially in man-to-man ... his average fluidity will be more noticeable when going up against NFL speed ... suspended from the program in August 2017 following a sexual assault allegation (no charges were pressed, and he was reinstated in June 2018 following a Title IX investigation) ... suffered a torn ACL in his left knee (October 2021), which required season-ending surgery and forced him to return for his sixth season at NC State ... inexperienced on kick coverage teams.

SUMMARY: A five-year starter at NC State, Moore was the MIKE linebacker in defensive coordinator Tony Gibson’s scheme. He earned a starting role as a redshirt freshman and consistently filled the stat sheet each season while providing the leadership that was the glue of the defense. With his shed skills and feel for blocking angles, Moore aggressively covers ground when scraping/sifting and finds his way to the ball carrier. A three-time team captain, he checks all the intangible boxes with his play toughness and passion and will get bumped up by NFL teams that prioritize football character at the position. Overall, Moore doesn’t have an ideal athletic profile for coverage duties, but he is an assignment-sound run defender thanks to his play recognition and take-on/tackling skills. He projects as a rookie backup in the mold of Anthony Walker.

GRADE: 5th-6th Round

18. ISAAH LAND | Florida A&M 6034 | 236 lbs. | 5SR Buffalo, N.Y. (Grayson) 2/5/2000 (age 23.23) #31

BACKGROUND: Isaiah Land was born and raised in Buffalo before moving to the Atlanta area when he was young. He started playing football at the Pop Warner and youth levels, including the Kenyatta Watson Sr.-coached Gwinnett Chargers when he was 10 years old. However, Land always gravitated towards basketball, which was his main focus in middle school. He didn’t play sports during his freshman and sophomore years at Grayson High School. But in the spring of 2016, the football coaches invited him to try out, and Land decided to return to football, joining the team prior to his junior year. Land switched from wide receiver to defensive end and initially played on JV before moving up to varsity where he was teammates with several future FBS players such as linebacker Owen Pappoe. As a senior, he helped lead Grayson to a 10-2 record and the second-round of the 2017 7A state playoffs, finishing with 28 tackles and 8.0 sacks.

A no-star recruit out and only 170 pounds with minimal tape, Land went overlooked by FBS teams, and only a few FCS programs expressed interest. His first offer came from Chattanooga in November of his senior season followed by Florida A&M just days before signing day. Land committed to Florida A&M as part of the 2018 recruiting class. After his breakout junior season in 2021, he was concerned about getting looks from NFL teams after his former teammate (Markquese Bell) went unselected in the 2022 NFL Draft (later made the Dallas Cowboys’ 53-man roster). Land entered the transfer portal in May 2022 and received offers from Georgia, Texas and several other national programs, but he elected to stay loyal to Florida A&M for his final season. Land was ruled ineligible for the 2022 season opener (at North Carolina) after the academics and compliance staff misinformed him of the necessary credits for the semester. He was ruled eligible by the NCAA the following week. Land accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl, becoming the first Florida A&M player invited to Mobile since 1993.

PRO DAY	6035	235	32 1/4	9 3/8	78 1/2	-	-	-	-	-	4.43	-	- (short shuttle and position drills only)

STRENGTHS: Long, moldable frame with the growth potential to continue adding bulk (lacked the resources to develop his body) ... his first step and closing burst are both above average ... moves with natural bend and flexible joints to work around blockers ... agile in his redirect to read-and-react with ball carriers ... has become more and more comfortable firing his hands into engagement ... utilizes his length to lock out and leverage his body vs. heavier blockers ... shows savvy as a pass rusher with a variety of moves (rip, chop, ghost) in his bag ... highly productive, especially in the backfield ... set the school record for single-game sacks (five), and his 19.0 sacks in 2021 were one behind the school record.

WEAKNESSES: Will need time to continue filling out and adapting to his new body ... needs to strengthen his anchor and lower body ... can be uprooted from his spot in the run game ... it will be tougher for him to fight through NFL offensive linemen ... his hand timing and placement need continued refinement because he struggles to respond once blockers latch on ... needs to play more controlled in pursuit and stay square to ball carriers ... falls off too many targets because of his excitable motor ... needs to continue and flush out his counter measures once his first rush move is stalled ... suffered a knee sprain and missed two games as a senior (October 2022) ... almost all of his production came vs. FCS competition.

SUMMARY: A two-year starter at Florida A&M, Land played the “FANG” edge rusher position in defensive coordinator Ryan Smith’s scheme, lining up primarily in a three-point stance. After the 2020 season was cancelled because of COVID, he put his name on the NFL radar in 2021 as the FCS leader in both sacks and tackles for loss (37 of his 66 tackles the past two seasons came in the backfield). With such meager football experience, Land is understandably raw in areas, but he shows natural pass rush instincts thanks to his play quickness and athletic movements. Unable to play against North Carolina in the 2022 season opener (ineligible due to issues within the program’s compliance department), he never faced Power 5 competition in college and also faces a position switch for some schemes (Senior Bowl practices were the first time he played off-ball linebacker). Overall, Land needs to continue strengthening his body to become stouter for NFL front-seven play, but he has the athletic traits to hold up in space and the rush skills to chase the quarterback on sub-downs. He is a high-end developmental prospect with “buy low” stock that has boom potential for a team willing to invest.

GRADE: 6th Round

19. JEREMY BANKS | Tennessee 6006 | 232 lbs. | 5SR Cordova, Tenn. (Cordova) 9/23/1999 (age 23.59) #33

BACKGROUND: Jeremy Banks grew up in the Memphis area and originally attended Cordova High School in the eastern Memphis suburbs. As a freshman, he was a running back on the freshman and JV teams and was later called up to varsity for special teams. Banks moved to Mound Bayou, Miss., for his sophomore season because of a family issue and enrolled at John F. Kennedy Memorial High School, where he played baseball. He returned to Cordova for his final two high school seasons and shared the backfield duties as a junior, rushing for 815 yards and 16 touchdowns. Banks had his best season as a senior and helped Cordova to an 8-3 record and spot in the 2017 playoffs. He finished with 1,941 rushing yards on 198 carries (9.8 average) and 32 touchdowns (set the school-record with seven touchdowns in a single-game), earning first team All-State and All-Region honors. Banks also lettered in track at Cordova and set personal bests in the 100 meters (11.12), 200 meters (24.78), long jump (23 feet 4 inches) and triple jump (42-9).

A three-star recruit, Banks was the No. 16 running back in the 2018 recruiting class and the No. 13 recruit in Tennessee. His recruitment kicked off after his junior season, including offers from Memphis, Navy, Utah and Virginia Tech. Several national programs started to take notice amid his productive senior campaign, and Banks added offers from Arkansas, Nebraska, Ole Miss, Texas A&M and USC. When Jeremy Pruitt was hired as head coach at Tennessee in December 2017, he immediately offered Banks and made the in-state recruit a priority. Banks committed to the Volunteers two weeks later and signed during the early period. He signed as a running back and played on offense as freshman before moving to linebacker prior to his sophomore year. After multiple non-football incidents, Banks was dismissed from the program in October 2019 and was later reinstated in August 2020. He opted out of the 2022 bowl game and accepted his invitation to the 2023 East-West Shrine Bowl.

STRENGTHS: Strapping body type and competes with a banger's mentality ... terrific chase down speed ... accelerates without restricting and has outstanding play range downhill or to the edges ... his read-and-flow helps him constantly be around the football ... enjoys the physicality needed for the position ... scrapes with stiff, leveraged hands to work off blockers ... drives his legs at contact to get the ball carrier moving in reverse ... has the athleticism to turn and match speed on wheel routes ... aggressively baits and jumps underneath targets ... coaches praise the "energy" that he shows whenever on the field ... has the mentality and speed for special teams duties.

WEAKNESSES: Average agility shows in space ... wild tendencies as a tackler leads to missed opportunities and poor angles ... guilty of reacting before reading, digging himself a hole from the get-go ... responsible for 10 penalties the past two seasons, including multiple offsides and facemask flags ... doesn't have the fluidity or burst to make up for false moves, especially in coverage vs. backs or tight ends ... past immaturity is a bright red flag and was dismissed from the football team (October 2019) after multiple incidents ... was accused of harassing and threatening a female student (August 2019), according to a report by TMZ Sports ... was pulled over for making an illegal U-turn (September 2019), and police discovered he had a warrant out for his arrest for failure to appear (for driving with a suspended license); during the incident, Banks made disparaging comments to the police officers that were caught on video. Banks later apologized for his "language and attitude." ... was "unavailable" for the South Carolina game (November 2022).

SUMMARY: A two-year starter at Tennessee, Banks played the WILL linebacker role in defensive coordinator Tim Banks' 4-2-5 base scheme. Recruited as a running back, his time in Knoxville was far from smooth, but in between the several immature moments (on and off the field) came flashes of quality linebacker play. With his thirst for contact, Banks runs with speedy determination and arrives at the football with violent intentions. However, his aggressive playstyle often backfires and leads to missed keys, tackles or steps that are tough to overcome. Overall, Banks leaves too much production on the field, and the character interviews will be crucial to his draft grade, but he maneuvers well in the front seven to be a downhill force player. His tools should translate well to special teams.

20. VENTRELL MILLER | Florida 5117 | 232 lbs. | 6SR Lakeland, Fla. (Kathleen) 1/15/1999 (age 24.28) #51

BACKGROUND: Ventrell Miller, who is the second of five boys, grew up in Lakeland (30 miles east of Tampa) with his mother (Kamisha). He started playing flag football at age 4 for the Lakeland Predators before quickly graduating to tackle football at the pee wee level. Miller primarily lined up at running back through elementary and middle school. He attended Kathleen High School, which is the alma mater of several former NFL players such as Ray Lewis and Desmond Clark. Miller moved to linebacker as a freshman to see the field quicker and became a four-year varsity letterman. As a junior, he earned first team All-State honors with a team-best 104 tackles, adding 9.0 tackles for loss and 5 pass break-ups. Miller was named the Polk County Defensive Player of the Year as a senior and earned Second Team All-State honors with 50 tackles and 3.0 sacks in 2016.

A three-star recruit, Miller was the No. 36 outside linebacker in the 2017 recruiting class and the No. 76 recruit in Florida. His high school coaches believed he would have been a four- or five-star recruit if he had attended recruiting camps. Miller grew up a Florida State fan, but the Seminoles weren't among the three dozen FBS schools that offered him a full ride. Miller considered North Carolina, Virginia Tech and others, but he committed to Florida the summer before his senior year. The Gators had the proximity advantage for his family to see him play, and he connected with defensive coordinator Geoff Collins and defensive backs coach Torrian Gray, who was also a Kathleen alum. Miller was part of the same Gators recruiting class as Kadarius Toney and CJ Henderson, who will be entering his fourth NFL season in 2023. His older brother (Antonio) was an outside linebacker at Kathleen and walked on at FCS Florida A&M initially as a long-snapper before becoming a senior leader and All-MEAC linebacker in 2018. Ventrell graduated with his degree in family, youth and community sciences (December 2022). He opted out of the bowl game and accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl, but was unable to participate because of injury.

STRENGTHS: Plays with a passion for physicality and toughness ... gets on his horse and beelines to the football ... fills gaps with momentum and force ... keeps his eyes before his feet and accelerates through his target as a tackler ... trusts his vision to sort out angles/blocking and track the running back ... plays strong with adequate length to sift through blockers ... only penalty in college was a questionable targeting play ... reads route concepts well, especially in zone ... functional pursuit range in his drops to make plays on flat throws ... team captain and described as a “field general” for the Gators by his coaches ... named the 2022 Danny Wuerffel Man of the Year for his leadership ... productive and will play through injuries.
WEAKNESSES: Overly patient with his downhill reads ... struggles to match the lateral burst of backs bouncing between gaps ... gets tunnel vision and is late to locate climbing or side-angled blockers ... desire to strike with violence means sacrificing wrap technique, allowing balanced ball carriers to keep their feet (see 2022 Georgia and LSU tapes) ... doesn’t have the anticipation or athletic fluidity to be a playmaker in coverage ... redshirted in 2017 after he was suspended for making $550 worth of purchases with stolen credit card numbers (as a first-time offender, his third-degree felony charge was expunged) ... battled multiple injuries in college: played through a Jones fracture in his right foot as a senior, which required a bone graft procedure after the season (December 2022) and sidelined him for the draft process; missed one game as a senior because of a left foot issue (September 2022); suffered a season-ending torn left biceps tendon (September 2021), which required surgery ... will be 24 years old on draft weekend.
SUMMARY: A four-year starter at Florida, Miller was the MIKE linebacker in former defensive coordinator Patrick Toney’s scheme. After leading the team in tackles in 2020, Miller missed almost all of 2021 and battled through a broken foot injury in 2022, although he still filled up the stat sheet as a super senior and showed off his toughness (received numbing injections in his foot before games). An urgent downhill enforcer, Miller plays with disciplined eyes to key his attack and run through his targets like a ball of razorblades. Though he sees things well to defend zones, he could struggle to cover athletic tight ends and backs. Overall, Miller doesn’t play with the athletic fluidity or range desired in modern-day linebackers, but he is a passionate tone-setter with the run instincts and contact-driven mentality that will speak to NFL defensive coordinators. He projects as an early-down linebacker in the NFL.

21. MOHAMOUD DIABATE | Utah

Auburn, Ala. (Auburn)

#3

BACKGROUND: Mohamoud (mah-mood) Diabate (dee-ah-bah-tay), who has three sisters, was born and raised in Auburn. His parents immigrated to the United States in 1988 from the west African country of Mali and grew up speaking several languages, including Bambara, the national language of Mali. His father (Youssouf) is a professor of agricultural and resource economics at Tuskegee University. Diabate started playing football in the fifth grade and later attended Auburn High School where he was a three-year starter on varsity as a linebacker and defensive end. He played in only four games as a sophomore because of a life-threatening staph infection that put him in the hospital. Diabate returned to the field as a junior and led Auburn to a 10-win season, posting 82 tackles, 20.0 tackles for loss, 10.0 sacks and three blocked kicks to earn first team All-State honors as the Class 7A Lineman of the Year. As a senior, Diabate finished with 35 tackles, 10.0 tackles for loss and 7.0 sacks and was named a U.S. Army All-American.

A four-star recruit, Diabate was the No. 6 outside linebacker in the 2019 recruiting class and the No. 6 recruit in Alabama (behind wide receiver George Pickens and quarterback Bo Nix). His offer sheet starting to fill up after his sophomore season, starting with Virginia followed by Mississippi State and Vanderbilt. The top programs in the SEC soon followed, and Diabate considered both Alabama and Auburn, but was drawn to the diversity of Gainesville. He is a devout Muslim, and his faith is a central part of his daily life, praying multiple times a day and regularly attending Islamic religious centers. Diabate committed to Florida before his senior season and was the sixth-ranked recruit in the Gators’ 2019 class (behind Kaiir Elam). He enrolled early in January 2019 and played three seasons at Florida. After the 2021 season, Diabate entered the transfer portal because he wanted a “better situation” and chose Utah to fill the shoes of Devin Lloyd. His older sister (Fanta) ran track at UAB (2014-17). Diabate graduated with his degree in sociology (May 2022). He accepted his invitation to the 2023 East-West Shrine Bowl.

STRENGTHS: Long, rangy body type with a large wingspan ... runs like a gazelle and attacks in a hurry ... straight-line explosive, which is especially evident as a blitzer when he can split gaps or threaten the edges (see 2022 USC tape) ... frequently makes run stops at or behind the line of scrimmage thanks to his aggressive nature and speed ... loads up behind his pads for thump at contact ... isn’t always effective but is more than willing to scrap and press off blocks ... versatile experience, playing multiple different positions between his time at Florida and Utah.

WEAKNESSES: Lean-framed and thin-limbed, lacking desired muscle mass ... upright and long-legged, hindering his ability to abruptly change directions or adjust his tackling angles ... has a tendency to unravel and lose balance when pursuing shifty ball carriers in space ... late to sort through blocking combinations as an inside linebacker ... raw hand use and can be overwhelmed by climbers ... overaggressive in coverage and struggles to maintain tight spacing in man-to-man ... doesn't see through tight ends to the quarterback, and frequently bites on route fakes ... lack of career ball production reflects his savvy in coverage ... underwent labrum surgery following the 2021 season prior to his transfer to Utah, missing 2022 spring practices.

SUMMARY: A one-year starter at Utah, Diabate played "Mac" linebacker in defensive coordinator Morgan Scalley's hybrid 4-2-5 scheme. A high school pass rusher, he moved to off-ball linebacker as a sophomore at Florida and took over Devin Lloyd's role in the Utes' defense in 2022, leading the team in tackles for loss. With his length and speed, Diabate covers a lot of ground and has intriguing blitzing potential from various alignments. His read-and-react vs. the run is underdeveloped, and he struggles to diagnose route concepts (throws in his direction usually resulted in completions). Overall, Diabate is an aggressive and explosive linear athlete, but the game often moves too fast for him, leaving him out of position vs. the run and the pass. He projects as a developmental run-and-chase defender who will need to earn his roster spot on special teams.

GRADE: 6th-7th Round

22. SHAKA HEYWARD | Duke 6027 | 235 lbs. | SSR Dacula, Ga. (Mill Creek) 4/19/2000 (age 23.02) #42

BACKGROUND: Shaka Heyward, who is the middle son of three boys, grew up in Hoschton, Ga., (50 miles northeast of Atlanta) and started playing football at age 5. He attended Mill Creek High School in Gwinnett County, where he was a three-year varsity letterman, initially as a strong safety before moving to more of a linebacker role. As a junior, Heyward posted 78 tackles and helped Mill Creek to a 13-1 record and the 2016 6A playoff semifinals. As a senior, he again led the program to the state playoffs and finished the 2017 season with 90 tackles, 5.0 sacks, nine passes defended, one interception (returned for a touchdown) and one forced fumble.

A three-star recruit, Heyward was the No. 46 outside linebacker in the 2018 recruiting class and the No. 74 recruit in Georgia. His first offer came from Georgia State (where his brother Victor played) in February 2017 after his junior season followed by Arkansas State, Iowa State, Maryland, Minnesota and Rutgers. However, once Duke offered in May 2017, Heyward committed almost immediately. His older brother played linebacker at Georgia State (2017-20) and finished his career top-10 in school history in tackles. He is also cousins with the late Craig Heyward, who was a first-round pick in the 1988 NFL Draft and played 11 seasons in the NFL, as well as his sons: Cameron (2011 first-round pick by the Pittsburgh Steelers), Connor (sixth-round pick in the 2022 NFL Draft), Corey (played basketball at Georgia Tech) and Craig Jr. (played football at Middle Tennessee State). Heyward accepted his invitation to the 2023 East-West Shrine Bowl.

PRO DAY	6027	238	33 1/2	9 3/8	81 1/8	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	(position drills only)

STRENGTHS: Workable frame with above average arm length ... reads his keys and feels blocking pressure to find the ball carrier ... extends his long, stiff reach and presses into blockers to separate and make plays at the line of scrimmage ... shows the pursuit speed to chase down his prey ... his long arms allow him to lasso ball carriers other linebackers can't ... strong fingers/hands/wrists to finish tackles once he makes contact ... team captain who leads by the example of his work habits ... durable and finished his career with 40 consecutive starts ... averaged 8.0 tackles per game over his junior and senior seasons ... was a regular on kick and punt coverages the last four seasons (14 tackles on 629 special teams snaps).

WEAKNESSES: Moves with some stiffness in his lower body and midsection, slowing his quick direction changes ... accelerates well to close, but doesn't play with explosive movements ... needs a clear runway to really see that 4.5 speed ... reads too quickly at times and runs himself into blocks or misdirection ... lead blockers can pick him off before he finds the football ... was mugged up on the 2022 North Carolina tape and needs to get stronger to fill this type of role vs. NFL offensive linemen ... lacks desired coverage range and will struggle to match NFL athletes in space.

SUMMARY: A four-year starter at Duke, Heyward played MIKE linebacker in head coach Mike Elko's 4-2-5 base scheme. He posted 80-plus tackles each of the past three seasons and consistently filled up the stat sheet without missing games. Heyward is a smart, instinctive run defender who is quick to respond, see through blocks to avoid engagement and get the ball carrier on the ground. He needs to play with more patience and control for better positioning as a take-on player and tackler, but his long arms help compensate. Overall, Heyward doesn't have ideal agility or change of direction with questionable range in coverage, but he is long, fast and dependable and should at worst be a regular special teamer in the NFL. He has the skill level to be this year's version of Ernest Jones.

GRADE: 7th Round

23. AUBREY MILLER JR. | Jackson State 5112 | 229 lbs. | 6SR Memphis, Tenn. (Whitehaven) 4/24/1999 (age 24.01) #45

BACKGROUND: Aubrey Miller Jr. grew up outside of Memphis and initially attended Germantown High School as a freshman. He transferred to Whitehaven High School for his final three seasons, playing on both offense (running back) and defense (linebacker). Miller helped Whitehaven to the 2015 district championship, finishing his junior season with 50 tackles and two interceptions (one returned for a touchdown) and adding a pair of rushing touchdowns on offense. As a senior, he led Whitehaven to a 15-0 record and the 2016 Class 6A state championship. Miller was named first team All-Region and All-Metro with 147 tackles, 21.0 tackles for loss, 7.0 sacks, five forced fumbles and four interceptions (two returned for touchdowns). He also lettered in track at Germantown and Whitehaven, posting personal bests in the 100 meters (12.04), 200 meters (25.54), high jump (5 feet 6 inches) and long jump (19-6).

A three-star recruit, Miller was the No. 37 outside linebacker in the 2017 recruiting class and the No. 20 recruit in Tennessee. He was offered by hometown Memphis after his junior season along with Cincinnati, Iowa State, Louisville and others. Miller added an SEC offer from Missouri and committed to the Tigers the summer before his senior season. He was the third-highest-ranked recruit in Barry Odom’s 2017 class and was a member of Omega Phi Psi fraternity. However, Miller fell behind on the depth chart and battled several injuries over his first three seasons at Missouri. He played in one game in 2020 under new head coach Eli Drinkwitz before deciding to opt out and eventually enter the transfer portal. Miller committed to FCS Jackson State and head coach Deion Sanders in December 2020, joining the program for the spring 2021 season. He accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl.

STRENGTHS: Owns a stocky, firm build and strong trunk ... linear athlete with dogged pursuit speed ... closes with a burst when he correctly diagnoses ... mature patience and processing to allow plays to develop, sifting through the crowd to find the football ... looks to explode into ball carriers with as much force as his body can generate ... strong upper body to chop down the hands of blockers mid-pursuit ... controlled in his coverage drops with quick reaction time once the quarterback loads up to throw ... described as a “ball of energy” by an NFL scout and made “substantial strides” with his maturity from his time at Missouri and when he first arrived at Jackson State ... high pain threshold (suffered a cracked fibula in his leg as a true freshman but missed only three games) ... was a core special-teamer and averaged 8.9 tackles per game at Jackson State.

WEAKNESSES: Below-average arm length ... looks to deliver pop as a take-on player, but can be engulfed once blockers get inside his pads ... abandons his gaps at times when big-game hunting ... eye discipline isn’t a weakness, but can be more consistent ... needs to shore up open-field pursuit angles, and missed tackles are usually a result of choosing the kill shot over the form finish ... appears tight in transitions, which will be even clearer in man coverage vs. NFL skills players ... suffered a right knee injury (September 2019), which required season-ending surgery; missed three games as a true freshman with a cracked bone in his fibula (September 2017) ... 99 percent of his production came at the FCS level.

SUMMARY: A three-year starter at Jackson State, Miller played WLB in former defensive coordinator Dennis Thurman’s 4-2-5 base scheme. After a rocky few seasons at Missouri (multiple injuries, coaching change, passed on the depth chart by Nick Bolton), he found new life playing for Deion Sanders and helped Jackson State to back-to-back SWAC championships, posting 100-plus tackles both seasons. Miller displays the reaction skills, downhill burst and strength to handle the rigors of NFL linebacker play. Though he brings the required competitive toughness to stick his nose into the fire, he can be swallowed up by blockers and will fall off tackle attempts or concede extra yards when he doesn’t stay under control. Overall, Miller lacks desired fluidity and length by NFL standards, but he makes up for his shortcomings with the physicality and play speed of a run-and-hit defender. He projects as a sturdy and sawed-off rotational linebacker in the NFL with special teams value.

24.

CHARLIE THOMAS | Georgia Tech

6025 | 216 lbs. | 5SR

Thomasville, Ga. (Thomasville)

BACKGROUND:

Charlie Thomas, who is one of four children, grew up in south Georgia and started playing pee wee football at age 6. He attended Thomasville High School and was a four-year varsity letterman, playing on both sides of the ball. Thomas posted 62 tackles and two interceptions as a junior, earning honorable mention All-State honors. As a senior safety, he led Thomasville to an undefeated regular season and the school’s first regional title in a decade, finishing the 2017 season with a 12-1 record. Thomas posted 78 tackles, 8.0 tackles for loss and one interception, adding 242 rushing yards, 442 receiving yards and five total touchdowns (three rushing, two receiving) while also seeing snaps at quarterback. He again earned All-State honors and was a U.S. Army All-American. Thomas also lettered in basketball and track and set personal bests in the long jump (14 feet 11 inches) and triple jump (33-9.5).

A three-star recruit, Thomas was the No. 48 safety in the 2018 recruiting class and the No. 67 recruit in Georgia. He picked up offers from Troy and Tulane as a sophomore and then Colorado State, South Alabama and Vanderbilt as a junior. Prior to his senior season, Thomas received several SEC offers, including Auburn, Mississippi State, Missouri and Ole Miss. But the 180-pound defensive back was drawn to Georgia Tech, which offered him as both a safety and wide receiver with the chance to play right away. He was the fifth-highest-ranked recruit in the Jackets’ 2018 class. After initially playing as a defensive back, Thomas moved to linebacker in his first season on campus. He took advantage of the extra year of eligibility because of COVID rules and returned to school for a fifth season. Thomas graduated with his degree in business administration (December 2021) and is pursuing his graduate degree in general studies in history, technology and society. He accepted his invitation to the 2023 East-West Shrine Bowl.

PRO DAY	6025	219	31 3/8	8 3/8	80 3/8	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	(position drills only)

STRENGTHS: Unlocks his hips, trusts his eyes and immediately accelerates ... above-average play speed to the perimeter, and covers a lot of green ... shows secondary quickness after escaping blockers ... has the athleticism to play the cutback by the ball carrier ... takes fast angles downhill, and stocked his college tape with plenty of plays at or behind the line of scrimmage ... range translates to coverage, including his ability to stay stride-for-stride with backs, tight ends and receivers ... feels routes coming and hunts crossers ... was asked to wear multiple hats based on personnel, playing a variety of nickel and linebacker alignments ... had his best statistical season as a senior.

WEAKNESSES: Thin-framed and looks more like a safety than a linebacker ... doesn't have the growth potential to add much more mass ... mediocre play strength and struggles to punch himself off blocks ... lack of length and force will be highlighted in the tackle box ... too easily knocked off schedule by roadblocks ... needs to do a better job settling his feet to square up moving targets as a tackler ... accelerator can get stuck in overdrive at times, allowing even slow-footed quarterbacks to shake him ... had two targeting penalties in 2022 and needs to be more controlled with his strike zone.

SUMMARY: A five-year starter at Georgia Tech, Thomas played the "Money" linebacker position in defensive coordinator Andrew Thacker's 4-2-5 base scheme. A high school defensive back, he made the transition to linebacker for the Yellow Jackets and was consistently productive, including a career-year in 2022 with 112 tackles. With his versatile athleticism, Thomas lined up everywhere on tape and showed outstanding short-area burst and acceleration in the open field (confirmed by his 1.55 10-yard split and 4.55 40-yard dash at the Combine). He is a magnet to the football when kept clean but can be too easily knocked off his path and needs to be more controlled as a finisher. Overall, Thomas will have a tough time overcoming his lack of strength, but he is fast-flowing in pursuit, and his play range expands his usefulness. He is a potential special-teamer with development potential as a nickel backer.

25. JALEN GRAHAM | Purdue 6017 | 220 lbs. | 4SR Detroit, Mich. (Cass Tech) 1/11/2001 (age 22.29) #6

BACKGROUND: Jalen Graham grew up in the Detroit area and played on both sides of the ball throughout youth football. He originally attended Birmingham Detroit Country Day School and started on varsity as a sophomore quarterback and safety. Graham posted 26 tackles and two interceptions in 2016 along with six total touchdowns (three passing, two rushing, one receiving) as he helped Country Day to a 13-1 record (only loss came in the 2016 state championship game). He transferred to Detroit Cass Tech High School for his final two seasons and spent his junior season as the backup quarterback and starting safety. Graham became Cass Tech's starting quarterback as a senior and led the program to an 11-2 record in 2018, including an upset win against Cleveland St. Edward on a last-second 40-yard Hail Mary touchdown. He earned first team All-State honors in his final season. Graham also lettered in track at Cass Tech, posting personal bests in the 100 meters (22.39) and 110 meter hurdles (16.05).

A three-star recruit, Graham was the No. 57 athlete in the 2019 recruiting class and the No. 20 recruit in Michigan. Despite his strong play at quarterback in high school, all of his scholarship offers were to play safety. Graham narrowed his college choices to Indiana, Iowa State, Minnesota and Purdue and committed to the Boilermakers on defense. He enrolled early in January 2019 and was part of the same recruiting class as George Karlaftis and David Bell. Graham opted out of the 2022 bowl game and accepted his invitation to the 2023 East-West Shrine Bowl.

STRENGTHS: Passes the eye test with his athletic, muscular build ... long-limbed and physical ... processes quickly, and his itchy trigger finger helps drive on plays downhill ... the coaches trusted him to wear multiple hats depending on personnel groupings ... runs the alley with conviction ... faces up the ball carrier and brings his feet ... casts a wide net as a tackler ... doesn't waste his length when working off blockers ... stays square in his drops and feels routes coming ... brings "buckets of energy" to both practice and games, according to NFL scouts ... his junior tape shows a productive teams player on kickoff coverage.

WEAKNESSES: Speed is mediocre at best ... upright play style and labors in his transitions ... hip and lower body tightness hinders his explosiveness in the open field ... needs to use more consistent pad level to leverage blockers for quicker disengagement ... runs himself out of plays when he opts to freelance ... unrefined blitzler and needs to improve his timing as a gap slicer ... will struggle to match the quickness of NFL tight ends in man coverage ... suffered a tibia injury in the 2022 season opener and missed the next four games.

SUMMARY: A four-year starter at Purdue, Graham played a nickel linebacker role in former co-defensive coordinator Ron English's hybrid back-seven. A quarterback and safety in high school, he was a movable chess piece for the Boilermakers' defense and played most of his snaps in the box, but he also lined up as a slot defender and edge player. Graham is long and physical with a downhill appetite that keeps his pursuit alive through contact. However, he needs to improve his pad level at the point of attack and his freelancing leads to missed run fits. Overall, Graham is alert, well-built and driven to make plays, which might fit as a SAM linebacker, but his pursuit speed is average and his tight transitions will be tough to overcome vs. NFL skill athletes. His versatile background and special teams potential could be his saving grace.

26. MICAH BASKERVILLE | LSU 6004 | 221 lbs. | 5SR Shreveport, La. (Evangel Christian) 10/19/1999 (age 23.52) #23

BACKGROUND: Micah Baskerville, who is the third-youngest of nine children, grew up in Shreveport and attended Evangel Christian Academy, a private Christian school. He was a four-year starter on varsity as a middle linebacker and helped the program to a 2015 state championship, posting 38 tackles and 9.0 tackles for loss as a sophomore. As a senior, Baskerville led Evangel Christian to an 8-2 record and 2017 district championship. He was named a U.S. Army All-American and led his team in tackles, finishing with 80 tackles and 4.0 sacks.

A four-star recruit, Baskerville was the No. 14 inside linebacker in the 2017 recruiting class and the No. 8 recruit in Louisiana. He received offers from Oklahoma State, TCU and Tulane, but when LSU offered him after his junior season, he committed on the spot. Baskerville was part of the same recruiting class as wide receiver Ja'Marr Chase and enrolled early in January 2018. He was suspended from school in the spring of 2021 due to academics. Baskerville accepted an invitation to the 2022 NFLPA Collegiate Bowl, but decided to return to school for a fifth season after promising his mother (Renee) that he would finish his degree. He faced another suspension to start the 2022 season but won his appeal and was ruled academically eligible three days before the season opener. He graduated with his degree in interdisciplinary studies (December 2022). Baskerville accepted his invitation to the 2023 NFLPA Collegiate Bowl.

STRENGTHS: Patient diagnose skills vs. the run and reacts quickly to play development ... scrapes well laterally to mirror runs and stay ahead of pullers ... works to keep his pads square while avoiding climbers and filling gaps ... knows when to take on blocks or when to sidestep them ... strong wrap and drag-down tackler and is a consistent finisher (see 2022 Tennessee tape) ... follows the quarterback's eyes to passing lanes (led team in passes defended in 2022) ... communicates with his teammates well pre-snap ... showed focus and determination to change the narrative about his academics and earn his degree (head coach Brian Kelly: "He has been inspirational in everything he has done.") ... saw a lot of special teams action (567 career snaps) with a pair of punt blocks.

WEAKNESSES: Lacks ideal size and length by NFL standards ... can be neutralized in the hole and struggles to escape once engulfed by blockers ... doesn't have ideal play strength in his upper or lower bodies ... average speed, and doesn't consistently close the gap ... his hip tightness shows with quick direction changes in the open field ... loses track of backs and tight ends in man coverage ... better box tackler than in the open field, which also shows on special teams (more missed tackles than tackles on special teams coverages) ... was suspended from school because of grades and didn't participate with the team in spring 2021.

SUMMARY: A three-year starter at LSU, Baskerville played SAM linebacker in defensive coordinator Matt House's scheme (his fourth defensive coordinator in his five seasons in Baton Rouge). After struggling with academics as an underclassman, he returned as a fifth-year senior (led the team in tackles) and did everything that was asked of the coaches and support staff to get his grades back on track to graduate. Baskerville diagnoses well downhill to flow with leverage, diagnose pullers and finish at the ball carrier. However, his range and instincts are much better vs. the run than the pass. Overall, Baskerville is football smart and triggers without wasting steps, but his athletic and strength profiles are very average and tougher to overcome at the NFL level. His special teams background and coachability will help his chances of earning a roster spot.

SUMMARY: Drake Thomas, whose older brother (Thayer) is also in this draft class, started playing football at four-years-old. He is the all-time leading tackler (393) at Heritage High School and was also a standout running back. A three-star recruit, Thomas committed to NC State over offers from Alabama, Michigan and Ivy League schools. Playing both SAM and MIKE linebacker, he led the Wolfpack in tackles the past two seasons and finished his career No. 3 in school history in tackles for loss (46.0). Thomas displays outstanding diagnose skills vs. the run with his ability to processes football action at high speeds to find the quickest route from A to B. But he can be covered up by blockers and lacks playmaking range in coverage. Overall, Thomas plays with outstanding read-react instincts to always be in the vicinity of the football, but his lack of desired length and speed will be tough to mask at the NFL level. His drive and toughness might land him a role on special teams.

SUMMARY: Amari Burney was a two-way starter at Calvary Christian High in Clearwater, playing all four seasons on varsity. He finished his prep career with 992 receiving yards and 12 touchdowns plus 182 tackles at safety. A four-star recruit, he committed to Florida (as a safety) over Ohio State and others. He moved to linebacker in 2019 and was a part-time player until his senior year, when he earned a starting weakside role and posted career highs across the board. Burney has done a nice job strengthening his body and honing his break-down and tackling skills. He will struggle to keep himself clean and doesn't have the length to easily press blockers off him in the run game. Although his zone instincts let him down at times, Burney has the fluidity to transition and stay attached to backs and tight ends. Overall, Burney is caught in between safety and linebacker, but his speed and matchup skills in coverage are why NFL teams are taking a long look at him.

SUMMARY: Zaire Cordero-Barnes, who has an older brother (Zavier) who played linebacker at Saginaw Valley State, prepped at Carmel Catholic where he earned All-State honors as a running back and safety as a senior, finishing with 77 tackles and six touchdowns. A three-star athlete recruit, he had a host of MAC offers and committed to Western Michigan. After a torn ACL sidelined him in 2020, he became a full-time starter at "sam" linebacker in 2021 and had a career year as a senior with a team-best 93 tackles and nine passes defended. A high school safety, Barnes looks comfortable pedaling in reverse with the footwork to quickly gather and go. His read-react skills have gotten better as he has played more football. He would benefit with improved wrap technique but is generally a consistent tackler. Overall, Barnes is constantly around the football because of his key reads and play speed, and his special teams contributions could be his ticket to an NFL roster spot.

SUMMARY: Michael Ayers grew up around the game as the son of a football coach and was a three-sport standout (football, track, wrestling) at Walnut Ridge High in east Columbus. He was a four-year starting safety on varsity and earned first team All-State honors as a senior, leading the team in tackles and interceptions. He went overlooked as a recruit by Division I schools landed at Division II Ashland, moving to "whip" linebacker in 2018. At just 205 pounds, he shifted to inside linebacker in 2021 and posted big-time production his final two seasons. Ayers looks like a former safety and doesn't have an ideal build, but that experience playing from depth shows in his coverage drops. He reads cutback lanes well with range to pursue plays outside, although NFL speed will be a big step up from Division II. Overall, Ayers can be engulfed by blockers when he gets too close to the sun, but he is a stingy run-and-chase linebacker who can earn his way on special teams.

SUMMARY: Austin Ajiake (AH-juh-kay) was primarily a running back growing up, including at Bellarmine Prep where he rushed for 1,168 yards and 11 touchdowns as a senior in 2017 (also played linebacker). A two-star recruit, he had only four FBS offers and committed to UNLV, moving to linebacker shortly after he enrolled. After his 2021 season was cut short, he had a career year as a super senior in 2022, leading the Mountain West in tackles. He has a young daughter (Eliana) with his fiancée (Rhonda). Ajiake has solid play recognition in pursuit, but he can be reached and engaged by blockers if he doesn't get a quick start. He has a good feel as a zone dropper to feel his surroundings and jump lanes. As a tackler, he uses his speed to run through ball carriers with strong hands to finish (671 special teams snaps). Overall, Ajiake needs to streamline his ability to stack and shed blocks, but his cover athleticism and chase speed (defense and special teams) are intriguing skills.

SUMMARY: Ben VanSumeren started playing tackle football at age 10 and lined up at myriad positions for Garber High. He was named the 2017 Player of the Year with 85 receptions, adding 79 tackles and four interceptions. A three-star "athlete" recruit, he committed to Michigan (first player in his high school's history to sign with a Big Ten school) and played fullback for two years before moving to linebacker in 2020. He transferred to Michigan State for his final two seasons, which included a career year in 2022. VanSumeren has athletic traits that grab your attention. He has very good playing speed to the perimeter with secondary quicks to give chase after shedding. However, he is often caught guessing and doesn't play through blocks with his eyes. He offers pass-rush potential on subpackage downs. Overall, VanSumeren doesn't play with high-level instincts, but he is a superb athlete and his freaky testing numbers alone will get him long looks in an NFL camp.

SUMMARY: Bumper Pool, who legally changed his first name from James to Bumper at the age of 16, grew up in Lucas and started playing at the pee-wee level. He was a four-year letterman at Lovejoy High and combined for 424 tackles over his final three seasons. A four-star recruit, he grew up an Arkansas fan and passed on offers from Alabama, Michigan and others. Pool recorded 90-plus tackles in each of the last four seasons and departs as the school's all-time leading tackler (441). He injured his hip in November 2022 and required bilateral labral surgery, which sidelined him for the pre-draft process. Pool does a terrific job with his run fits, plugging gaps or containing outside. He's not explosive, but he thumps at contact and moves with passable change-of-direction skills to chase down runners in pursuit. Overall, Pool has only average speed and can be late recognizing things in coverage, but he is a tackling machine who knows how to leverage the run.

SUMMARY: Nick Anderson grew up near the Mississippi-Louisiana border and was an All-County linebacker at Vicksburg High. As a senior, he posted 114 tackles, 14 sacks and eight forced fumbles. But he didn't have any FBS offers and spent the 2018 season at the juco level. After that, he received more attention from scouts and committed to Tulane over Ole Miss and South Alabama. He had a breakout 2020 season but missed time because of injury in 2021. He returned healthy in 2022 and finished second on the team with 113 tackles. Anderson is a short and stout linebacker with above-average intangibles and play speed to get where he is going in a hurry. Some linebackers are secure tacklers, while others are violent tacklers — Anderson is both. He can be lured off his spot by play fakes and has coverage limitations. Overall, Anderson's lack of length shouldn't be ignored, but he has an aggressive run-and-hit mentality with the makeup and skill set for special teams.

1. CHRISTIAN GONZALEZ | Oregon 6013 | 197 lbs. | 3JR The Colony, Texas (The Colony) 6/28/2002 (age 20.83) #0

BACKGROUND: Christian Gonzalez, who is one of four children (has three sisters), was born in Carrollton, Texas, and started playing football at age 5 in the local youth league. He played other sports growing up, including basketball and track. Gonzalez originally attended Carrollton Creekview High because that is where his mother (Temple) was a teacher. After playing on the junior varsity team as a sophomore at Creekside, Gonzalez transferred to The Colony for his final two prep seasons as a cornerback, wildcat quarterback, wide receiver and punter. As a junior, he earned first team All-District with 29 tackles, 10 passes defended and one interception, adding 22 catches for 306 yards and five total touchdowns (two receiving, two kick returns, one rushing). As a senior, Gonzalez again earned first team All-District honors with 17 tackles, 10 passes defended and two interceptions. On offense, he posted 43 catches for 650 yards and 10 touchdowns, adding one rushing touchdown and one kick-return touchdown. Gonzalez was also a standout on the track team, finishing sixth at the 2019 state championships in the 200 meters. He posted personal bests in the 100 meters (10.72), 200 meters (21.65), long jump (22 feet 4 inches) and triple jump (42-8.5).

A four-star recruit, Gonzalez was the No. 31 safety in the 2020 recruiting class and the No. 46 recruit in Texas. After his breakout junior year at The Colony, his recruitment took off and he picked up more than 40 scholarship offers, including several national powerhouses like Alabama, Notre Dame and Ohio State. However, Gonzalez had a connection with Purdue because his brother-in-law was David Blough, a Carrollton native who played quarterback for the Boilermakers for five seasons (2014-18). Gonzalez committed to head coach Jeff Brohm and Purdue prior to his senior season, but he decided to flip to head coach Mel Tucker and Colorado a few months later. However, Tucker resigned and took the Michigan State head-coaching job just a few weeks after 2020 signing day. Gonzalez played for two seasons in Boulder for head coach Karl Dorrell and defensive backs coach Demetrice Martin before entering the transfer portal after the 2021 season. Martin became the defensive backs coach at Oregon under new head coach Dan Lanning, and Gonzalez decided to follow his former coach to Eugene. (Gonzalez: “I don’t even look at him as a coach, he’s more of like my uncle.”) His father (Hector), who stands 6-foot-9, played college basketball at UTEP and semiprofessional basketball in his native Colombia. Christian has two older sisters who are both accomplished track athletes. Melissa, who is married to Blough, was a state-champion hurdler in high school (Creekview) and was an All-American at Texas, where she qualified for the NCAA Championships, setting career bests in the 100-meter hurdles (13.83) and 400-meter hurdles (57.78). Melissa holds dual citizenship in the United States and Colombia and elected to represent Colombia in international competitions, including the 2021 Olympic Games in Tokyo, where she competed in the 400-meter hurdles (57.47). Samantha was also a state-champion athlete at Creekview, setting a state record in the 300-meter hurdles (40.81), which ranks No. 10 in U.S. prep history. Samantha attended Miami (Fla.), where she ran track for four seasons, setting a personal best in the 400-meter hurdles (56.77), which ranked top-five in the country. Christian also has one younger sister (Lily). After one season at Oregon, Gonzalez elected to skip the 2022 bowl game and his senior season to enter the 2023 NFL Draft.

PRO DAY	6015	199	32	9 3/8	77 1/4	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	(no shuttle or 3-cone — choice)

STRENGTHS: Tall, long and can run man-to-man ... accelerates well to match vertical routes and press receivers along the sideline (his 1.81 “flying 20” led all cornerbacks at the combine) ... calm and fluid in his turns, with the footwork and thin ankles to spring in any direction ... route instincts help him stay within arm’s length without hanging on receivers (only three pass interference penalties over the last two seasons) ... uses his long wingspan and leaping skills to cover a lot of airspace ... has the catching skills to finish interceptions when in position ... averaged 29.5 yards per interception return in college (4/118/0) ... throws his body around as a chop down tackler to remove ball carriers from their feet ... put improved tackling on his 2022 film ... was a jammer on punt returns and also played on kick return and field goal block coverages (blocked one field goal in 2022) ... low-key personality and a lunch-pail worker (NFL scout: “He’s a coach pleaser. ... Puts his head down and works.”) ... logged 30 starts the past three seasons and missed only one game (bowl opt-out).

WEAKNESSES: Lean-limbed body type with narrow torso and room to get stronger ... patient in press, but needs to refine the timing and force of his jam ... more disciplined eyes in off coverage will help with his spacing ... occasionally gets lax with his footwork in zone, hurting his response time ... still feeling out when to get his head turned to locate the ball downfield ... improved run defender in 2022, but want to see more tenacity from him ... lacks ideal finishing strength, making his tackling technique even more important.

SUMMARY: A one-year starter at Oregon, Gonzalez was an outside cornerback in Lanning’s man/zone scheme, also seeing time inside versus the slot. After two promising seasons at Colorado, he joined the Ducks for his junior year and led the team in both passes defended and interceptions (he and Utah’s Clark Phillips III were the only Pac-12 defenders with 11-plus passes defended and 4-plus interceptions in 2022). Coming from a family of diverse athletes, Gonzalez has the frame to match up with NFL size and the speed to keep stride vertically with burners at the next level. His tackling skills and ability to turn and restrict passing lanes are ascending parts of his game, but there is still room for improvement in both areas. Overall, Gonzalez needs continued work in zone coverage, but he offers strong man-cover talent with speed, fluid movements and body length to blanket outside receivers. With his high-end traits (similar to Jeff Okudah) and trust in his talent, he has the skill set of a future Pro Bowler.

GRADE: 1st Round (No. 5 overall)

2. DEVON WITHERSPOON | Illinois 5114 | 181 lbs. | 4SR Pensacola, Fla. (Pine Forest) 12/11/2000 (age 22.38) #31

BACKGROUND: Devon Witherspoon grew up in Pensacola, where he played several sports at the youth level, including football. However, he stopped playing to focus on basketball, which emerged as his favorite sport. Witherspoon attended Pine Forest High School and lettered in basketball before deciding to give football another try at his mother’s behest. He joined the football team as a junior and became a starting cornerback, posting 65 tackles, 13 passes defended and four interceptions in 2017. As a senior, Witherspoon led Pine Forest to the playoffs with 74 tackles and seven interceptions (one returned for a touchdown), earning first team All-Area and Defensive Player of the Year honors in Pensacola. Along with basketball and football, Witherspoon was also a standout track athlete, finishing runner-up at states in the 4x100 relay (41.37) as a senior. He also set personal bests in the 100 meters (11.29), high jump (6 feet 7 inches) and long jump (19-3.25).

A no-star recruit, Witherspoon wasn’t ranked by online recruiting services and got a late start after not playing until his junior of high school. He heard from several FBS programs, but his academics were another hurdle, and he signed with Hutchinson (Kan.) Community College. After arriving at Hutchinson in July 2019, Witherspoon received his updated SAT scores, which revealed he was eligible to play NCAA Division I football. He received late interest from several programs, including Georgia State, Middle Tennessee, South Alabama, Southern Miss, Troy, Temple, UAB and UMass. However, Illinois gave him the chance to play for a Power 5 program, and he joined the Illini in August midway through preseason camp. Witherspoon opted out of the 2022 bowl game. He accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl, but pulled out before the event.

STRENGTHS: Competes with the tenacity of a junkyard dog (former HC Lovie Smith: “Probably the toughest guy on the team pound for pound. ... No one competes harder than him.”) ... patient in press-man and stays on top of routes ... outstanding read, drive and finish skills ... above average route anticipation and coverage awareness (knows where his help is) ... skillfully returns his eyes to the quarterback and highly aggressive when the ball is near him ... shows a natural feel for locating and making plays on the football (30 career passes defended, including 17 as a senior) ... decent length to contest throws ... takes sound and high-speed angles in run support and coverage to limit big plays ... hungry, physical tackler who consistently gets his man on the ground ... accelerates through his target as a tackler ... scrappy demeanor and not afraid to coach up his teammates ... wasn’t a regular on special teams coverages, but does have experience as a punt gunner ... lined up both inside and outside at Illinois ... had his best season as a senior (ranked top-10 in FBS in passes defended and allowed only one reception of 20-plus yards).

WEAKNESSES: Lean-muscled and lacks ideal bulk ... played his senior season in the 177-180-pound range, and NFL teams want to see him consistently carry 185 pounds ... aggressive play style at the top of routes and at the catch point, which often results in early contact or flags (11 penalties combined over his junior and senior seasons) ... average recovery speed when he loses a step ... occasionally loses his footing when transitioning with routes ... his Cover 2 and zone spacing is still developing ... missed three games because of injury between his sophomore and junior seasons; unable to work out at the combine because of a left hamstring (March 2023).

SUMMARY: A three-year starter at Illinois, Witherspoon played outside and inside cornerback in former defensive coordinator Ryan Walters’ scheme, playing primarily man with some zone coverage mixed in. After only two years of high school football, he was a recruiting steal for the previous Illini coaching staff and showed steady improvement each season, becoming a consensus All-American and the Big Ten Tatum-Woodson Defensive Back of the Year in 2022. Witherspoon, who loves the challenge of man-to-man, has excellent read-and-drive reaction quickness and uses his eyes and physicality to shut down passing windows (26 passes defended in 22 games the last two season). Although he doesn’t carry an ideal weight, he has functional length and competes much bigger than he looks both in coverage and run support. Overall, Witherspoon needs to walk the fine line of being aggressive without drawing flags, but his fiery play personality is a positive, along with his cover athleticism, ball skills and finishing toughness. He projects as an immediate NFL starter with scheme versatility.

GRADE: 1st Round (No. 9 overall)

3. JOEY PORTER JR. | Penn State 6024 | 193 lbs. | 4JR Bakersfield, Calif. (North Allegheny) 7/26/2000 (age 22.75) #9

BACKGROUND: Joey Porter Jr., who is the middle child of five (three boys, two girls), was born in Bakersfield, where his mother (Christy) and father (Joey Sr.) grew up. The family moved to Western Pennsylvania for his father’s pro football career, and Porter developed a love for the game by spending his childhood around NFL practice fields and locker rooms. He started his prep career at North Catholic High School (north of Pittsburgh), where he played for two seasons. Prior to his junior year, he transferred to North Allegheny High in the Pittsburgh suburb of Wexford, jumping from Class 2A to 6A (highest football classification in the state). Despite missing three games because of a wrist injury, Porter registered 26 tackles and seven interceptions as a defensive back, adding 11 receptions for 186 yards and three touchdowns as a receiver (also had a punt-return touchdown). As a senior captain, he led North Allegheny to a 10-1 record and the 2019 conference championship. Porter posted 22 tackles and three interceptions in his final season, earning first team All-State honors. He was also a four-year letterman in track (sprints and relays) and set personal bests in the 100 meters (11.11) and 200 meters (21.97).

A four-star recruit, Porter was the No. 33 cornerback in the 2019 recruiting class and the No. 4 recruit in Pennsylvania. He received several MAC offers as an underclassman followed by several Power 5 offers (Arizona State, Rutgers, West Virginia) after his junior year. The summer before his senior year, Porter narrowed his final five to LSU, Miami (Fla.), Nebraska, Penn State and Pittsburgh. Early during his senior season, he committed to Penn State and was the No. 15 recruit in head coach James Franklin’s 2019 class. His father played football at Colorado State and was a third-round pick (No. 73) in the 1999 NFL Draft by the Pittsburgh Steelers. Joey Sr. played 13 NFL seasons (1999-2011) for three teams and later served as an assistant coach for the Steelers (2014-18). He currently serves as the linebackers coach for the San Antonio Brahmas in the XFL (his former Pittsburgh teammate, Hines Ward, is the head coach). Joey Jr.’s younger brother (Jacob) is a rising redshirt freshman linebacker at Temple. His older sister (Jasmine) has nonverbal autism, and he grew up often taking care of her. His mother, who played basketball and ran track in high school, is a former special needs teacher and founded the Jasmine Nyree Day Center in Bakersfield in 2003, a network of care facilities for children (ages 3-12) with special needs. She opened another Jasmine Nyree Campus in Pittsburgh in 2021, where Porter’s other older sister (Jayla) serves as the junior vice president. Porter, who studied rehabilitation and human services at Penn State, plans to join the family business after football. He also has several cousins who played in the NFL and college football: Jason Gildon (Oklahoma State; Steelers, Jaguars), Larry Birdine Jr. (Oklahoma; 5 NFL teams) and Sheldon Croney Jr. (Iowa State). Porter opted out of the 2022 bowl game and skipped his senior season to enter the 2023 NFL Draft.

PRO DAY	-	198	-	-	-	-	-	-	37 1/2	10’11”	-	-	(no shuttle or 3-cone — choice)

STRENGTHS: Long and lanky oversized frame tailor-made for press-man duties ... uses his go-go-gadget arms to reroute receivers off the line and escort them out of bounds ... two-hand jam disrupts timing and sets the tone for the route ... patient and coordinated in his movements ... athletic strider who picks up speed as he goes ... improved eye disciplined in zone ... physical-natured and covers up receivers downfield with his body length ... skillfully uses his reach to swat the football and doesn’t need to be in ideal position to obstruct the catch point ... drives fast and physical to blow up receiver screens ... has the large tackling radius to drag down ball carriers ... puts in the time off the field to strengthen his body (his 17 bench press reps at the combine is an outstanding number considering his arm length) ... set the school record for pass breakups (six) in a single game (2022 Purdue) ... was a jammer on punt-return coverages all four seasons (82 snaps).

WEAKNESSES: Grabby with wild limbs and in his attempts to gain phase ... was a flag magnet on film ... upright and tight in coverage, creating awkward, off-balanced transitions ... more likely to batter receivers at the top of routes rather than sink and redirect ... caught leaning and surrenders easy slant completions ... uses his long arms in press, but his hands aren't very heavy ... not a natural hands-catcher and dropped more interceptions than he finished in 2022 ... inconsistent containing the run and will lose outside leverage ... wild tackling technique because of an inconsistent base ... allows his emotions to get the best of him at times ... was an outside-only cornerback in college ... didn't lead Penn State in passes defended or interceptions in any of his four seasons on campus.

SUMMARY: A three-year starter at Penn State, Porter was exclusively an outside cornerback in defensive coordinator Manny Diaz's man-heavy scheme. Although his college production is underwhelming, he didn't give up a touchdown in 2022 and allowed only nine catches (on 26 targets) for 70 yards in man coverage. With impressive NFL bloodlines, Porter parks himself in front of receivers and smothers them in press to reroute and disrupt receiver timing up and down the field. However, he plays on his heels, loses momentum in his hip-flip and hangs on receivers to slow their routes, collecting 11 coverage penalties (nine pass interference, two defensive holding) in the past two seasons with several others that should have been called. Overall, Porter has clear bust potential with his undisciplined play style and unbalanced change of direction, but he has intriguing matchup potential in the NFL because of his aggressive length and body quickness. He projects as a classic bump-and-run cornerback and won't be a slam-dunk fit for every scheme.

GRADE: 1st Round (No. 16 overall)

4. DEONTE BANKS | Maryland 6001 | 197 lbs. | 4JR Baltimore, Md. (Edgewood) 3/3/2001 (age 22.15) #3

BACKGROUND: Deonte "Tae" Banks grew up in Baltimore and started playing football at age 6 in the Parkside Youth Program. He attended Edgewood High School, where he was a two-way player as a cornerback and slotback, playing in the same backfield as his cousin (Antwain Banks). Banks put his name on the recruiting map as a sophomore with 41 tackles and five interceptions, adding 24 receptions for 534 yards. As a junior, he recorded 41 tackles, 16 passes defended and three interceptions (two returned for touchdowns). On offense, he accounted for 1,052 total yards (674 rushing, 378 receiving) and eight touchdowns (five rushing, three receiving). Banks earned All-State and All-County honors as a senior with 113 carries for 1,700 rushing yards (15.0 average) and 24 touchdowns. He also had 23 tackles, nine passes defended and three interceptions (one returned for a touchdown) as he led Edgewood to a nine-win season and appearance in the 2018 playoffs. Banks also lettered in track and set several school records. He posted personal bests in the 100 meters (10.96), 200 meters (22.44), high jump (5 feet 6 inches) and long jump (22-8).

A three-star recruit, Banks was the No. 77 cornerback in the 2019 recruiting class and the No. 12 recruit in Maryland. He received his first scholarship offer from Division II Seton Hill after his junior season followed by a few FCS offers (Delaware State, Elon, Monmouth) and FBS offers (Buffalo, Kent State). When Maryland offered him the summer before his senior season, Banks committed two weeks later and called it a "dream" to play for his home state school. He opted out of the 2022 bowl game and decided to skip his final season of eligibility to enter the 2023 NFL Draft.

PRO DAY	6004	203	32 1/8	9 1/8	76 1/4	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	(no workout)

STRENGTHS: Strong, muscular build with desired speed ... patient in press and uses his arm length to square and slow receivers at the line of scrimmage ... coordinated footwork to transition cleanly and maintain his stride with receivers downfield ... explosive lower body (42-inch vertical led all cornerbacks at the combine) ... slick body control at the top of routes to sink, turn and drive ... looks to play through the hands of receivers ... improved ability reading the eyes and body language of receivers to get his head turned for ball-locating opportunities ... loves to get physical up and down the field (NFL scout: "His dog mentality sets the tone for that secondary.") ... quick to read run plays, escape blockers and fire downhill in support ... above-average balance and finish as an open-field tackler ... rangy speed and motor help him make tackles on the opposite side of the field ... was the regular jammer on punt coverages and blocked an extra point in 2022.

WEAKNESSES: Savvy receivers will get him turned around and crossed up when he turns his hips too early off the snap ... needs to better trust his technique versus NFL receivers ... combative play style will earn him extra attention from officials (five pass interference and three defensive holding penalties in 2022) ... inconsistent depth in zone/off coverage and must do a better job toggling his eyes between the backfield and route ... only two career interceptions ... suffered a serious shoulder injury (September 2021) and underwent season-ending surgery a week later.

SUMMARY: A four-year starter at Maryland, Banks was an outside cornerback in defensive coordinator Brian Williams' balanced scheme. After missing almost all of the 2021 season with a shoulder injury, he got better as the 2022 season went on, including a strong performance versus Ohio State (and Marvin Harrison Jr.) that showed the strengths and weaknesses of his game. A cover-and-clobber corner, Banks has the competitive makeup and smooth hips/feet to become a receiver's shadow in man coverage. His read-react ability to sort routes from zone needs work to create more breakup opportunities, but he is an above average high-to-low tackler. Overall, Banks needs to add more discipline to his play style, but when he trusts his technique, he has the size, athleticism and physicality of an NFL starter. He projects best as an outside, press-man cornerback with upside in zone looks.

5. EMMANUEL FORBES | Mississippi State 6006 | 166 lbs. | 3JR Grenada, Miss. (Grenada) 1/13/2001 (age 22.29) #13

BACKGROUND: Emmanuel “Junior” Forbes Jr., who is the second-youngest of 10 children, was a multisport standout growing up in Grenada. Football was a “family tradition” for him, following in the footsteps of his father (Emmanuel) and four older brothers, and he often played quarterback throughout youth leagues. Forbes enrolled at Grenada High School, where he was a three-way player at defensive back, wide receiver and returner and saw varsity action as a freshman. As a full-time starter as a sophomore, he posted 47 tackles, four interceptions and three forced fumbles. As junior, Forbes accounted for 43 tackles (three for loss) and four interceptions, adding two punt-return touchdowns and 20 catches for 241 yards and two receiving touchdowns. Playing both cornerback and safety as a senior, he earned All-State honors with 49 tackles and eight interceptions (two returned for touchdowns). Forbes added eight touchdowns (seven receiving, one rushing) on offense with 31 catches for 499 yards. He also lettered in baseball and basketball at Grenada, averaging 7.2 points and 3.1 rebounds per game as a junior (opted not to play his senior season).

A four-star recruit, Forbes was the No. 13 cornerback in the 2020 recruiting class and the No. 2 recruit in Mississippi (behind defensive tackle McKinnley Jackson). He also received several juco offers to play baseball. He initially committed to Mississippi State after his junior season in February 2019 because of his relationship with head coach Joe Moorhead and cornerbacks coach Terrell Buckley. But he kept his options open and entertained offers from Nebraska, Tennessee and especially Ole Miss, which really went after him. Ultimately, Forbes stayed committed to the Bulldogs and signed in December 2019 during the early signing period. Two weeks later, Moorhead was fired as head coach and replaced by Mike Leach. Forbes elected to skip his senior season and enter the 2023 NFL Draft.

STRENGTHS: Long, stretched-out athlete with elite ball production ... patient in his stance and stays balanced to react without hesitation ... outstanding spatial awareness in off-man and zone coverages ... instinctive route recognition at all levels ... displays the click-and-close burst to fire downhill ... swift strider to turn and build up his speed vertically ... doesn't panic downfield and uses proper timing to swipe the ball, either with his back to the ball or when turning his head to make plays mid-stride ... uses his long arms to deliver two-hand strikes or maintain spacing to keep receivers from out-muscling him mid-route ... shows the slippery movements to get around blockers and defend screens ... competitive juices flow through his lean body, and he is always looking to get into the action as a tackler ... had a blocked field goal in 2022 ... tallied 30 total interceptions over the past six seasons (16 in his final three seasons of high school and 14 in his three years in college) ... housed six of his 14 interceptions for touchdowns, a new FBS record ... accounted for 390 total interception yards (27.9 average).

WEAKNESSES: Wiry, thin-boned athlete with slight shoulders and below-average mass ... has trouble keeping on weight (was 165 pounds as a senior in high school) with questionable growth potential (NFL scout: “Can he get to 180 pounds? That’s the question. And I don’t know the answer.”) ... eagerness to jump plays will leave him playing catchup when he guesses wrong (see 2022 Georgia tape) ... will get his arm wrapped around receivers, often unnecessarily (one pass interference and three defensive holding penalties in 2022) ... tenacious in the run game, but will stop his feet and struggle to finish, leading to missed tackles ... doesn't have stopping power and can be blown backwards when he tries to put his shoulder into the belly of ball carriers ... doesn't have much chance to power through tight ends or most receivers once they get blocking hands on him ... played only on field goal blocks on special teams in 2022 and had three penalties (one roughing, two offsides) ... lean build will have some questioning his durability — missed only one game because of injury in college (November 2022), but also missed parts of several others, including being carted off versus LSU as a sophomore (September 2021).

SUMMARY: A three-year starter at Mississippi State, Forbes was exclusively an outside cornerback (right of the formation) in former defensive coordinator (now head coach) Zach Arnett's 3-3-5 base, playing man (press and off-man) and zone. Since Forbes entered college in 2020, he leads all college football players with 14 interceptions and six returned for touchdowns, an FBS record. His tape is a master class of spatial relationships and anticipation to make plays on the ball (led the team in both passes defended and interceptions each of his three seasons). Though he is known to freelance, he usually does it responsibly and plays on the balls of his feet to stay balanced and react to anything. Overall, Forbes’ rail-thin build and marginal play strength are concerns, along with his overaggressive tendencies, but he is light-footed and long with the mental processor and confidence to be an NFL playmaker. NFL teams willing to overlook his slightness will find a damn-good player.

GRADE: 1st-2nd Round (No. 35 overall)

6. KELEE RINGO | Georgia 6016 | 207 lbs. | 3JR Tacoma, Wash. (Saguaro) 6/27/2002 (age 20.83) #5

BACKGROUND: Kelee (KEE-lee) Ringo grew up with his grandmother in Tacoma and started playing sports at age 5. Realizing he was faster than all of his friends, he picked up football in the second grade and played in the Lions Youth Football Club, primarily as a running back and safety. Ringo enrolled at Bellarmine Prep School, a private Catholic school in Tacoma, and played on the freshman team as a running back and safety. The summer after his freshman year, he moved to Scottsdale, Ariz., to live with his mother. Ringo enrolled at Saguaro High School, one of the better football programs in the state, having produced several NFL players like wide receiver Christian Kirk and cornerback Byron Murphy. Ringo initially worked out with the wide receivers before coaches moved him to cornerback, where he was coached by defensive backs coach and former NFL player Bryant Westbrook. Ringo finished his sophomore season with 24 tackles, six pass breakups and one interception and helped Saguaro to the 2017 state championship. As a junior, he again helped the program to the state title, although he missed the second half of the season because of conduct code violation, finishing with 31 tackles, four pass breakups and one interception. As a senior, Ringo was named a first team All-American with 32 tackles and three interceptions as Saguaro finished as the state runner-up with an 11-2 record. He also filled in at running back because of injuries and finished as the team's second-leading rusher with 712 yards on 52 carries (13.7 average) and 13 touchdowns. Ringo was also an accomplished track athlete. He ranked as one of the top sprinters in Washington state as a freshman with a 10.58 in the 100 meters. After he transferred to Saguaro, Ringo posted the best 100-meter (10.43) and 200-meter (21.18) results in Arizona as a junior (both school records). He won the state championships in both events in 2019 with a 10.62 100 and 21.26 200.

A five-star recruit, Ringo was the No. 1 cornerback in the 2020 recruiting class and the No. 1 recruit in Arizona, one spot ahead of Bijan Robinson. He was considered the No. 4 recruit nationally behind Bryan Bresee (Clemson), Bryce Young (Alabama) and Julian Fleming (Ohio State). Ringo received his first offer from FCS-level Howard prior to his transfer to Saguaro. After his breakout sophomore year at cornerback, he flew up the recruiting rankings and the offers poured in from almost every national program, including Alabama, Notre Dame, Ohio State and USC. Ringo had a final three of Georgia, Oregon and Texas, and he announced the Bulldogs as his choice live during the All-American Bowl (Oregon finished second). His mother (Tralee Hale), who was a triple jump champion in high school, was diagnosed with breast cancer (Stage 2 triple-negative ductal carcinoma) in June 2020 shortly after Kelee enrolled in Athens. After several rounds of chemotherapy, she had a bilateral mastectomy and announced that she was cancer free in March 2022. Ringo has lived most of his life apart from his father because he is stationed in Virginia as a Master Chief in the Navy. Ringo elected to skip his final two seasons of eligibility and enter the 2023 NFL Draft.

STRENGTHS: Athletic, muscular frame with the size to match up with NFL receivers ... track background with elite acceleration and deep speed to carry vertical routes ... fluid footwork and hips to easily change directions on command ... flashes the reactive athleticism to close on throws with burst ... shows the ability to turn his head and locate without losing phase ... receiver-like hands to finish interceptions when in position ... rakes at the football, and his size/length increases his chances of turning completions into breakups ... above-average physicality mid-route and uses his size to trap receivers against the sideline ... has prototypical size and movements to improve his press-man techniques ... rangy tackler who flashes the strength to fight through blocks ... consistent ball production as a starter ... regular on special teams as a gunner and jammer on punt coverages ... played in all 30 games the last two seasons after missing the 2020 season.

WEAKNESSES: Turns his hips prematurely and defaults to a vertical sprint before reading ... spotty transitions and must learn how to gear down with routes ... late to anticipate route breaks and concedes too many completions in front of him because of tardy sink-and-drive mechanics ... soft, upright jam and doesn't reroute in press-man ... inconsistent turning his head downfield ... undisciplined hands and arrives early downfield (five pass interference and three defensive holding penalties in 2022) ... waits for the ball carrier at times, allowing him to make a move ... needs to settle his feet and improve his timing to clean up the missed tackles ... missed his entire first season after undergoing shoulder surgery (August 2020) to repair a torn labrum.

SUMMARY: A two-year starter at Georgia, Ringo lined up at left cornerback in co-defensive coordinator Will Muschamp's man/zone scheme. The No. 2 defensive recruit in 2020, he missed his first season in Athens because of injury but was a key part of the Bulldogs' back-to-back national championships, leading the team in passes defended each of the last two seasons. With exceptional size and athleticism, Ringo boasts desired physical ingredients with ball skills to locate and make plays when in phase (three of his four career interceptions came against Bryce Young, Will Levis and Hendon Hooker). Though he makes splash plays, he will also give them up because he doesn't anticipate and is late to process and react mid-pattern. Overall, Ringo struggles to stay in phase because of undeveloped technique and awareness, but he is a freaky and competitive athlete with the size/speed blend that NFL defensive coordinators covet. Though uneven results should be expected early in his career, he has the talent to push for starting reps throughout his rookie season and might receive looks as a safety.

7. DJ TURNER | Michigan 5112 | 178 lbs. | 4JR Suwanee, Ga. (IMG Academy) 11/9/2000 (age 22.47) #5

BACKGROUND: JuanDrago "DJ" Turner II was drawn to football from an early age and was a standout for North Gwinnett in middle school, including an interception in the GFL Championship Game in eighth grade. Turner enrolled at North Gwinnett High School (teammates with WR Josh Downs), where he was a versatile defensive back, lining up primarily at nickel and safety. After posting three interceptions as a sophomore, he helped North Gwinnett to a 14-1 record and the 2017 6A state championship (highest level in Georgia) and was named the Defensive Player of the Game. Turner finished his junior season with 78 tackles (eight for loss) and two interceptions (one returned for a touchdown), earning All-County, All-Region and All-State honors in 2017. Looking to play press-man cornerback instead of safety, he transferred to IMG Academy in Bradenton, Fla., for his senior season. Turner recorded 17 tackles (three for loss), one forced fumble and two interceptions in 2018, including a 100-yard interception return for a touchdown.

A three-star recruit, Turner was the No. 40 cornerback in the 2019 recruiting class and the No. 49 recruit in Florida. He picked up his first scholarship offer from Southern Miss as a sophomore and finished with three dozen offers. Turner's final dance card was impressive, with offers from several notable programs like Alabama, Clemson, Florida, Georgia, LSU, Notre Dame, Oklahoma, Penn State, Stanford and Tennessee. But he was smitten with Michigan after his visit to Ann Arbor because of the academics, and he wanted to be in a defense where he could play mostly press-man like he did at IMG Academy. Turner wasn't one of the 16 four- or five-stars who signed with Jim Harbaugh in the 2019 recruiting class, but he proved to be one of the best defensive recruits from that class. He elected to skip his final season of eligibility to enter the 2023 NFL Draft.

PRO DAY	5113	179	30 1/2	9 3/4	73 1/8	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	(position drills only — choice)

STRENGTHS: Above-average athlete with plus speed and redirect skills ... ran the fastest 40-yard dash (4.26) and 20-yard split (2.32) at the combine ... controls his gears to stay on top of routes ... reacts quickly to mirror, drive and knock away throws on slants and crossers ... active eyes to see receivers and the quarterback and anticipate where the ball will be thrown ... solid ball skills when working downhill ... physical by nature and bravely walks the fine line of making receivers uncomfortable mid-route ... has worked hard to add/maintain weight to max out his frame ... loves the grind and has been tutored by former NFL defensive back Ray Buchanan since seventh grade ... smart and a grinder who tries to get better every day ... solid ball production in two seasons as a starter (20 passes defended) ... inside and outside experience.

WEAKNESSES: Lean muscle tone with below-average arm length ... muscled off the top of routes and can be put on skates by receivers ... needs to lay off the downfield jabs ... below-average ball skills down the field and inconsistent reading with his back turned ... tends to panic as he tries to gain body position (penalized four times for pass interference in 2022) ... quick to recover, but his inconsistent coverage balance will be more noticeable in the NFL ... scrappy tackler, but gets himself in trouble when he waits for ball carriers and gives blockers a chance to reach him ... battled a glute injury in high school, which followed him to Michigan and forced him to redshirt in 2019 ... skill set should translate well to special teams, but wasn't a regular teams player in college

SUMMARY: A two-year starter at Michigan, Turner was a perimeter cornerback in defensive coordinator Jesse Minter's man-heavy scheme, also seeing snaps as a nickel. After playing sparingly his first two seasons in Ann Arbor because of injury and the pandemic, he became a starter in 2021 and totaled 20 passes defended over the past two seasons (All-Big Ten both years). A twitchy and active athlete, Turner has above-average speed and transition quickness to match up with NFL receivers in man coverage. He plays a physical brand of football and loves to show off his feistiness, although it can be a detriment at times, leaving him off balance and out of position to make plays on the ball downfield. Overall, Turner's limited length and play strength are amplified versus bigger targets, but he is smart, explosive and competitive and should continue to ascend in coverage. He doesn't back down and shows the movement ability and toughness desired at nickel in the NFL.

8. CLARK PHILLIPS III | Utah 5090 | 184 lbs. | 3JR Lakewood, Calif. (La Habra) 12/19/2001 (age 21.36) #1

BACKGROUND: Clark Phillips III, who is one of four children, grew up in Los Angeles, where he started playing soccer at age 3 and picked up football shortly after. He was primarily a running back at the youth levels and into high school, where he attended St. John Bosco as a freshman. Phillips transferred to La Habra High School for his final three seasons and also transitioned to cornerback as his primary position. He moved up to varsity as a sophomore and posted 26 tackles, 15 passes defended and seven interceptions, adding 127 rushing yards and 153 return yards. Phillips earned Conference Player of the Year honors as a junior with 18 tackles, 10 passes defended and two interceptions. He also moved to slot receiver in 2018 and finished with 54 catches for 1,210 yards (22.4 yards per catch) and 19 touchdowns. As a senior, Phillips was named the Orange County Defensive Player of the Year with 28 tackles, seven passes defended and four interceptions, adding 30 receptions for 435 yards and 11 total touchdowns (10 receiving, one kickoff return). He led La Habra to a 10-win season in 2019 and earned All-State, All-County and All-Conference honors as a junior and senior.

A four-star recruit, Phillips was the No. 6 cornerback in the 2020 recruiting class and the No. 6 recruit in California (No. 2 defensive player in the state behind linebacker Justin Flowe). He was the No. 51 recruit nationally. Phillips announced himself as a top recruit as a sophomore, receiving early offers from UCLA and Washington. By his senior season, he had offers from almost every major program in the country, including Alabama, Georgia, Michigan, Notre Dame and Texas. He initially committed to Ohio State, but after defensive coordinator and defensive backs coach Jeff Hafley left to become the head coach at Boston College, Phillips took a last-minute visit to Salt Lake City and flipped to Utah on signing day. He became the highest-ranked recruit in Utes history and enrolled early in January 2020. His father (Clark Sr.) is the pastor at Unity Missionary Baptist Church in Los Angeles, a Christian church his grandfather founded more than 60 years ago. Clark's younger brother (Bryce) played cornerback at Santa Ana College in 2021 before transferring to FCS-level Tennessee State in 2022, earning second team All-OVC as a sophomore. Phillips opted out of the 2022 bowl game and skipped his senior year to enter the 2023 NFL Draft.

STRENGTHS: Plays well on his feet with above-average short-area quickness, body control and burst ... change-of-direction skills allow him to stay attached with shifty route runners (he prefers man coverage) ... decisive click-and-close twitch and mechanics ... flashes the closing speed to regain phase after losing a step ... coaches say he has an "insatiable appetite" for film work and preparation — and his tape confirms that as fact and not lip service ... instincts lead him to the football ... above-average ball production over his career ... tied the school record with four pick sixes (No. 4 in Utah history with 232 career interception return yards) ... solidly built and maximizes his strength potential (18 bench press reps led all cornerbacks at the combine) ... doesn't have a passive bone in his body ... voted a 2022 team captain and carries himself with supreme confidence ... goal-oriented person (Phillips: "I like to write my goals down. ... I put everything in my cheap, spiral notebook from the 99-cent store.") ... started 31 games the last three seasons with experience inside and outside.

WEAKNESSES: Lacks ideal size and already near maxed out ... aggressiveness leads him into route-running traps ... long speed is average by NFL standards, and receivers will throw all types of double-moves at him ... not shy getting handsy downfield (two pass interference penalties and one defensive holding in 2022) ... late getting off receiver blocks ... throws his body around as a tackler, but often goes for the hit instead of using proper wrap fundamentals (concerning number of missed tackles on 2022 film) ... missed one game as a junior because of injury (November 2022).

SUMMARY: A three-year starter at Utah, Phillips was a matchup-oriented cornerback in defensive coordinator Morgan Scalley's scheme, lining up inside and outside. One of the top high school recruits three years ago, he lived up to expectations with 27 passes defended and eight interceptions over the last two seasons, leading the Pac-12 in both categories in 2022 (fourth unanimous All-American in school history and first non-specialist). A twitchy, hyperaware athlete, Phillips does a great job reading the bread crumbs to trigger, drive and make plays at the catch point. Though he trusts his film study to break down splits and route tendencies, his desire to make plays can be a double-edge sword as both a tackler and in coverage (gave up a combined 230 yards in two matchups versus USC in 2022). Overall, Phillips doesn't have elite size or speed and needs to limit the big plays allowed, but his read-react athleticism, competitive instincts and ball skills will translate well to NFL coverage. He has the skill set of a playmaking nickel capable of seeing outside reps as well.

GRADE: 2nd Round (No. 53 overall)

9. DARIUS RUSH | South Carolina 6017 | 198 lbs. | 5SR Kingstree, S.C. (C.E. Murray) 2/22/2000 (age 23.18) #28

BACKGROUND: Darius Rush, who has an older brother, grew up in Kingstree (about an hour inland from the coast) and played multiple sports throughout his childhood. Often the best player on the field, he played mostly quarterback throughout middle school (in his recognizable Rec Specs). Rush enrolled at C.E. Murray High School, where he lettered all four seasons on varsity. A big fish in a small pond, he started on varsity as a freshman, playing primarily quarterback on offense and cornerback on defense. As a sophomore, he led the school to its first state championship game, accounting for 803 total yards (462 rushing, 227 passing, 114 receiving) and 37 tackles and 12 passes defended. As a junior, Rush finished with 622 rushing yards, 228 receiving yards, 94 passing yards and 18 total touchdowns (12 rushing, three receiving, two kickoff returns, one interception return), adding 36 tackles, two interceptions and one forced fumble on defense. He moved to wide receiver as a senior and led the team to an 11-2 record with 47 receptions for 863 yards and 17 touchdown grabs, earning Region Player of the Year. He added a kick-return touchdown and had 44 tackles, one forced fumble and one interception on defense. Rush also handled the punting and kicking duties. He lettered in five sports in high school: baseball, basketball, football, golf and track. As a sophomore, Rush won the 2016 South Carolina Class A state championships in the high jump (6 feet 4 inches) and triple jump (47-1).

A three-star wide receiver recruit, Rush was the No. 154 wideout in the 2018 recruiting class and the No. 21 recruit in South Carolina. He received offers from Miami (Ohio), Old Dominion and Charlotte, but once South Carolina offered, he committed almost on the spot. Rush grew up a fan of the Gamecocks, and his older brother (Marcus) graduated from South Carolina before earning his MBA from Stanford. After playing almost double-digit positions in high school, he signed as a wide receiver and was one of the lowest recruits in the Gamecocks' 2018 class (below Jaycee Horn, Kingsley Enagbare, Israel Mukuamu, Ernest Jones and others). Rush transitioned to defense midway through the 2019 season. His father died when Darius was 13. His mother (Sonja Rush-Harvin), who worked at C.E. Murray as a curriculum specialist and athletic team assistant, was named the 2016 USA Football Team Mom of the Year (selected from more than 2,000 women nominated nationally) for her work with students. Rush graduated with his degree in sport and entertainment management (May 2022). He opted out of the 2022 bowl game and accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl (voted the American Team's practice player of the week at cornerback).

PRO DAY	6017	198	33 1/8	9 1/2	80	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	(stood on combine testing)

STRENGTHS: Above-average height and length for the position ... fluid movement skills and above-average acceleration (his 21.65 mph was the fastest clocked at the Senior Bowl) ... balanced backpedal with man-cover skills ... shows the reaction quickness to stay connected at the top of routes ... closes with burst on crossers and throws in front of him ... wide receiver background is clear with the way he attacks the football ... competitive in coverage without making early contact — flagged only twice in his career (one facemask, one defensive holding) ... was a regular on special teams all four seasons (419 career special teams snaps), including as a gunner on punt coverage ... carries himself with an overachieving attitude (NFL scout: "He won over (head coach Shane) Beamer and his staff pretty quickly. ... Kid is always locked in.") ... changed positions multiple times and has a team-first mentality.

WEAKNESSES: On the leaner side for his long frame ... questionable play strength and needs to be more aggressive punching his way off receiver blocks ... too soft on the edges and doesn't play excitable in the run game ... inconsistent squaring up ball carriers, with too many missed tackles and mistimed angles on tape ... can be caught on his heels and surrender easy slant completions ... gets himself in trouble when he leans on receivers in press ... conservative eyes in off coverage and can be late pulling the trigger on throws in front of him ... battled several nagging injuries over his career, missing two games as a senior ... lined up exclusively outside and doesn't have slot experience.

SUMMARY: A two-year starter at South Carolina, Rush was an outside cornerback in defensive coordinator Clayton White's man-heavy scheme. As a big fish in a small pond in high school, he played multiple positions and was recruited as a wide receiver until Will Muschamp moved him to cornerback full-time, where he emerged as an ascending player the last two seasons. A good-sized athlete, Rush has excellent reactionary quickness in man coverage with the balanced movements to transition cleanly out of his breaks and make plays on the football. Though he does a great job closing space in coverage, his route anticipation is still a work in progress, and his play strength must improve to better match up with physical NFL wideouts. Overall, Rush is not a secure tackler and must continue developing his instincts in off coverage, but he has the fluidity and length to turn, run and stay stride-for-stride with receivers. His athletic cover traits give him NFL starting potential as a man-to-man corner.

GRADE: 2nd-3rd Round (No. 63 overall)

10. CAM SMITH | South Carolina 6006 | 180 lbs. | 4JR Blythewood, S.C. (Westwood) 12/21/2000 (age 22.35) #9

BACKGROUND: Cameron "Cam" Smith grew up in Blythewood and played multiple sports throughout youth leagues and middle school. He moved to Fort Meade, Md., and enrolled at Meade Senior High School, where he played his first three years of high school football. As a cornerback, Smith finished his junior season with 47 tackles, three interceptions and one forced fumble. He also played on offense and recorded 205 rushing yards, 90 receiving yards and five touchdowns (four rushing, one receiving), adding a punt return for a touchdown. Smith returned to Blythewood midway through his junior year and enrolled at Westwood High in December 2017. As a senior, he posted 65 tackles (four for loss), 16 pass breakups and four forced fumbles, earning U.S. Army All-American honors. Smith also lettered in track in high school, posting career bests in the 100 meters (11.68), long jump (20 feet 9.5 inches) and triple jump (42-6).

A four-star recruit, Smith was the No. 19 cornerback in the 2019 recruiting class and the No. 2 recruit in South Carolina (behind Zacch Pickens). While playing in Maryland, he added offers from West Virginia, East Carolina and several MAC schools. Smith attended a South Carolina recruiting camp the summer before his senior year and left with an offer from head coach Will Muschamp. He had a final three of Georgia, South Carolina and Tennessee and officially committed to the Gamecocks, the team he grew up rooting for growing up down the road from Columbia. Smith elected to skip his senior season and enter the 2023 NFL Draft.

PRO DAY	6005	183	32 3/8	9	76 1/2	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	(stood on combine testing)

STRENGTHS: Explosive athlete with light feet and acceleration to live on an island ... extremely coordinated in his collect-and-drive action to break up throws in front of him ... shows seamless transitions out of breaks ... reads well with the ball skills and length to be a nuisance for receivers at the catch point ... confident, brash and plays with a swagger ... not shy coming off his man to go make a play on the football (need to watch his 2021 tape to get a better feel for his ball skills) ... loves to get physical in the run game and in coverage, fighting back against push-offs at the top of routes ... didn't play much on special teams outside of field goals, but did have a blocked field goal in 2022 ... played both inside in the nickel and outside on the 2022 tape.

WEAKNESSES: Very lean with minimal bulk on his frame ... long arms are often draped around the hips of receivers, making him an easy target for coverage penalties ... flagged double-digit times over 11 games in 2022 (2022 Texas A&M tape shows the good and bad) ... feet and hands must become more technically sound in press-man ... reads well high-to-low in zone coverage, but route anticipation is still developing ... marginal play strength often leaves him attached to wide receiver blocks ... spotty tackler and must improve his strike zone ... has streaky tackling habits, grabbing high and attempting to throw receivers to the ground ... missed multiple games because of minor injuries over his career with the Gamecocks, including a concussion (September 2022).

SUMMARY: A three-year starter at South Carolina, Smith was an inside and outside cornerback in defensive coordinator Clayton White's man-heavy scheme. He announced himself to NFL scouts with a standout 2021 season, ranking No. 2 in the SEC with 14 passes defended, but his 2022 campaign didn't live up to the lofty expectations. With his natural reflexes and coverage IQ, Smith doesn't overthink what he sees and trusts his reaction to movement, displaying outstanding closing burst to the football. Though he has the movements skills to answer skilled route runners, he must learn how to be more subtle in coverage to avoid becoming a flag magnet for NFL officials. Overall, wild tendencies and unrefined technique are the concerns, but Smith has all the talent necessary to be a longtime NFL starter if he makes the necessary adjustments. He can work either inside or outside and will fit best in a zone-heavy scheme.

GRADE: 2nd-3rd Round (No. 66 overall)

11. TYRIQUE STEVENSON | Miami (Fla.) 6003 | 198 lbs. | 4SR Miami, Fla. (Southridge) 5/26/2000 (age 22.92) #2

BACKGROUND: Tyrique Stevenson, who is the oldest of five children, grew up in the Miami area with his mother and could often be found outside playing sports. He originally attended South Dade High School, where he played linebacker on the JV team as a freshman. After moving up to varsity as a sophomore, Stevenson played cornerback, safety and wide receiver and posted 69 tackles and four interceptions, earning All-County honors in 2017. He transferred to Southridge High for his senior season, where he played cornerback, safety, receiver, punter, returner and long snapper. Stevenson finished his final year with 62 tackles and six interceptions and was named a U.S. Army All-American. He also lettered in basketball and track at South Dade high school, setting a personal best in the 100 meters (10.88) his junior year.

A four-star recruit, Stevenson was the No. 3 cornerback in the 2019 recruiting class (behind Derek Stingley and Andrew Booth) and the No. 4 recruit in Florida (behind Nolan Smith, Trey Sanders and Evan Neal). He was the No. 37 overall recruit and one of the highest-ranked four-stars in the class. After his sophomore season, Stevenson picked up offers from UCF and Florida, and he committed to the Gators a month later. He continued to take visits and received several high-profile offers, including Alabama, Florida State and his hometown Miami (Fla.). After his junior season, Stevenson decommitted from Florida and reopened his recruitment. Ultimately, he narrowed his final choice to Georgia and Miami and committed to the Bulldogs because his mother wanted him to leave the "bubble" where he grew up. Stevenson was homesick in Athens and had "a lot of disagreements" with head coach Kirby Smart, who wanted him to play safety or nickel while Stevenson wanted to be a cornerback. After the 2020 season, he entered the transfer portal and received numerous offers but never considered anywhere except returning home to Miami for his final two seasons. He has four younger sisters: a twin sister, younger sister and another set of twin sisters. Stevenson accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl.

PRO DAY	6005	196	32 3/8	9 1/2	78	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	(no bench press — choice)

STRENGTHS: Physically impressive athlete with a muscular body and long arms ... explosive athlete with springs in his calves to quickly redirect ... flashes the recovery speed to get back into position when needed ... able to muscle receivers off their intended path or force them to run laterally to avoid the jam ... looks to make route runners uncomfortable without drawing flags ... responsible for only one coverage penalty (pass interference) in his two seasons with the Hurricanes ... able to play through the hands of receivers when in position ... physical tackler with a safety background and looks to drive through his target when squared up ... plays chippy and has the requisite mental and physical toughness required for the NFL.

WEAKNESSES: False-stepper near the line of scrimmage, forcing him to play catchup ... high-hipped and moves with hints of hip stiffness mid-transition ... surrenders too much spacing in off coverage ... late to collect himself and break on slants as early as he should ... offenses know they can get him to bite and give up big plays (see 2022 North Carolina tape) ... inconsistent balance downfield leaves ball production on the field ... looks to lay the boom in run support but tends to be reckless as a finisher, leading to ball carriers escaping his initial attack ... arrested and charged with disorderly conduct (March 2019) shortly after enrolling at Georgia after allegedly fighting with employees at an Athens bar ... tore his labrum and several ligaments in his right shoulder (November 2021), which required offseason surgery (spring 2022) to shave his collarbone.

SUMMARY: A two-year starter at Miami, Stevenson was an outside cornerback in former defensive coordinator Kevin Steele’s man-coverage scheme. After playing the “STAR” nickel position at Georgia (against his wishes), he transferred closer to home to play cornerback and combined for 14 passes defended and three interceptions in two seasons. Stevenson is an above-average size/speed athlete with physical toughness and brash swagger that many coaches covet as foundational traits for their man-cover defenders. He isn’t shy bumping and riding the hip of route runners, but his physical play style leaves him unbalanced mid-route and at the catch point, which will be tougher to hide from officials in the NFL. Overall, Stevenson needs to become more disciplined in coverage and versus the run, but he is a long, rangy corner with the speed and short-area athleticism to stay in phase. He is a press-man corner on the perimeter with NFL starting ability.

GRADE: 2nd-3rd Round (No. 69 overall)

12. JULIUS BRENTS | Kansas State 6026 | 198 lbs. | 5SR Indianapolis, Ind. (Warren Central) 1/18/2000 (age 23.28) #23

BACKGROUND: Julius “JuJu” Brents, who is the second-youngest of six children, grew up on the east side of Indianapolis and was active in several sports, mostly basketball and football. He attended Warren Central High School, where he was a four-year letterman for the varsity football team (teammates with former Purdue and Cleveland Browns WR David Bell). Brents played both free safety and cornerback and put his name on the recruiting radar after a standout sophomore season. Despite missing parts of his junior and senior seasons because of injuries, he earned first team All-Conference and All-County honors both years. A captain as a senior, he finished his high school career with 89 tackles and five interceptions. Brents also lettered in track.

A three-star recruit, Brents was the No. 30 safety in the 2018 recruiting class and the No. 4 recruit in Indiana. His first offer came from Indiana after his sophomore season, followed by other Power 5 programs like Boston College, Louisville, Michigan State, NC State, Syracuse and Vanderbilt. But Brents developed a connection with the Iowa coaches (recruited by assistant Kelvin Bell) and committed at the start of his senior season. Because of injuries, he was pressed into the starting lineup as a true freshman, with his first start coming against Minnesota’s Rashod Bateman and Tyler Johnson. Brents looked like a future star for the Hawkeyes, but he lost his starting spot after a knee injury in 2019 (redshirted) and played sparingly in 2020 (struggled in the opener versus Purdue and Bell, his former high school teammate). With Riley Moss and Matt Hankins entrenched as the starters for the 2021 season, Brents entered the transfer portal in December 2020, and, a month later, he committed to Kansas State. He accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl.

PRO DAY	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	(no workout or measurements – choice)

STRENGTHS: Extraordinary height, length and wingspan for the position ... aggressively uses his long arms at the line of scrimmage to disrupt route timing ... fluid athlete to spring in any direction and transition well in his movements (6.63 3-cone and 4.05 short shuttle both ranked No. 2 among all players at the combine) ... long-striding acceleration to stay in phase in man coverage ... flashes a quick trigger once he sinks to close on plays ... eagerly returns his eyes to the quarterback ... functional zone-cover skills ... has experience at both cornerback and safety ... coachable and doesn’t mind being challenged (KSU cornerbacks coach Van Malone: “He is one of the hardest workers on the team and has been since he arrived.”) ... started all 27 games at Kansas State the past two seasons.

WEAKNESSES: Stringy muscle tone ... struggles to simultaneously find his balance and locate the ball downfield ... ball skills are very hot and cold, and he will leave production on the field ... inconsistent eye discipline ... will lose track of his man or panic (flagged six times in 2022, including three pass interference penalties and one defensive holding) ... turns his hips prematurely, making him late to drive on screen passes, but his pedal is clunky when he doesn’t turn his hips ... more of a hug-and-wrestle tackler than a player who drives through the ball carrier... suffered a lingering right knee injury during preseason camp (August 2019), which sidelined him for the entire season.

SUMMARY: A two-year starter at Kansas State, Brents was the left cornerback in defensive coordinator Joe Klanderman’s man/zone scheme. After starting as a true freshman at Iowa (his first start came against Minnesota’s Rashod Bateman and Tyler Johnson in 2018), he got lost in the mix after missing the 2019 season because of injury and transferred to Manhattan in 2021, where he led the Wildcats in passes defended and interceptions as a senior. Brents has rare length for the position and impressive short-area quickness for his body type. With his long arms, he can make wide receivers uncomfortable at the line of scrimmage and mid-route, but his length is negated downfield because of his struggles to find the football. Overall, Brents’ inconsistent balance and ball skills are legitimate concerns at the next level, but he is a long-limbed, fluid athlete with the loose movements and speed to maintain phase. He offers the man-cover skills that will help him compete for starting-level snaps early in his NFL career.

13. CAMERON MITCHELL | Northwestern 5106 | 191 lbs. | 4JR Bolingbrook, Ill. (Bolingbrook) 9/8/2001 (age 21.64) #2

BACKGROUND: Cameron “Cam” Mitchell, who is the middle child of three (older sister and younger sister), was born in Chicago and grew up in the suburb of Bolingbrook. He started playing football at age 5 and was mostly a wildcat quarterback throughout the youth levels. Mitchell also played soccer, baseball and basketball growing up, but was football-only once he got to high school. He enrolled at Bolingbrook High School, where he was a four-year starter on varsity at cornerback (played only on defense). Mitchell was named a team captain and All-Conference his junior and senior years while also earning All-Area and All-State in his final season. He finished his prep career with five interceptions.

A three-star recruit, Mitchell was the No. 106 cornerback in the 2019 recruiting class and the No. 22 recruit in Illinois. After his sophomore season, he picked up a pair of MAC offers (Bowling Green and Northern Illinois) followed by Northwestern. Mitchell flirted with nearby schools like Minnesota, Notre Dame and Wisconsin, but Northwestern was his only Power 5 offer, and he committed prior to his senior year. Mitchell, Adetomiwa Adebawore and Evan Hull were three of the Wildcats’ lowest recruits in the 2019 class. He followed in the footsteps of his close friend and former Northwestern cornerback Greg Newsome, whom he has known since he was 11. Cameron’s father (Deon) was a running back, wide receiver and return man at Northern Illinois (1994-98) and accounted for 4,732 career all-purpose yards. Mitchell elected to skip his senior season and enter the 2023 NFL Draft.

PRO DAY	-	197	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	4.06	6.89	- (weighed in, shuttles, 3-cone only)

STRENGTHS: Plays with enough size, speed and length to stay in phase ... footwork stays controlled and on top of routes to contest stop/comeback routes ... solid technician with athletic transitional skill out of his breaks ... anticipatory and feels route combinations around him (comfortable with two-to-one reads) ... shows excellent timing once he locates the football to gracefully disrupt passing windows without going through receivers ... physically competitive in press and downfield, and receivers know they are in for a dogfight ... quick to support the run and stays loose in his breakdown to finish in space (11 tackles on 2022 Penn State tape) ... called for only two coverage penalties in 2022 ... productive on special teams (seven career tackles) and well-schooled to be a core teams guy ... has the skill set to play inside or outside.

WEAKNESSES: Lacks recovery burst, giving skilled receivers a chance to create separation when caught on his heels ... can be fooled by initial route movements, and excitement to attack passing lanes will draw him out of position ... only two career interceptions and left a few others on the field ... enthusiastic, physical hands to connect in press, but needs to break that contact post-release (see 81-yard catch allowed on 2022 Duke tape) ... can be covered up by perimeter blocks and needs to improve his hand use to gain his freedom ... improved tackling technique will help compensate for his average size and play strength against downhill runners.

SUMMARY: A two-year starter at Northwestern, Mitchell played boundary cornerback in former defensive coordinator Jim O’Neil’s base Cover 4 scheme. When his close friend, Greg Newsome, was banged up late in the 2020 season, he stepped into his role and quickly developed into one of the team’s best defensive players. A smooth, competitive corner, Mitchell has athletic footwork with the play strength and coverage timing to disrupt passing windows (he just needs to pull down more interceptions). Though he is fearless jumping plays, NFL quarterbacks will look to expose his greedy tendencies and catch him out of position. Overall, Mitchell needs to continue and develop his eye discipline to better match up with NFL receivers, but his athleticism, aggressiveness and smarts give him the scheme-versatility that NFL teams desire. He will be ready to compete for NFL starting reps as a rookie.

GRADE: 3rd Round (No. 85 overall)

14. CORY TRICE JR. | Purdue 6033 | 206 lbs. | 5SR Hopkinsville, Ky. (Christian County) 5/30/2000 (age 22.91) #23

BACKGROUND: Cory Trice Jr. grew up in Hopkinsville (near the Tennessee border) and started playing sports at a young age. He was coached in basketball and football by his father (Corey), who was shot and killed in October 2010. Trice attended Christian County High School in Hopkinsville, where he earned a varsity spot as a freshman and played both ways at wide receiver and safety. As a senior, he helped Christian County to an 11-1 record and the 2017 district championship. Despite missing four games with a foot injury, Trice was named first team All-State, All-Conference and District Player of the Year with 31 tackles and three interceptions. He scored six touchdowns in his final season (three punt returns, one kickoff return, one interception return and one fumble recovery). Trice finished his prep career with 14 interceptions. He also lettered in basketball at Christian County.

A three-star recruit, Trice was the No. 90 safety in the 2018 recruiting class and the No. 7 recruit in Kentucky. He started to receive legitimate Division I interest during his junior season and picked up several FCS offers like Austin Peay, Murray State, Southern Illinois and Tennessee-Martin. Purdue became his first FBS offer in January 2017, and he committed to head coach Jeff Brohm in June over other FBS offers like Bowling Green and Miami (Ohio). Trice was in the same Boilermakers signing class as Rondale Moore and Payne Durham. He moved from safety to cornerback (a position he hadn’t played since eighth grade) early in the 2019 season. Trice graduated with his degree in communications (December 2021) and is pursuing his master’s degree in technology leadership and innovation. He opted out of the 2022 bowl game and accepted his invitation to the 2023 East-West Shrine Bowl, but pulled out before the event.

PRO DAY	6033	205	32	10	77 1/4	-	-	-	-	-	4.06	6.70	- (stood on combine testing)

STRENGTHS: King-sized athlete with elite height, build and length for the position ... above-average athletic traits, with short-area burst and long speed ... physical hands to aggressively jam at the line of scrimmage ... has the foot quickness to mirror and transition from press ... anticipates really well from zone to drive with authority and be disruptive ... tracks the ball well over his shoulder, using his length to take away passing lanes ... has a finishing burst to close ground on downfield passes ... competitive run defender who uses his long arms and play strength to be a reliable finisher ... offers position versatility, having played safety in high school and when he arrived at Purdue (transitioned to cornerback early in the 2019 season).

WEAKNESSES: Plays with unsurprising tall pads ... technical breakdowns in coverage open catch-point windows ... quick to open his hips and compromises his body position ... can do a better job high-pointing and using his length advantage to time interceptions before the receiver has a chance ... needs to hone tackling fundamentals to stay low in the open field ... junior year was derailed by injuries, missing three games because of a high ankle sprain (September 2021) and then suffering a torn ACL in his left knee (October 2021) in practice; required season-ending surgery, missed 2022 spring practices and wore a brace and sleeve on his left knee to start the 2022 season (developed a groin injury because of it).

SUMMARY: A four-year starter at Purdue, Trice was an outside cornerback in former co-defensive coordinator Ron English's scheme. After a long road back from his 2021 knee injury, he showed noticeable rust on his 2022 tape but still graded well and posted a team-best 12 passes defended (with only one pass interference flag). An impressive height/weight/speed athlete, Trice passes the eye test with flying colors, and his testing numbers reflect his above-average athletic traits. He is a little bit of a cornerback-safety tweener and needs to play with better pad level for quicker recoveries, but he displays a great feel for reading breaks and flashes GGI (go-and-get-it) skills. Overall, Trice might never be a high-level technician, but he has exceptional size, speed and change-of-direction skills to be a disruptive cover man both early and late in the rep. He offers position versatility with starting potential in press-man or Cover 3 schemes.

GRADE: 3rd Round (No. 88 overall)

15. KYU BLU KELLY | Stanford 6002 | 191 lbs. | 4SR Las Vegas, Nev. (Bishop Gorman) 5/22/2001 (age 21.93) #17

BACKGROUND: Kyu Blu Kelly, who is one of three children, grew up in Calabasas (30 miles west of Los Angeles), where he started playing football at age 6 (coached by his father). During eighth grade, he moved to Las Vegas to attend football powerhouse Bishop Gorman High School, a private Catholic school. Kelly spent two seasons on varsity, playing both ways as a cornerback and wide receiver, and was teammates with several future FBS players like QB Dorian Thompson-Robinson (UCLA), TE Brevin Jordan (Miami) and WR Cedric Tillman (Tennessee). As a junior, he helped Bishop Gorman to the 2017 state title and earned first team All-Conference and second team All-State on defense, finishing with 18 tackles and four interceptions. Kelly again led Bishop Gorman to a state championship in 2018 and recorded 23 tackles and one interception, adding 174 receiving yards and one touchdown catch on offense. He earned first team All-State and All-Conference honors as a senior and was named conference defensive MVP. Kelly also lettered in track, where he earned All-State honors, finishing first in the long jump (24 feet 2.5 inches), second in the 200 meters (21.58) and third in the 100 meters (10.66) and at the 2019 state championships.

A three-star recruit, Kelly was the No. 68 cornerback in the 2019 recruiting class and the No. 4 recruit in Nevada. He received scholarship offers from every Pac-12 program except USC (despite being a legacy). Kelly considered Cal, Nebraska, Oregon and UCLA, but the combination of academics and athletics drew him to Stanford. His father (Brian) played cornerback at USC before he was drafted in the second round (No. 45) of the 1998 NFL Draft, playing 10 seasons with the Tampa Bay Buccaneers (won Super Bowl XXXVII in 2003). Kelly accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl (voted the National Team's practice player of the week).

PRO DAY	6004	192	32 1/2	9 1/2	76 5/8	-	-	-	-	-	4.35	6.93	- (stood on combine runs and jumps)

STRENGTHS: Tall, long and limber ... agile-footed with slick hips to turn and run vertically ... comfortable in press-man, playing nose-to-nose at the line of scrimmage (see press-man snaps versus USC's Jordan Addison) ... has a feel for the sticks and route combinations in zone ... uses long arms to wall off or reach the catch point before receivers ... deftly plays through the hands of pass catchers ... nice job settling his feet and dropping his pads in run support ... strong, drag tackler once he latches on to ball carriers ... smart on and off the field (signed a deal with Microsoft for a video game he created and is involved with real estate development) ... has an understanding of what is required for an NFL career from his father ... started 35 games in his college career.

WEAKNESSES: Only average speed by NFL standards and struggles to recover after false movements ... tends to drift and can be driven off the top of routes ... needs to avoid making downfield contact, panicking at times instead of turning to locate the ball (two pass interference penalties, one defensive holding in 2022) ... average play strength and will hang on blocks longer than you want ... gets in trouble when he waits for ball carriers instead of firing through them ... ball production plummeted between junior and senior seasons (saw fewer targets) ... missed at least one game each of the last three seasons, including a pair of games as a senior (October 2022).

SUMMARY: A four-year starter at Stanford, Kelly was primarily an outside cornerback in former defensive coordinator Lance Anderson's balanced scheme. As the son of an NFL defensive back, he grew up around NFL locker rooms and coaches (Mike Tomlin was his father's position coach for five seasons in Tampa) and put together a solid resume in Palo Alto. Kelly is a good-looking athlete with coordinated footwork to stay in the receiver's hip pocket when his technique is right. But he isn't dynamic out of transitions and needs to create plays on the football instead of waiting for them to appear. Overall, Kelly has electric foot quickness to gather, redirect and match route runners, but he lacks the recovery burst/speed to make up lost steps, which is a concern versus pro receivers. He has the baseline skills to compete for NFL starting reps.

GRADE: 3rd-4th Round

16. JAKORIAN BENNETT | Maryland 5105 | 188 lbs. | SSR Mobile, Ala. (McGill-Toolen) 8/23/2000 (age 22.68) #2

BACKGROUND: Jakorian “JB” Bennett, who is the oldest of four children, was born and raised in Mobile, where he started playing football at age 8 as a linebacker for the Eight Mile Giants. After struggling to find playing time throughout middle school, he enrolled at McGill-Toolen Catholic High School, one of the better football programs in the area. At only 5-foot-5 and 110 pounds as a freshman, Bennett had a tough time seeing playing time. As a sophomore, Bennett was a part of McGill-Toolen’s 2015 7A state championship as a little-used reserve. He again came off the bench as a junior and was ready to quit football. However, the coaches convinced him to keep working, and he hit a growth spurt the summer before his senior year. In his first varsity start, Bennett had three interceptions and two touchdowns, playing both ways as a cornerback and wide receiver. He finished his senior season with eight interceptions to earn All-Region honors and helped McGill-Toolen to a 13-1 record, with their only loss coming against Hoover in the 2017 state championship game. Bennett also lettered in track and earned All-State honors in 2018, placing third in the 60 meters (7.06) at the 2018 indoor championships and fifth in the 100 meters (10.81) at the 2018 outdoor championships.

A no-star recruit, Bennett wasn’t ranked by recruiting services and didn’t receive any Division I scholarship offers for two reasons: He didn’t see serious playing time until his senior year and didn’t have the ACT scores to qualify academically. Hoping to continue playing football, Bennett enrolled at Hutchinson (Kan.) Community College for two years, earning first team All-Conference honors in 2019 with a pair of interceptions at safety. A three-star juco recruit, he was the No. 68 overall recruit from the juco ranks and collected more than two dozen FBS scholarship offers. Bennett passed on Arkansas, Miami (Fla.), Oklahoma, Ole Miss and several others to sign with Maryland. He took advantage of the extra year of eligibility because of the pandemic and returned to school for a fifth season in 2022. Bennett graduated with his degree in family science. He accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl.

PRO DAY	5105	194	32 1/4	9	76 7/8	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	(position drills only – choice)

STRENGTHS: Above-average speed ... hints of tightness in his hips, but shows quick feet and body movements to transition with route runners ... hyperalert to impending throws and cleverly reads the eyes/body of receivers with his back to the ball ... always ball-searching post-catch to rake it free ... strong click and close on plays in front of him ... secure tackler and eager to work high-to-low in run support ... battled through adversity in high school when everyone told him he was too small and would never cut it (was ready to quit football after his junior year when he couldn’t get on the field) ... productive gunner on punt coverage ... led Power 5 with 29 passes defended over the past two seasons.

WEAKNESSES: Size and play strength are average at best ... overly physical early and late and will draw flags (13 penalties over the last two seasons, including six pass interference flags in 2022) ... movements become frenzied at times with his eagerness to make plays ... bites on initial route movements and can be drawn out of phase by ball/head fakes ... strength doesn’t always match his intentions when taking on blocks ... should have turned a few more of his pass breakups into interceptions ... had a grand total of minus-1 return yards on his five career interceptions ... had offseason wrist surgery after the 2020 season (spring 2021); missed two games over his final two seasons because of minor injuries.

SUMMARY: A three-year starter at Maryland, Bennett was primarily an outside cornerback in defensive coordinator Brian Williams’ balanced scheme. After only one season of high school varsity football, he went the juco route and then blossomed with the Terrapins, logging more passes defended (31) than games played (28) in his Maryland career. Bennett has NFL play speed and controls his throttle well to maintain competitive spacing in man coverage (zero touchdowns allowed in 2022). With his ball skills, he displays an innate ability to judge and disrupt the catch point, although teams must be comfortable with the tradeoff, which is his aggressive propensity to draw flags. Overall, Bennett’s lack of discipline mid-route and at the catch point created rough patches on tape, but his cover speed and knack for getting his hands on the football are traits that will follow him to the NFL. He will compete for gunner reps and defensive snaps as a rookie.

GRADE: 3rd-4th Round

17. GARRETT WILLIAMS | Syracuse 5103 | 192 lbs. | 4JR Harrisburg, N.C. (Hickory Ridge) 6/1/2001 (age 21.91) #8

BACKGROUND: Garrett Williams, who is one of two children, was born in Charlotte and grew up in nearby Harrisburg, where he started playing football at age 7 at the Pop Warner level. He was primarily a quarterback through youth football and had dreams of playing the position at Hickory Ridge High School. He played quarterback on the JV team his first two years and went into his junior season competing to be the varsity starter. However, coaches moved him to cornerback (a position he had never played before) at a seven-on-seven tournament in the summer of 2017, and the move soon become permanent. As a junior, Williams finished with 68 tackles, 18 passes defended and three interceptions to earn first team All-Region honors. He also recorded 639 all-purpose yards and four touchdowns (two punt returns, one fumble return and one interception return) as Hickory Ridge went 11-3 and advanced to the third round of the 2017 4A playoffs. As a senior captain, Williams posted 31 tackles (five for loss), eight passes defended and one interception as teams stayed away from his side of the field. He earned All-Conference honors and also saw offensive snaps in 2018 as a wide receiver and in the backfield. Williams joined the track team at Hickory Ridge as a sprinter to improve his speed.

A three-star recruit, Williams was the No. 171 cornerback in the 2019 recruiting class and the No. 75 recruit in North Carolina. After his move to cornerback as a junior, several nearby FBS schools took notice, and he received offers from Appalachian State, Charlotte and East Carolina. The summer prior to his senior year, Williams narrowed his choice to James Madison, Maryland, Syracuse and West Virginia and committed to the Orange in August 2018. Despite suffering a torn ACL in October 2022, he elected to skip his senior season and enter the 2023 NFL Draft.

STRENGTHS: Outstanding footwork to stay on top of routes ... loose movement skills aid his transitional quickness and help him keep phase ... instinctive in man-to-man with decisive reactions ... presses routes and looks for the football ... shows a good feel for playing to his help ... tracks the ball well and has a nose for passing lanes (his first college interception was a pick six against Trevor Lawrence in 2020, only pick six surrendered by Lawrence) ... crowds the hip of receivers without making excessive contact (zero defensive penalties the past two seasons) ... gets busy in the run game and doesn't back down ... proudly wore the captain "C" on his jersey ... experienced on kick and punt coverages (combined for five special teams tackles the last two seasons).

WEAKNESSES: Doesn't have ideal height, frame or bulk ... often retreats at the snap and shows a slight hitch in his sink-and-drive technique, surrendering quick wins for the offense ... runs well, but doesn't have the makeup acceleration to easily close ground once he loses it ... lack of strength shows when he is locked on perimeter blocks ... was outside-only in college and doesn't have experience in the slot ... tough-minded player but battled several injuries the past two seasons (missed a total of eight games), including a thigh bruise (October 2022) followed by a season-ending torn ACL to his left knee (October 2022); missed the NFL Draft process because of his knee injury.

SUMMARY: A three-year starter at Syracuse, Williams was the left cornerback in former defensive coordinator Tony White's 3-3-5 base scheme with mixed coverages. He put his name on the NFL radar as a redshirt freshman and was on pace for his third-straight season with double-digit passes defended in 2022 before his torn ACL. Williams is an athletic and hyperaware player who can return his eyes to the quarterback without losing track of his coverage. He is undersized by NFL standards, and that will show against big-framed targets and blockers on the outside. Overall, Williams doesn't have ideal size or strength and the durability of his left knee is an unknown variable, but he has the athletic traits and instinctive capabilities to handle himself well on an island. He has down-the-road starting potential as an NFL perimeter corner.

GRADE: 4th Round

18. TERELL SMITH | Minnesota 6004 | 204 lbs. | SSR Snellville, Ga. (South Gwinnett) 7/27/1999 (age 23.75) #4

BACKGROUND: Terell Smith, who is one of two children (has a sister), enrolled at South Gwinnett High School and played both ways as a wide receiver and cornerback. After carving out a role on varsity as a sophomore, he was one of the program's best players as a junior, posting four receiving touchdowns, two interceptions and a punt-return touchdown. As a senior, Smith earned first team All-Region honors with 23 tackles (two for loss), five passes defended and two interceptions, adding 10 receptions for 352 yards and three touchdowns. He also had a prolific track career in high school. Smith won the Georgia state championship in the 100 meters (10.39) as a junior and the 200 meters (21.26) as a sophomore. He set a personal best in the 100 meters (10.32) and the 200 meters (20.84), which was the fifth-best time in the country.

A three-star recruit, Smith was the No. 67 cornerback in the 2018 recruiting class and the No. 70 recruit in Georgia. He collected more than a dozen Power 5 offers, including Indiana, Iowa State, Kentucky, Louisville, Maryland, Ole Miss, Virginia and West Virginia. Smith developed a connection with head coach P.J. Fleck and his Minnesota staff and committed in March of 2017. Over the next few months, he added offers from Florida, Michigan State and Notre Dame, and Fleck was worried Smith would jump at another opportunity. However, he stayed true to his commitment and signed with Minnesota during the early signing period. Smith took advantage of the extra year of eligibility because of the pandemic and returned to the Gophers for his fifth season in 2022. He accepted his invitation to the 2023 East-West Shrine Bowl.

PRO DAY	6003	205	32 7/8	9 1/8	77 1/8	-	-	-	-	-	4.34	7.00	- (stood on Combine runs, jumps, bench)

STRENGTHS: Impressive size/speed athlete with long arms ... accomplished track athlete whose long strides show when carrying verticals, making up ground and when driving underneath ... light-footed to stay composed with twitchy releases ... utilizes his length to challenge at the line, forcing receivers to run laterally and avoid his jam ... uses the sideline to his advantage to pin and restrict windows ... decent hands to finish interceptions when in position ... squares and drives as a tackler with force behind his pads and engulfing arms that help him hug to finish ... declares his leverage when taking on blocks and uses physicality to detach from blockers ... flashed blitzing skills on 2022 tape.

WEAKNESSES: Moves with a tall center of gravity, which can hinder his transition quickness ... inconsistent finding and making plays on the football ... needs to read receivers better with his back to the line of scrimmage ... puts examples of route anticipation on film, but it isn't a strength of his game yet ... needs to exhibit better patience — will get grabby versus sudden receivers (two pass interference penalties and one holding call in 2022) ... will turn 24 before his first NFL training camp ... wasn't a full-time special teams player in college ... missed multiples games because of injuries in four of his five seasons with the Gophers.

SUMMARY: A three-year starter at Minnesota, Smith was an outside cornerback in defensive coordinator Joe Rossi’s mixed coverage scheme. After making a splash as a true freshman for the Gophers, he was lost in the wilderness for a few years before producing his best season as a senior, leading the team in passes defended. Smith has impressive top-end speed and foot quickness that allows him to stay attached to routes, although his mirror transitions can get clunky at times. His matchup against Charlie Jones on the 2022 Purdue tape was a great example of what he does well and where he still needs to improve. Overall, Smith can be baited off course and leaves too much production on the field, but he has an intriguing blend of length, speed and physicality to match up with NFL receivers on the outside. He is a physical press-man corner prospect.

GRADE: 4th Round

19. TRE TOMLINSON | TCU 5075 | 178 lbs. | 4SR Waco, Texas (Midway) 1/10/2001 (age 22.30) #1

BACKGROUND: Tre’Vius (Trey-vee-us) “Tre” Tomlinson (formerly Hodges-Tomlinson) grew up in Marlin (central Texas), where he started playing football at age 5, primarily as a running back. His family moved to Waco in middle school, and he attended Midway High School. A three-year letterman, Tomlinson played some wide receiver and also returned kicks, but his focus was at defensive back, playing cornerback, nickel and safety. As a junior, he accounted for 63 tackles, three interceptions and three touchdowns (fumble return, interception return and kickoff return). As a senior, Tomlinson was named first team All-District on defense with 85 tackles, two interceptions (both returned for touchdowns) and a blocked field goal. He led Midway to an 11-2 record and the 2018 playoff semifinals before falling to powerhouse Allen High. Tomlinson also lettered in track (sprints and relays) and set a personal best in the 100 meters (11.04).

A three-star recruit, Tomlinson was the No. 113 safety in the 2019 recruiting class and the No. 175 recruit in Texas. He received his first offer from Texas State followed by Kansas State and his hometown Baylor. Tomlinson grew up dreaming of playing at TCU for Gary Patterson, but the Horned Frogs didn’t pull the trigger on an offer, and he appeared headed for Baylor. However, after a plea from his Hall of Fame uncle, Tomlinson received the TCU offer a few weeks before signing day and committed. His uncle (LaDainian Tomlinson) rushed for 5,263 yards at TCU and was a first-round pick (No. 5) in the 2001 NFL Draft by the San Diego Chargers. An 11-year NFL veteran, Tomlinson was a five-time Pro Bowler and inducted into both the College and Pro Football Hall of Fames. Tomlinson accepted his invitation to the 2023 East-West Shrine Bowl.

PRO DAY	5076	181	30 3/8	8 1/8	71	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	(stood on Combine testing)

STRENGTHS: Exceptional speed, agility and lower-body explosiveness ... oily hips for sudden-twitch movements and directional change ... displays short-area burst out of his pedal to jump routes ... shows a developed feel for reading play indicators and breaks ... eyes consistently lead him to passing windows ... accounted for 40 passes defended in 37 games the past three seasons ... gave up only two catches of 25-plus yards in 2022 (on 81 targets) ... plays with the competitive toughness of a much bigger player, attacking blockers or ball carriers with a head of steam ... missed tackles decreased each season at TCU ... grew up training with his Hall of Fame uncle and developed a battled-tested mentality.

WEAKNESSES: Substantially undersized with subpar height, weight and length ... will struggle matching up versus long, high-pointing receivers in the NFL ... receivers can power through his feisty coverage ... super-aggressive play style leads him to early or mauling contact, giving officials no choice but to throw the flag ... can be controlled by wide receiver blocks ... throws his body around in run support, but often hits instead of wraps ... ball carriers can step out of his tackle attempts because of his shorter arms and limited finishing strength ... worked primarily on the outside and lacks ideal experience working versus the slot ... stayed healthy in college, but durability could become an issue because of his size.

SUMMARY: A three-year starter at TCU, Tomlinson was an outside cornerback in defensive coordinator Joe Gillespie’s scheme. After leading the Horned Frogs in passes defended the past three years, he earned the Jim Thorpe Award as the nation’s top defensive back with a prolific senior season: 18 passes defended, 34.6 completion percentage when targeted. A big-time competitor beaming with confidence, Tomlinson is rabbit-quick with a decisive reactor to play sticky coverage and trigger routes. However, his lack of length drastically lowers his margin for error (in coverage and run support), and his aggressive mentality makes him a flag magnet (14 penalties in 2022). Overall, Tomlinson’s size will immediately remove him from several draft boards, but his competitive nature and twitchy athleticism give him a legitimate chance of winning over an NFL coaching staff and earning a meaningful role. He projects best inside as a nickel cornerback.

GRADE: 4th-5th Round

20. REJZOHN WRIGHT | Oregon State 6015 | 193 lbs. | 5SR East Palo Alto, Calif. (James Logan) 9/4/2000 (age 22.65) #2

BACKGROUND: Rejzohn (Ray-zhawn) Wright, who is one of five children (four boys, one girl), was born and raised in the Bay Area and grew up in East Palo Alto. He started playing football in the East Bay Youth football league and continued through middle school. Wright attended James Logan High School, where he was a two-way player (quarterback, wide receiver, cornerback and free safety). A three-year letterman, he paced James Logan with six interceptions as a senior in 2017. Wright also lettered in basketball and track (sprints and jumps).

A two-star recruit, Wright was the No. 266 safety in the 2018 recruiting class and the No. 407 recruit in California. He received an offer from San Jose State, but he followed in the footsteps of his brother (Nahshon), who went from James Logan to Laney College, a community college in nearby Oakland. The Wright brothers both starred at cornerback and led Laney to the 2018 state championship. Over his two seasons at Laney, Rejzohn finished with 41 tackles and three interceptions, and his journey was chronicled on the Netflix series “Last Chance U”. A three-star juco recruit, he was the No. 40 juco recruit in the 2020 class and committed to Oregon State over Colorado, UCLA and UCF, again following the same path as his brother, who transferred to Oregon State the year before. The Wright brothers were teammates again in 2020 before Nahshon was drafted in the third round (No. 99) in the 2021 NFL Draft by the Dallas Cowboys. Rejzohn became a starter in 2021 as a senior and decided to take advantage of the extra year of eligibility because of the pandemic and return for his fifth college season in 2022. When Wright was a senior in high school, his father (Jamal) was shot and killed (December 2017) after attempting to break up a fight at a night club. Rejzohn graduated with his degree in sociology. He opted out of the 2022 bowl game and accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl, but pulled out after the second practice because of a hip flexor injury.

PRO DAY	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	(no workout — not yet cleared medically)

STRENGTHS: Good-looking frame with functional length ... stays square and forces receivers to work laterally to evade his jam ... uses long arms to tag and play off receivers ... stays coordinated in his turns to maintain a spatial relationship with receivers ... plays like a dog without a bone as he comfortably returns his eyes to the quarterback awaiting throws in his direction ... uses his body length to make full-extension interceptions or rake the football at the catch point (see 2022 Boise State tape) ... accelerates quickly with his first two steps to close on throws or runners ... passes off receivers well in zone and sniffs out routes ... has a short memory with the requisite toughness for the position.

WEAKNESSES: Slender body type with little definition or bulk ... not a technician and reverts to backyard fun instead of a fundamental approach ... high pedal with uneven footwork ... speed receivers can set him up and get over top of him ... length is a central part of his game, but also a double-edged sword ... handsy play attracted 12 flags over the last two seasons, including six pass interference penalties and four holding calls ... has reckless tendencies in run support, looking to chop down instead of wrapping up ... had a quiet pre-draft process because of injuries: suffered a hip flexor injury in the second practice at the Senior Bowl and missed the rest of the week (February 2023); was unable to work out at the combine (“right thumb” was the listed injury reason) or at the Oregon State pro day.

SUMMARY: A two-year starter at Oregon State, Wright was an outside cornerback in defensive coordinator Trent Bray’s balanced scheme. He posted double-digit passes defended the last two seasons for the Beavers and has been following in the footsteps of his older brother (Cowboys cornerback Nahshon Wright), going from James Logan High to Laney College to Oregon State and now the doorstep of the NFL. Despite getting upright in his pedal, Wright stays controlled in his shadow-and-mirror movements and shows a natural feel for spacing to stay in phase. His length at the catch point is one of his best assets, but he is inconsistent in run support and needs to make technical improvements to match up with NFL speed. Overall, Wright is a long, physical corner who needs to adapt a more disciplined approach, but he has the traits to spy throws, overlap his coverage and make plays on the ball from the perimeter. Not having any athletic testing data pre-draft might hurt him on some teams’ draft boards.

GRADE: 4th-5th Round

21. RILEY MOSS | Iowa 6005 | 193 lbs. | SSR Ankeny, Iowa (Centennial) 3/3/2000 (age 23.15) #33

BACKGROUND: Riley Moss, who is an only child, grew up in Newton, Iowa, where he started playing flag football at age 5. His family later moved to Ankeny (10 miles north of Des Moines), and he attended Centennial High School. Moss didn’t ascend to varsity until his junior year, where he was a defensive back, wide receiver and return man. He finished his junior season with 37 tackles and three interceptions, averaging 13.4 yards on punt returns. As a senior captain, Moss posted 29 tackles and one interception and earned first team All-State and All-District honors. He finished the 2017 season with 167 receiving yards and added a 78-yard kick-return touchdown and 63-yard punt-return touchdown. Moss was also a standout in track and won the state championship in the 110-meter hurdles (14.02) as a senior after finishing runner-up as a junior. He set the state record in the 110-meter hurdles (13.85) in a different meet and was part of state championship teams in the 4x100 relay (42.04) and 4x200 relay (1:27.99).

A two-star recruit, Moss was the No. 248 cornerback in the 2018 recruiting class and the No. 13 recruit in Iowa. After attending multiple camps the summer prior to his senior year, he received recruiting interest from several FCS-level programs. Moss initially committed to North Dakota State, but he grew up a Hawkeyes fan, attending games with his father. And when Iowa reached out during his senior year, Moss decided to decommit and sign with the Hawkeyes as a grayshirt. He enrolled in the summer of 2018 and paid his way until the fall semester, when he was put on full scholarship. His father (Mark) played football at NAIA-level Waldorf University. Moss took advantage of the extra year of eligibility because of the pandemic and returned for a fifth season at Iowa. He graduated with his degree in sports management (December 2021) and is enrolled in graduate classes. Moss accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl.

STRENGTHS: Talented turn-and-run skills from press coverage (posted elite 6.60 3-cone time) ... above-average foot speed and works hard to avoid being stacked downfield ... displays straight-line twitch to drive on throws in off coverage ... competitive downhill and shows up in the run game ... locates and achieves body position to tighten throwing windows ... his ball-attacking opportunities reflect his heightened awareness and studious habits (11 career interceptions) ... turns into an offensive playmaker post-interception (second in Iowa history in interception return yardage) ... always alert and doesn’t know how to play complacent ... senior captain and won the 2022 Team Hustle Award (on defense and special teams) ... 54 games played with 590 special teams snaps to his name.

WEAKNESSES: Lacks ideal length and functional strength ... savvy route runners can get him leaning mid-route ... late at times to open his hips and run with posts/corners ... leaves some production on the field when he doesn't pick up the ball quick enough out of turns ... guilty of hanging on receivers when he can't leverage the catch point ... aggressive tackler, but misses happen when he fails to break down and come to balance ... missed time after a partial dislocation in his hip (October 2019) and a torn PCL in his left knee as a junior (October 2021) ... inexperienced as an inside cornerback.

SUMMARY: A four-year starter at Iowa, Moss was the right outside cornerback in defensive coordinator Phil Parker's press-man and zone-match schemes. Only a two-star recruit, he was pushed into action as a true freshman and put together a strong five-year resume for the Hawkeyes, finishing top 10 in school history in career interceptions (11). Moss is a talented athlete who reads receivers hands/eyes to react without hesitation and challenge the catch point (one of three players in Iowa history with at least three pick sixes). Though he has natural cover instincts, he will lose his leverage at times versus sophisticated route runners, and NFL size will give him trouble on the perimeter. Overall, Moss needs to tighten up his footwork for smoother transitions, but he is a speedy and springy athlete who takes it personally when a completion is made on his watch. Some NFL scouts grade him as a safety, others as a true zone corner.

GRADE: 4th-5th Round

22. DARRELL LUTER JR. | South Alabama 5116 | 189 lbs. | 5SR Hattiesburg, Miss. (Oak Grove) 4/24/2000 (age 23.01) #18

BACKGROUND: Darrell (Duh-rell) Luter Jr. was born and raised in Hattiesburg and started playing pee-wee football at age 5. He played through middle school and did whatever he could to be around the game, even becoming the water boy at Oak Grove, where his older brothers played. When he reached high school, Luter enrolled at Oak Grove, where he became a starting cornerback as a sophomore. He moved to a hybrid nickel/linebacker role as a junior, posting 41 tackles, four passes defended and one interception. Luter moved to outside cornerback as a senior and finished with 53 tackles, five passes defended and one forced fumble. He also started two seasons on the basketball team and joined the track team as a senior at Oak Grove, setting personal bests in the 200 meters (23.68), long jump (20 feet 10 inches) and triple jump (43-3).

A no-star recruit, Luter wasn't ranked by the online recruiting services in the 2018 class and went widely overlooked while in high school. He had six teammates who signed with FBS programs, including quarterback John Rhys Plumlee (Ole Miss) and defensive lineman Jaden Crumedy (Mississippi State), but Luter received only three offers, all from juco programs. He signed with Pearl River Community College (40 miles south of Hattiesburg) and became a full-time starting cornerback as a sophomore in 2019, finishing with 19 tackles, nine passes defended and one interception. A three-star juco recruit, Luter was the No. 36 juco cornerback in the 2020 recruiting class. He received scholarship offers from Coastal Carolina, Houston and Southern Miss, but South Alabama showed the most interest. Luter married his wife in December 2020, and they welcomed their daughter (Neveah Brielle) in February 2023. He graduated with his degree (May 2022). Luter accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl.

PRO DAY	5117	187	32 5/8	10 1/4	79	-	-	-	40 1/2	-	4.38	-	- (stood on combine numbers)

STRENGTHS: Checks boxes for length and speed ... at his best in man-to-man and uses various press techniques based on the receiver ... looks to mix things up with his long arms, forcing the receiver to match his physicality ... shrewdly returns his eyes to the quarterback while staying hip-to-hip vertically with vertical route speed ... sorts quickly through route combinations and bunch sets ... explosive leaper to close jump-ball windows ... physical in run support with an excellent track record as a tackler ... already has a mature lifestyle, juggling his marriage and family with school and football ... high school and college coaches rave about him as both a person and leader ... solid ball skills and big hands only help his chances of disruption.

WEAKNESSES: Body type is a tad wiry, and there is room for additional bulk ... finds his feet drifting in routes, allowing quick-footed route runners to make swift stops and uncover ... lower body gets jumpy at times, and he declares his hips prematurely ... more comfortable in press-man than off coverage ... slight body leans at the top of routes in zone can hinder the redirect of his transitions ... strong tackler on tape, but strengthening his frame will help provide better finishing ability versus NFL ball carriers ... had a pair of personal foul penalties on the 2022 Central Michigan tape ... missed two games as a junior because of injury.

SUMMARY: A two-year starter at South Alabama, Luter lined up along the boundary in head coach Kane Wommack's man-heavy scheme. With only a few juco offers, he worked his way to the Jaguars' program and was one of the Sun Belt's top cover men as a junior and senior (22 passes defended in 23 starts the past two seasons). Luter uses his long arms and loose hips to alter the route runner's plan or make plays on the ball downfield without breaking phase. He shows a slight hitch in his transitions and can be run off the top of routes, especially when working from off coverage. Overall, Luter won't be an ideal fit for every scheme, but he is athletic, long and unfond of receivers who think the catch point belongs to them. He projects as a man-coverage NFL cornerback with the skill set to work inside or outside.

GRADE: 5th Round

23. KEI'TREL CLARK | Louisville 5102 | 181 lbs. | 4SR Richmond, Va. (Manchester) 3/19/2001 (age 22.11) #13

BACKGROUND: Kei'Trel Clark, who has two younger brothers, was born and raised in the Richmond area by his mother (Anelia Vaughn) and stepfather (Jordan Vaughn). He started playing football when he was 5 and was a standout player throughout youth football. Clark attended Manchester High School in Chesterfield County, where he was a four-year varsity letterman, primarily as a cornerback and wide receiver. He started to get noticed by college programs after his sophomore season, when he posted 38 tackles, three interceptions and a forced fumble. Clark had his best season as a senior and rarely came off the field, leading Manchester to a 15-0 record and 2018 6A state championship, the first title in school history. On defense, he finished with 26 tackles and five interceptions to earn second team All-

State honors. Clark took home first team All-State honors as a senior return specialist with five return touchdowns (four punts, one kickoff) and a 27.4 average on 21 punt returns. He also had 23 receptions for 429 yards and seven touchdowns on offense in 2018.

A no-star recruit, Clark wasn’t ranked by online recruiting services and didn’t receive much attention from Power 5 programs (Virginia Tech showed interest, but never offered). At the start of his senior year, he committed to Charlotte over Stony Brook, The Citadel and Virginia-Wise. However, Clark decommitted a few months later after more FBS schools entered the picture, and he signed with Liberty over Kent State, Marshall and West Virginia. After cracking the starting lineup as a true freshman, he entered the transfer portal because of the “cultural incompetence within multiple levels of leadership” at the school. Clark was noticed by Power 5 programs this time around and signed with Louisville over West Virginia. His petition to be immediately eligible for the 2020 season was granted by the NCAA. Clark opted out of the 2022 bowl game and accepted his invitation to the 2023 East-West Shrine Bowl.

PRO DAY	5104	182	30 1/4	8 5/8	72 5/8	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	15 (bench and position drills only — choice)

STRENGTHS: Fleet of foot and won’t lose many races ... has twitched-up athleticism to make lateral transitions and smoothly sink and redirect ... at his best in off coverage where he can anticipate, drive and close on routes ... sees the field well and sniffs out route combinations ... gets his head turned to locate and make plays in man coverage ... natural ball skills with the stab timing to force in completions ... considered a “high IQ” player, according to NFL scouts ... tougher than he looks and willing to fight through injuries (NFL scout: “Football is real important to him, I have no doubts about that.”) ... competes with a permanent chip on his shoulder (Clark: “I’ve been the underdog since I came out of the womb.”) ... four-year starter with experience in multiple systems, both inside and outside.

WEAKNESSES: Undersized across the board, lacking ideal height, build and arm length ... can be outmuscled by physical receivers and will have a tough time with size (see 2022 matchup versus Florida State’s Johnny Wilson) ... made steady progress but struggled with slot duties on the 2022 tape (first year playing inside) ... had a career-high in penalties as a senior, including four pass interference flags ... shows the athleticism to mirror, but mirror technique is still a work in progress ... needs to continue adding strength to be more reliable in run support and screen game ... was an All-State return specialist in high school, but had only two punt-return attempts in college and muffed one of them ... suffered a torn ACL in his left knee (October 2021), requiring season-ending surgery.

SUMMARY: A three-year starter at Louisville, Clark was an inside and outside cornerback in former defensive coordinator Bryan Brown’s balanced scheme. Coming back from his 2021 ACL injury, he had an uneven senior year (seven touchdowns allowed), with most of his struggles coming in the slot, a position he had never played before 2022. A twitchy and alert athlete, Clark is controlled in his movements to plant and drive on throws or play route breaks like a receiver. Though his lack of size shows versus larger targets and in run support, he competes his tail off with the smarts and mental toughness required in the job description. Overall, Clark won’t be for everyone because of his below-average length and play strength, but he flashes playmaking instincts with the cover skills to stay connected to NFL receivers. His development in the slot will be an important step to success at the next level.

GRADE: 5th Round

24. JAYLON JONES | Texas A&M

6021 | 200 lbs. | 3JR

Cibolo, Texas (Steele)

#17

BACKGROUND: Jaylon Jones was born in Jacksonville, Fla., into a military family. His father (Virgil), who is now retired, served in the Navy as a chief petty officer first class. His mother (Alisha) is also a Navy veteran. During his childhood, the family moved to Miami and then Japan. Midway through his third-grade year in 2010, the family returned to the states and relocated one final time to Cibolo, a northeast suburb of San Antonio. After arriving in Texas, Jones started playing youth football at age 8 and initially played center. He continued playing throughout elementary and middle school, lining up at quarterback, running back and linebacker. Jones enrolled at Byron P. Steele High School, a program that produced several college football and NFL players in recent years, including JT Woods (Los Angeles Chargers) and Caden Sterns (Denver Broncos). Jones moved to wide receiver as a freshman, where he played on the freshman and JV teams before a late call up to varsity. He moved to cornerback as a sophomore and became a varsity starter, posting 31 tackles (two for loss), two interceptions and one forced fumble. As a junior, Jones earned first team All-District honors with 36 tackles, seven passes defended and one forced fumble. He returned to receiver as a senior and played both ways. Jones earned 2019 District Defensive MVP and second team All-State honors with 34 tackles, four interceptions and two forced fumbles, adding 30 receptions for 549 yards and five touchdowns. He also lettered in track and was part of the 4x200 relay team that advanced to the 6A state championships in 2019. Jones set his personal best in the 200 meters (22.17) at the 2019 district championships.

A five-star recruit, Jones was the No. 1 safety in the 2020 recruiting class and the No. 2 recruit in Texas (one spot behind running back Zach Evans and one spot ahead of linebacker Drew Sanders). He was the No. 21 recruit nationally. Jones’ recruitment blew up following his first season on varsity, and he added offers from double-digit FBS programs like Baylor, Florida, Georgia, Ohio State, Texas A&M and Texas. Alabama and USC joined the mix later, but Jones was always drawn to College Station, and he committed to the Aggies at their junior day in February 2019. He was the highest-ranked recruit in head coach Jimbo Fisher’s 2020 class and enrolled in January. After three seasons, Jones elected to skip his senior season and enter the 2023 NFL Draft.

STRENGTHS: Physically imposing frame and matches up well outside the numbers in jump-ball situations ... able to mirror early stages from press-man to match the release ... pins receivers to the sideline with quality lean ... quick to recognize route indicators ... breaks smoothly on the football to throw his hands or body in front of passing lanes ... limited explosive plays in 2022 (allowed only one reception of 20-plus yards) ... strong hands as a tackler to get his man on the ground once he grips cloth ... uses length and strength to work off perimeter blocks ... played on punt return and punt coverage all three seasons ... has safety experience and is a potential fit at safety ... started 32 games in only three seasons in college.

WEAKNESSES: Average speed player ... fluid but not sudden in his coverage movements ... turns hips prematurely at the snap and allows too many layup completions in front of him ... needs to mature his sense of spacing in coverage ... wraps his arm around the hip of receivers for easy penalties ... flagged five times in 2022 (three pass interference penalties, one defensive holding, one targeting) ... late to trigger in the run game ... physical tackler but more of a hitter than sound wrap-up finisher, giving ball carriers a chance to escape ... wasn't used as a blitzer ... missed two games as a senior because of injury (September 2022) and was knocked out of another game with a head injury (October 2022).

SUMMARY: A three-year starter at Texas A&M, Jones was a boundary cornerback (a lot of Cover 1) in defensive coordinator DJ Durkin's match scheme. A former five-star recruit, he was thrown into the mix from the get-go, although his 2022 season didn't quite go as planned because of injuries and inconsistency (his best tapes are from the 2021 season). Jones passes the eye test off the bus, and he shows pedal-and-match skills to maintain phase early in the route. However, it is too easy for receivers to find blind spots in his coverage, and he will be an easy target for officials with his hands-on approach. Overall, Jones has the size, physicality and ball skills that will entice teams that put a premium on those traits, but he will be left struggling to recover versus NFL route runners until he becomes more refined. Several teams are scouting him as a safety.

GRADE: 5th Round

25. MEKHI BLACKMON | USC 5110 | 178 lbs. | 6SR East Palo Alto, Calif. (Menlo-Atherton) 3/18/1999 (age 24.11) #6

BACKGROUND: Mekhi (muh-kye) Blackmon, who is the oldest of seven children (four boys, three girls), was born in Hayward, Calif., and grew up in the bay area. He originally attended Saint Francis High School in Mountain View, Calif., before transferring to Menlo-Atherton High after his sophomore season. Because of transfer rules, Blackmon was forced to sit out his junior season at his new home. As a senior, he emerged as the top receiving target on offense and led Menlo-Atherton to a 12-3 record and the 2016 Division 3-AA state championship game (lost to Paraclete High). Blackmon finished his senior season with 23 receptions for 620 yards (27.0 average) and nine touchdowns, adding 54 tackles, 26 passes defended and six interceptions as a cornerback. He earned honorable mention All-Metro and All-Conference honors as a wide receiver. Blackmon also played basketball on the AAU circuit and at St. Francis but decided to go football-only his final two seasons at Menlo-Atherton.

A no-star recruit, Blackmon wasn't ranked by online recruiting services, and he went overlooked by Division I programs. He was a full academic qualifier, but missing his junior season because he transferred schools put him behind on the recruiting trail. Blackmon decided to go the juco route and signed with College of San Mateo as a cornerback. An offensively focused player most of his life, he transitioned to cornerback full-time in 2017, leading CSM to the winningest season (11-2) in school history. Blackmon finished his one season at the juco level with 20 tackles and one interception. A three-star juco recruit, he received interest from several West Coast schools, but Colorado was the first to offer, and Blackmon committed in June 2018. After four seasons with the Buffs, he took advantage of the extra year of eligibility because of the pandemic and entered the transfer portal for his sixth season. Blackmon considered offers from Cal and Utah before deciding to join Lincoln Riley in his first season at USC. He graduated with his degree in strategic communication (December 2021) from Colorado and is pursuing his master's degree in gerontology at USC. His cousin (KeeSean Johnson) was a sixth-round wide receiver (No. 174) in the 2019 NFL Draft out of Fresno State, playing two seasons with the Arizona Cardinals before bouncing around several practice squads. Blackmon accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl.

PRO DAY	5110	182	31 3/4	9 3/8	74 5/8	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	(no shuttle or 3-cone — choice)

STRENGTHS: Adequate speed athlete and tends to play bigger than he appears ... instinctive and fluid in his coverage transitions ... shows the press strength to disrupt receivers early and late ... understands field leverage and uses the sideline to his advantage ... shows an instinctive ability to disrupt the catch point and is always raking for the football ... started to show more trust in his downfield body positioning deeper into the 2022 season ... above-average run defender ... settles his feet and comes to balance to wrap and drive the ball carrier ... doesn't get bored, and receivers know they're in for a dogfight ... quickly endeared himself to USC coaches (Riley: "We like him matched up against anybody.").

WEAKNESSES: Weighed less than 180 pounds at the combine ... not a technically sound corner ... turns his hips too early and can be driven off the top of routes ... gives up too many slants and quick inside wins to receivers because he doesn't seem to trust his pedal-and-drive mechanics ... grabby at the catch point and draws flags with his late panic (penalized five times for pass interference in 2022) ... average size will show up against tight ends or larger receivers ... was banged up over his career and played in double-digit games only once (2022) in five FBS seasons; missed most of 2019 because of season-ending shoulder surgery ... will be 24 years old on draft weekend.

SUMMARY: A one-year starter at USC, Blackmon was the left outside cornerback in defensive coordinator Alex Grinch’s man-heavy scheme. After four solid seasons at Colorado, he transferred and was one of the few bright spots on the Trojans’ 2022 defense, leading the Pac-12 in passes defended (15). A fluid athlete with average size, Blackmon has seen a lot of football, and it shows with his anticipation and confidence to be disruptive in coverage (allowed only one reception of 20-plus yards on 63 targets in 2022). Though he tends to play too physically, NFL coaches will appreciate his mental and competitive toughness at the position, especially in the run game. Overall, Blackmon will sacrifice coverage phase and attract flags when he doesn’t trust his technique, but he is instinctive and aggressive playing the ball in the air. He projects best on the perimeter with man-to-man responsibilities.

26. NIC JONES | Ball State 5117 | 189 lbs. | 4SR Detroit, Mich. (Southfield A&T) 10/15/2001 (age 21.53) #1

BACKGROUND: Nicholas “Nic” Jones, who is one of eight children (six boys, two girls), grew up in Detroit and attended Bates Academy, where his mother (Natelege Sims) is a third-grade teacher. Tagging along with his older brother, he started playing football at age 5 at the Pop Warner level. Jones attended Southfield High School for the Arts and Technology, where he played on the freshman team in his first year and JV team as a sophomore. Primarily a wide receiver, he added cornerback duties on varsity for his final two seasons and didn’t become a starter until halfway through his junior year. As a senior, he earned second team All-League honors with three interceptions and three forced fumbles in 2018. Jones also lettered in track and set personal bests in the 100 meters (12.74) and 200 meters (22.91).

A three-star recruit, Jones was the No. 157 cornerback in the 2019 recruiting class and the No. 40 recruit in Michigan. The April before his senior season, he received his first scholarship offer from Ball State followed by offers from Akron and Western Michigan. Jones took several visits to East Lansing and had talks with the Michigan State staff, but those MAC schools were his only three FBS offers. He signed with Ball State and was the third-highest ranked recruit in the school’s 2019 class. Young for his class, he joined the Ball State football team at only 17. Jones accepted his invitation to the 2023 East-West Shrine Bowl.

STRENGTHS: Puts his long arms to good use in press-man and looks to disrupt route timing from the get-go ... has a patient, balanced transition process and keeps his footwork and upper body in sync ... showed improved comfort level in his look-and-lean technique to find the football ... coachable and displays a feel for route development ... balances his sight lines to pass off and stay alert in zone ... above average ball production as a senior, leading the team in passes defended ... was a regular on kick return and punt return coverages, including two blocked punts in his career ... young for a four-year college prospect (enrolled at 17) and still has upside as he develops ... experienced inside and outside.

WEAKNESSES: Slender frame with a thin bone structure and light muscle tone ... underwhelming play strength, and his bark is worse than his bite ... will turn his hips prematurely in the route and can be crossed up ... can get a tad leggy when attempting to match sudden route breaks ... has a bad habit of using his hands to feel for positioning, creating unneeded contact with receivers ... flagged four times in 2022 (three pass interference penalties, one defensive holding call) ... doesn’t deliver any type of pop as a tackler and allows ball carriers to escape his grasp (only 64 tackles in 37 career games in college) ... needs more time in the weight room to develop his body (single-digit reps in the bench press) ... missed a total of 10 games the past three seasons, including the second half of his junior year because of knee injury (October 2021).

SUMMARY: A two-year starter at Ball State, Jones played inside and outside cornerback in defensive coordinator Tyler Stockton’s balanced scheme. After missing the second half of 2021 because of injury, he had his best season as a senior and finished as one of only three MAC players to reach 14 passes defended in 2022. Jones shows better play speed than timed speed and stays balanced in his transitions to find the football. He is still young in areas (didn’t become a full-time starter in high school until his senior year) and needs to get stronger and less handsy for NFL competition. Overall, Jones needs to continue adding bulk and developing his awareness, but he plays quick, long and controlled with a natural feel for crowding receivers early and late. He projects as a draft-and-develop press corner.

GRADE: 5th-6th Round

27. STARLING THOMAS V | UAB 5101 | 190 lbs. | 5SR Birmingham, Ala. (Ramsay) 1/25/2000 (age 23.26) #4

BACKGROUND: Starling “Star” Thomas V, who is one of three children, grew up in Birmingham with his mother (Stephanie Williams). She was diagnosed with cancer in 2017 and passed away a year later in October 2018. Thomas enrolled at Ramsay High School and was a four-year letterman on varsity, playing both ways as a wide receiver and cornerback. As a junior, he helped Ramsay to a 14-2 record and the 2016 state championship (first Birmingham school to win a football state title since 1974), although he missed the final few games after tearing his ACL in the playoffs. Thomas returned for his senior season and finished 2017 with 24 tackles and one interception. He was an accomplished sprinter on the track team at Ramsay, winning the 2018 state championship in the 100 meters (10.57) and 200 meters (21.33). He also won the state title in the 400 meters (48.36) as a sophomore.

A three-star recruit, Thomas was the No. 146 cornerback in the 2018 recruiting class and the No. 53 recruit in Alabama. His ACL tear late in his junior season hurt his recruitment, but he was still heavily courted by several FBS teams. Thomas didn’t plan on staying close to home for college (UAB’s campus is less than a mile from Ramsay High School) and he entertained offers from Florida Atlantic, Georgia State, Memphis, Purdue and Tulane. But he ultimately committed to UAB, which turned out to be a blessing because it allowed him to be nearby after his mother was diagnosed. Thomas graduated with his degree in criminal justice (December 2022). He accepted his invitation to the 2023 East-West Shrine Bowl.

STRENGTHS: Elite long speed and easily makes up ground with his acceleration ... quick in short areas for press-man and off-man coverages ... fluid lower-body skills and shows burst in his movements ... anticipates route paths ... always around the football to crowd the catch point (25 passes defended in 26 games the last two seasons) ... well-conditioned with trimmed bulk on his smaller frame ... quick to support the run with above-average tackling skills for a player his size ... toughness is unquestioned after he played the final seven games in 2019 with a torn ACL in his right knee (missed the 2020 season to recover) ... offers return experience on punts (7.6 average) and kicks (16.0).

WEAKNESSES: Needs to keep his weight on the balls of his feet to stay attached versus shifty route runners ... lack of ideal height and length shows against larger receivers, at the line and downfield ... allows interception opportunities to come and go, and needs to find better body positioning ... tends to get frenetic downfield when attempting to find the football, leading to early contact and penalties ... accounted for 22 penalties the past three seasons, including five pass interference flags and one defensive holding in 2022 ... suffered a torn ACL in his right knee (November 2016) as a junior in high school; tore the ACL in the same knee at UAB (October 2019) and underwent offseason surgery, missing the entire 2020 season.

SUMMARY: A three-year starter at UAB, Thomas was an outside cornerback in former defensive coordinator David Reeves’ balanced scheme. A Birmingham native, his college career was disrupted by an ACL injury, but he returned to lead the Blazers in passes defended his junior and senior seasons. Thomas displays the explosive acceleration and fluid movement skills desired at the position in the NFL. He gets his hands on plenty of footballs but needs to turn more of those breakups into interceptions and dial back his leaning mid-route, which allows receivers to become unglued at break points. Overall, Thomas lacks ideal height/length and needs to add more discipline to his scrappy style, but he has high-level speed and twitchy cover skills with the toughness to match. He has the skill set to play both outside and at the nickel.

GRADE: 5th-6th Round

28. CARRINGTON VALENTINE | Kentucky 5115 | 193 lbs. | 3JR Cincinnati, Ohio (Moeller) 9/9/2001 (age 21.63) #14

BACKGROUND: Carrington Valentine, who is the youngest of four children, was born and raised in Cincinnati and grew up a Bengals fan. He enrolled at Archbishop Moeller High School, a private all-boys school in Cincinnati that has produced numerous professional athletes like Ken Griffey Jr. and Sam Hubbard. Valentine saw his first varsity reps as a sophomore wide receiver and return man (nine catches for 150 yards and a touchdown). He became a two-way player as a junior and notched his first interception as a cornerback to earn second team All-League honors, adding five catches for 83 yards on offense. As a senior, he finished with 32 tackles and five passes defended to earn first team All-Area honors. Valentine was also a standout on special teams over his prep career with a 31.7 kick-return average with two touchdowns as well as a pair of blocked kicks. He was also a standout basketball player at Moeller and helped lead the team to the 2019 state championship.

A three-star recruit, Valentine was the No. 91 cornerback in the 2020 recruiting class and the No. 39 recruit in Ohio. After he moved to cornerback as a junior, the offers started pouring in, including several Big Ten programs (Indiana, Minnesota, Purdue, Rutgers). He considered his hometown Bearcats before committing to Kentucky over Michigan State and Pittsburgh. He comes from a family of athletes: his older sister (Rahshala) played women’s basketball at UMass Lowell (2009-13); his older brother (Jerrick) played college soccer at Bellarmine (2013-16). Valentine opted out of the 2022 bowl game and skipped his senior year to enter the 2023 NFL Draft.

STRENGTHS: Adequate frame, but better arm length ... aggressive at the snap and looks to make receivers uncomfortable (didn’t play a ton of press-man but looked comfortable doing it) ... stays square and opens up to run and match the stride of receivers ... sees routes develop from off coverage ... reacts with strong drive mechanics to close space in zone ... eager to jump slant routes ... very competitive and takes it personally when a completion happens on his watch ... innately driven, and NFL defensive coaches will love his play personality ... led the team in passes defended in 2022 ... was a regular on kick coverage, punt coverage and punt return teams as a junior in 2022.

WEAKNESSES: Thinly built corner with marginal bulk ... plays physical but not always strong/stout, and receivers will be able to power through him ... managed only one interception in college — and it came against an FCS opponent (Youngstown State) ... inconsistent highpointing the football ... tends to lose his composure and get grabby, especially with his back to the football ... tends to get upright and leggy in his breaks, leaving him trying to recover ... needs to improve the placement of his jam hands ... must make adjustments to his tackling approach to be more consistent in the run game.

SUMMARY: A two-year starter at Kentucky, Valentine was the boundary cornerback in defensive coordinator Brad White's zone-heavy scheme. Still relatively new to the position after moving to corner as a junior in high school, his 2022 tape was a tad volatile, with plenty of flashes mixed in with some mistake-filled games. Valentine has an enticing blend of physical tools and physicality that fits the mold of what NFL teams want at the position. But he will lose route phase/positioning because of his lack of refinement (allowed eight completions of 25-plus yards in 2022), and his one career interception is a troubling stat. Overall, Valentine is long, aggressive and athletic and has yet to reach his ceiling as a cover man, but his ball instincts and technique are underdeveloped, making his draft grade much more of a projection than others. He projects best as a long-limbed press corner.

GRADE: 6th Round

29. ALEX AUSTIN | Oregon State 6010 | 195 lbs. | 4JR Long Beach, Calif. (Poly) 5/22/2001 (age 21.93) #5

BACKGROUND: Alex Austin, who is oldest of two boys, was born and raised in Uptown Long Beach, where his father (Al) represents the Eighth District on the City Council and his mother (Daysha) is the district director for an assembly member. Austin attended Long Beach Polytechnic High School, a program that has produced 50-plus NFL players, including DeSean Jackson and JuJu Smith-Schuster. He was a three-year varsity letterman as a wide receiver and cornerback and became a full-time starter as a junior. Austin helped Long Beach Poly to an 8-3 record and 2018 league title as a senior, earning first team All-League at both cornerback and wide receiver. He finished his final season with 31 tackles and 13 passes defended, adding 13 receptions for 252 yards (22.9 average) and four touchdowns (also returned kicks and punts). Austin also lettered in track as a sprinter in the 100 meters and 200 meters.

A three-star recruit, Austin was the No. 172 cornerback in the 2019 recruiting class and the No. 169 recruit in California. After he became a starter as a junior, he received his first scholarship offers the summer before his senior year, including Colorado State, Hawaii, New Mexico, San Jose State, Utah State and Wyoming. In July 2018, Austin received his first (and only) Power 5 offer from Oregon State, and he committed soon after. His younger brother (Daylen) was a four-star cornerback recruit in the 2023 class and signed with Oregon over Alabama, LSU and dozens of other offers. Austin elected to skip his senior season of eligibility and declare for the 2023 NFL Draft.

STRENGTHS: Above average height/length blend ... stays balanced in his transitions to shadow and avoid panicked movements ... brings physicality to the route both early and late ... shows just enough speed to get by ... receiving background shows at the catch point with his ability to crowd and adjust to throws ... soft-handed with natural coordination ... strong ball production with 21 passes defended over the past two seasons ... eyes stay dialed in to work through routes ... plays with competitive urgency in the run game ... dependable and started 30 of 33 games the past three seasons.

WEAKNESSES: Not an explosive athlete ... upright in his backpedal and often caught on his heels ... needs to anticipate route breaks a half-tick sooner to compensate for average footwork and closing burst ... aggressive mentality often backfires (credited with 13 total penalties over the last two seasons) ... needs to continue adding strength ... blocking magnet and struggles to free himself once locked up with perimeter receivers ... inconsistent technique and finishing skills leads to missed tackles versus the run ... allows himself to be stiff-armed or big-boiled by physical ball carriers ... wasn't a regular on kick or punt special teams coverages.

SUMMARY: A three-year starter at Oregon State, Austin was the right outside cornerback in defensive coordinator Trent Bray's multiple scheme (press, off-man and zone). He became a starter as a redshirt freshman and showed gradual improvements over the last three seasons (one of only a handful of Pac-12 defenders with 12-plus passes defended in 2022). Austin is zone-aware and balanced in his transitions, trusting his eyes to lead him to the football. However, he gets upright in his coverage movements, which affects his ability to gather, click and close, and he must become more reliable shedding blocks and finishing tackles. Overall, Austin is a heady cover man and uses length to never stray too far from the route, but he is an average-twitch mover and lacks the explosiveness to easily make up false steps. He projects best in a predominantly zone scheme where he can work in short areas.

GRADE: 6th Round

30. ELI RICKS | Alabama 6020 | 188 lbs. | 3JR Rancho Cucamonga, Calif. (IMG Academy) 9/26/2001 (age 21.59) #7

BACKGROUND: Elias "Eli" Ricks, who has a younger brother, grew up in Rancho Cucamonga with his parents (Terence and Shauna) and started playing basketball and karate at age 6. He picked up youth football at 7, and it soon became his passion. Ricks played multiple positions growing up but usually gravitated toward wide receiver and soon started training for football year-round, working with former NFL coach Charles Collins. He enrolled at Mater Dei High School, a private Catholic school in Santa Ana, where he moved full-time to cornerback and was teammates with several high-profile recruits like Amon-Ra St. Brown and Bryce Young. Over his sophomore and junior seasons, Ricks combined for nine interceptions, six returned for touchdowns (three of those pick sixes came in the same game). He helped lead Mater Dei to back-to-back state championships in 2017 and 2018, combining for a 29-1 record over that span. For his senior season, Ricks transferred to IMG Academy in Bradenton, Fla., in order to graduate high school early. He finished with 14 tackles and three interceptions in 2019, leading IMG to a 9-1 record.

A five-star recruit, Ricks was the No. 2 cornerback in the 2020 recruiting class (behind Kelee Ringo) and the No. 2 recruit in California (behind Young). He was the No. 14 recruit nationally. Ricks put himself on the recruiting radar as a high school freshman and held offers from Nebraska, Oregon, UCLA and Utah before his sophomore season started. He went on visits to Michigan, Notre Dame, Ohio State and several others before committing to LSU after his junior season. Ricks had a long-standing relationship with Ed Orgeron after meeting him in middle school at a USC camp when Orgeron was a Trojans assistant. He was one of three five-star recruits in LSU's 2020 class, along with Arik Gilbert and Kayshon Boutte. After two seasons with the Tigers, Ricks decided to transfer and spent the 2022 season at Alabama. His younger brother (Desmond) attended IMG Academy and was a five-star recruit in the 2023 class, recently signing and enrolling at Alabama. Ricks elected to skip his senior season and enter the 2023 NFL Draft.

STRENGTHS: Checks boxes with his height and length ... prefers to crowd receivers with an aggressive jam, which leads into his physical outside phase ... closes well with linear burst from off coverage to break on the football ... looks more like a wide receiver with 50/50 balls ... recorded eight interception returns for touchdowns between high school and college, earning the nickname “pick six Ricks” ... doesn’t lack for confidence and matches the physicality of bigger receivers ... sets a hard edge in the run game and shows physicality as a tackler (when he wants to) ... has been groomed for football since he was young and has been training year-round since elementary school.

WEAKNESSES: Thinly-built corner with stringy muscle tone ... rigid mover with poor change of direction ... lower-body technique is all over the place ... doesn’t have the long speed to recover once receivers gain a step on him vertically ... left grabbing for cloth in coverage (four pass interference penalties in 2022) ... lack of finishing strength results in missed tackles (only 44 career tackles) ... minimal special teams experience outside of field goal block coverage ... arrested and charged with speeding (91 MPH in a 70 MPH zone), no proof of insurance and misdemeanor marijuana possession (May 2022) ... durability is a bright red flag with a history of shoulder issues: played his senior year of high school with a torn labrum in his left shoulder, which required surgery after the last game (November 2019); suffered another torn labrum that sidelined him for most of LSU’s 2021 season and required season-ending surgery (October 2021); also battled a back injury (August 2022) and concussion/head injury (November 2022).

SUMMARY: A part-time starter in his one season at Alabama, Ricks was a perimeter cornerback in head coach Nick Saban’s scheme. After two seasons in Baton Rouge, he was tardy acclimating himself to “The Process” culture at Alabama and struggled to stay off the injury report in Tuscaloosa. He has several desirable traits for the position with his length, physicality and ball skills. However, he is a frenetic, tightly-wound athlete, and his turn and run lacks explosion, which might make it tough to consistently keep up with NFL receivers. Overall, Ricks put himself on the NFL radar with an All-American freshman year at LSU, but that might have been his peak because his tape the past two seasons shows a stiff, undisciplined player with question marks. His best chance in the NFL will come in a press-heavy scheme.

31. ARQUON BUSH | Cincinnati 5117 | 187 lbs. | 5SR Cleveland, Ohio (Euclid) 5/10/2000 (age 22.96) #9

BACKGROUND: Arquon (R-Qwon) Bush was born and raised in Cleveland and started playing football at age 6. He attended Euclid High School and was a three-year letterman, playing both ways as a wide receiver and defensive back. As a junior, Bush helped Euclid to a seven-win season in 2016 and was responsible for five punt-return touchdowns, adding 52 tackles, 13 passes defended and five interceptions to earn first team All-State and All-Area honors. As a senior, he led Euclid to a 9-3 record and a playoff run that ended with a loss to St. Ignatius. Bush finished his final season with 17 tackles, 10 passes defended, two forced fumbles and one interception, which earned him second team All-District. He also had 160 receiving yards and two touchdown catches on offense. He lettered in track at Euclid and set personal bests in the 60 meters (7.03), 100 meters (11.10), 200 meters (22.77) and long jump (17 feet 1.5 inches).

A three-star recruit, Bush was the No. 66 cornerback in the 2018 recruiting class and the No. 27 recruit in Ohio. After his junior season, he picked up offers from SEC (Kentucky) and Big Ten (Purdue, Rutgers) programs. His final choice came down to Cincinnati and Michigan State, and he chose the Bearcats because it “felt like family.” He was the sixth-highest recruit in Luke Fickell’s 2018 class (behind tight ends Leonard Taylor and Josh Whyle). Bush graduated with his degree in criminal justice. He accepted his invitation to the 2023 East-West Shrine Bowl.

PRO DAY	5117	189	29 7/8	9 1/4	72 1/4	-	-	-	-	-	4.45	7.32	11 (stood on combine runs and jumps)

STRENGTHS: Swift strider who covers a lot of ground with his foot speed ... patient lower body to stay on top of routes while balancing his eyes between the route and the quarterback ... smooth turning and running, and stays balanced in his steps for quick adjustments ... confident ball skills, expertly using his hands/reach to swat the catch point (didn’t attract many flags on his 2022 tape) ... ball production is what you would hope to see for a defensive back with 49 games played ... flashes closing burst when in his gather-and-go to drive on plays in front of him ... played many snaps both inside as a nickel and outside as the field corner ... played on kick coverage and punt coverage on special teams and blocked two field goals in 2021.

WEAKNESSES: Falls below several size benchmarks for some schemes ... can be posted up versus larger receivers or outmuscled mid-route ... strength doesn’t often match his intentions ... willing tackler, but not consistent in this area — shows great angle, drive and finish on one play, and then his technique falls apart and he misses the next play ... will guess wrong at times in coverage and find himself out of position (see 2022 Tulane tape) ... retreats early and gives up quick completions in front of him ... battled through a turf toe injury that plagued him during his time at Cincinnati.

SUMMARY: A four-year starter at Cincinnati, Bush moved to the field cornerback position as a senior in defensive coordinator Mike Tressel’s balanced scheme. He was primarily a nickel corner as an underclassman, playing in the shadow of Sauce Gardner and Coby Bryant, before moving outside in 2022. Although he tends to play a tad conservative, which will negate his top-end speed, Bush does a nice job finding passing lanes with his eyes and balanced movements. He had several bright spots on his 2022 tape (see matchup versus SMU’s Rashee Rice) and some low points as he adjusted to the outside, but his tackling must improve for him to hold up on the inside. Overall, Bush isn’t on the same level as a pro prospect as Gardner and Bryant, but speed and ball skills are critical at the cornerback position, and he checks those boxes. His experience in the nickel only helps his chances of securing a role on an NFL roster.

GRADE: 6th-7th Round

32. MYLES BROOKS | Louisiana Tech 6006 | 201 lbs. | 4SR Pflugerville, Texas (Hendrickson) 1/12/2001 (age 22.29) #13

BACKGROUND: Myles Brooks, who has an older brother (Jaylon), was born in Austell, Ga., and grew up outside of Austin in Pflugerville. He was a basketball-focused athlete most of his life until he enrolled at Hendrickson High School and realized the NBA probably wasn’t a realistic goal. Brooks made the switch to football as a freshman and joined the varsity team as a sophomore safety. He played more cornerback as a junior and earned All-District honors, leading Hendrickson to a 10-win season and the fourth round of the state playoffs. As a senior, Brook again earned All-District honors in 2018. He also lettered all four seasons for the Hendrickson basketball team.

A three-star recruit, Brooks was the No. 51 safety in the 2019 recruiting class and the No. 82 recruit in Texas. After his junior season, he received offers from Louisiana Tech, Texas State and Baylor, committing to Matt Rhule’s Bears in May 2018. However, he decommitted a month later and narrowed his choice to Arkansas, Ole Miss and SMU. He visited Fayetteville and committed to Arkansas in July 2018. A week before signing day, Brooks and Arkansas “mutually” agreed to part ways, and he ended up signing with FCS-level Stephen F. Austin. After three seasons with the Lumberjacks, Brooks entered the transfer portal in January 2022 and signed with Louisiana Tech (over Colorado State) for his senior season (had three tackles and a forced fumble against his former team in 2022). He accepted his invitation to the 2023 East-West Shrine Bowl.

STRENGTHS: Good-sized athlete with functional arm length and play strength ... has a patient, yet bouncy process from press to stay on top of routes ... extends to maintain phase and play off contact ... disciplined spatial balance with zone concepts ... uses his size and ball skills to instinctively attack the catch point like a wide receiver, capitalizing on interception opportunities (nine career picks) ... consistently finds the ball and high-points ... will fire downhill and shows some urgency as a run defender ... has safety experience and the skills for more responsibilities on special teams.

WEAKNESSES: Worst game of the 2022 season came versus the best opponent on the schedule (Clemson) ... speed and athletic traits are closer to average than above average ... feet can get jittery, which delays his gather, plant and drive mechanics ... gets high with his pedal, which creates jerky transitions ... has a tough time recovering once he finds himself behind ... below-average finishing skills as a tackler, often throwing his body around and hoping for the best ... undisciplined penalties were much too common on his tape (flagged five times in 2022, including a personal foul, unnecessary roughness and unsportsmanlike conduct) ... will need time to develop his body ... NFL scouts say he needs to stay “dialed in” to make it at the pro level.

SUMMARY: A one-year starter at Louisiana Tech, Brooks was the field cornerback in defensive coordinator Scott Power’s scheme (he also played for Powers at Stephen F. Austin). Despite only one season at the FBS level, he had his best college season as a senior in 2022, including a career-high 12 passes defended (outside of the Clemson game, he didn’t allow a catch longer than 16 yards in 2022). Brooks shows a natural feel in multiple coverages and is always peeking for the football. The undisciplined mistakes and misses in the run game must improve for him to earn the trust of an NFL coaching staff. Overall, Brooks doesn’t have high-level athletic traits and needs to become more buttoned up for the pro game, but his anticipation and ball skills should translate well. He projects best as a press-man cornerback at the next level.

33. MEKHI GARNER | LSU 6020 | 212 lbs. | 5SR Mesquite, Texas (Poteet) 1/11/2000 (age 23.29) #2

BACKGROUND: Mekhi Garner, who is one of two boys, was born and raised in the Dallas-Fort Worth Metroplex. He attended Poteet High School as a two-way player at wide receiver at safety. As a junior, Garner recorded 39 tackles, six passes defended, two interceptions and a forced fumble, helping the team to 11 wins in 2016. As a senior, he accounted for 65 tackles (three for loss), two interceptions and two forced fumbles, earning All-Conference honors. Garner also lettered in track and set personal bests in the 200 meters (24.28), 400 meters (56.24), triple jump (41 feet 3 inches) and long jump (18-3.25).

A three-star recruit, Garner was the No. 126 safety in the 2018 recruiting class and the No. 240 recruit in Texas. After his junior season, he picked up offers from Air Force, Utah State and Texas Tech and committed to Kliff Kingsbury and the Red Raiders in June 2017. However, Garner decommitted a week before signing day and instead enrolled at Navarro College in Corsicana, Texas. After one season at the juco level, he received an offer from Louisiana-Lafayette and enrolled during the summer of 2019. After three seasons with the Ragin’ Cajuns, Garner entered the transfer portal and committed to LSU for the 2022 season. He opted out of the 2022 bowl game and accepted his invitation to the 2023 East-West Shrine Bowl.

STRENGTHS: Above-average body and arm length ... shows enough fluidity to turn and run while staying attached to the receiver ... shifts his weight smoothly to not overcommit himself (see his goal line coverage on 2022 Georgia tape) ... smothers receivers with his play strength and big hands ... doesn't concede a size advantage when tasked with jump-ball situations ... locates the ball well when he turns his head downfield ... has the requisite toughness to attack blockers and be a factor in the run game ... quickly established himself as a leader in the LSU secondary (head coach Brian Kelly: "He's a great teammate. ... I can't say enough good things about the way he works every day.").

WEAKNESSES: Pedestrian speed with below-average short-area quickness ... has little chance versus shifty route runners in man coverage if he doesn't make initial contact ... upright, heavy footwork in reverse, and his comfort level is to have the play in his face ... often late to gather, plant and drive from off coverage ... allowed four touchdown grabs compared to zero interceptions over his junior and senior seasons ... must improve his tackling mechanics, often allowing extra yards as he tries to ground the ball carrier.

SUMMARY: A one-year starter at LSU, Garner was an outside cornerback in defensive coordinator Matt House's balanced scheme. After proving himself in the Sun Belt Conference, he made the jump to the SEC for his final season and played well for the Tigers in 2022, even if splash plays were tough to find. Garner is a towering, linear athlete with explosiveness in his lower body and the length to clobber receivers and win the catch point. Though he is controlled in his movements, he doesn't have any suddenness in his direction changes and will struggle with man-to-man responsibilities. Overall, Garner is a big, physical corner built to match up with size at the next level, although NFL speed will shine a light on his lagging transitions and marginal recovery speed. His best chance at finding an NFL home will be as a zone corner.

GRADE: 7th Round

34. CAMERON BROWN | Ohio State 6000 | 199 lbs. | SSR St. Louis, Mo. (Christian Brothers) 4/6/2000 (age 23.06) #26

BACKGROUND: Cameron "Cam" Brown attended Christian Brothers College High School, where he was teammates (and best friends) with wide receiver Kamryn Babb, one of the top wide receiver recruits in the 2018 class. A three-year letterman, Brown played wide receiver and cornerback and finished his junior season with 1,023 receiving yards and 11 touchdowns, along with four interceptions on defense. As a senior, he helped Christian Brothers to a 13-1 record and 2017 conference and state championships, although he didn't play in the title game because of injury. Brown finished his final season with 58 receptions for 934 yards and 13 touchdowns, earning unanimous first team All-State honors. He was also a standout track athlete and, along with Babb, captured the 2017 state championship in the 4x100-meter relay (41.68). Brown placed second in the state in the 100 meters (10.76) and set personal bests in the 200 meters (22.83), high jump (5 feet 10 inches) and long jump (20-1).

A four-star recruit, Brown was the No. 54 wide receiver in the 2018 recruiting class and the No. 6 recruit in Missouri (defensive end Ronnie Perkins was No. 1, and Babb was No. 3). Although he initially committed to Nebraska in May 2017, he backtracked and reopened his recruitment a month later following a visit and offer from Ohio State. Brown announced a final five of Alabama, Georgia, Missouri, Nebraska and Ohio State and recommitted to the Cornhuskers in August 2017. However, he again had a change of heart on signing day, when he flipped to the Buckeyes in December 2017 and joined Babb as part of Ohio State's 2018 class. The Buckeyes signed three wide receivers in the class with four-stars Babb and Brown and a little-known three-star Chris Olave. However, Brown moved to cornerback during his first season in Columbus and stayed on defense over his five seasons in college. He graduated with his degree in human development and family sciences (May 2022). Brown accepted his invitation to the 2023 East-West Shrine Bowl.

STRENGTHS: Quality frame with growth potential ... flashes twitch in his lower body with smooth acceleration early and late ... adequate collect-and-go technique to drive on throws in front of him ... coverage aware, as former wideout who understands route tells and tendencies ... nice job sinking and scanning in short zone ... uses willing hands to disrupt timing at the infancy of the route ... needs to be a better finisher, but finds himself in the vicinity of the catch point ... has the vertical leaping skills to defend jump balls when in position ... rangy run defender ... was a core special teamer as a sophomore ... has experience both outside and in the slot.

WEAKNESSES: Plays upright and tightly wound, which gets him behind the eight ball early versus shifty receivers ... gets handsy when attempting to recover (pass interference and holding flag on 2022 Michigan State tape) ... tracks the football well, but very inconsistent with his timing and finish downfield ... struggles to play through contact ... uneven run defender and plays passive and unsure of his tackling form ... career went sideways because of multiple injuries, including a torn left Achilles tendon (October 2020) that required season-ending surgery; missed two games as a junior (September 2021) because of a right knee injury; missed five games (and parts of others) as a senior because of a knee injury (September 2022) ... Brown at the combine: "My MRIs turned out great. All my injuries turned out great."

SUMMARY: A three-year starter at Ohio State, Brown was an outside cornerback in defensive coordinator Jim Knowles’ man-heavy scheme. A former wide receiver recruit, he switched to cornerback in his first year in Columbus and had impressive flashes, although injuries took a bite out of his career. Brown uses his offensive background to fuel an instinctive feel for route movements and tracking the football downfield. However, he doesn’t have the athletic finishing skills to consistently make plays at the catch point (only one interception) and will be frequently bettered by NFL receivers. Overall, Brown has optimistic moments on tape where his traits and instincts take over, but the inconsistent moments and missed plays were the lasting impression. He will need to stay healthy during camp to convince an NFL team he is worth a spot on the roster or practice squad.

35. D’SHAWN JAMISON | Texas 5092 | 184 lbs. | 5SR Houston, Texas (Lamar) 6/4/1999 (age 23.90) #5

BACKGROUND: D’Shawn Jamison was born and raised in New Orleans until he was 6, when his family was displaced because of Hurricane Katrina. They relocated to Pasadena, Texas (just outside of Houston), where Jamison started playing football at age 7 for the North Houston Broncos at the Pop Warner level. He saw time on defense but spent most of his childhood at quarterback and running back. Jamison enrolled at Lamar High School, where he was a three-year letterman and moved full-time to defensive back. After spending his first year on the freshman team, he made varsity as a sophomore and earned honorable mention All-District honors. As a junior, Jamison helped Lamar to an 11-2 record and was named second team All-District. As a senior, he finished with 30 tackles, eight passes defended, three interceptions (one returned for a touchdown) and one forced fumble to earn first team All-District honors. However, Jamison did his best work as a return man and earned All-State honors as a senior with five return touchdowns (four kick returns, one punt return). He also lettered in track at Lamar and set personal bests in the 100 meters (11.30), 200 meters (21.97) and 400 meters (49.97).

A four-star recruit, Jamison was the No. 15 cornerback in the 2018 recruiting class and the No. 12 recruit in Texas. After his sophomore season, he received his first offers from Florida, Houston, TCU and Utah. After his junior year, Baylor, Michigan, Penn State, Tennessee, Texas and USC offered and ramped up his recruitment. Jamison came close to verbalizing to Oregon but kept his options open and committed to Texas midway through his senior season. He signed with the Longhorns along with Anthony Cook, his cornerback teammate at Lamar. Despite signing as a defensive back, Jamison was moved to wide receiver, a position he had never played before, as a freshman. He moved back to defense for his final four seasons with the Longhorns. Jamison took advantage of the extra year of eligibility because of the pandemic and returned to Austin for his fifth season. His father (Michael) served in the Army for 16 years and was deployed to Iraq multiple times. His mother (Shantrelle) was a high school sprinter. Jamison accepted his invitation to the 2023 East-West Shrine Bowl.

STRENGTHS: Loose, agile and athletic at all levels of the field ... mirrors well from release to whistle and doesn’t give receivers an easy rep ... jam is well-timed to get his hands on receivers early ... plays through the hands of receivers when in position ... angles his inside hip to extend his reach to the catch point ... put examples on tape of pattern recognition to anticipate where the ball will be thrown ... physical for his size and won’t shy defending the run ... was a regular on special teams each season (647 career snaps on special teams) ... averaged 8.4 yards per punt return with one touchdown (44/368/1) and 26.6 per kick return with a pair of return scores (54/1,435/2).

WEAKNESSES: Small, light and short-armed, lacking the desired size for the pro game ... doesn’t have the strength to match up with NFL power on the perimeter ... quarterbacks won’t be scared to throw overtop him ... ball skills and body position downfield are inconsistent ... most of his completions allowed came from him being too loose with his coverage ... throws his body around, but sometimes tries to chop down instead of securing with his wrap ... missed one game as a senior because of a left ankle injury (September 2022).

SUMMARY: A four-year starter at Texas, Jamison was primarily an outside cornerback in defensive coordinator Pete Kwiatkowski’s scheme, also seeing snaps inside in the nickel. He made a noticeable jump as a senior with his coverage and was responsible for a non-offensive touchdown in four of his five seasons in college (two kick returns, one punt return, one interception return). Jamison moves well vertically to contend with throws deep and laterally to cut off receivers early with his press. He is very competitive, but tends to be overaggressive and misses out on ball production. Overall, Jamison has the short-area quickness to stay attached in coverage, although his lack of size and body positioning creates questions of whether he can hold up versus NFL receivers. He should be able to compete for a nickel role on an NFL roster while adding return value on special teams.

GRADE: Priority Free Agent

36. ANTHONY JOHNSON | Virginia 6015 | 205 lbs. | 6SR Coconut Creek, Fla. (Chaminade) 6/12/1999 (age 23.88) #3

BACKGROUND: Anthony “AJ” Johnson grew up near Fort Lauderdale in South Florida and originally attended Nova High School in Davie. As a starting cornerback, he accounted for 20 tackles, 13 passes defended and three interceptions. In the spring of 2016, Johnson transferred to Chaminade-Madonna College Preparatory, a private school in Hollywood, Fla. As a senior, he helped the program to a 10-win season and an appearance in the 2016 state championship game. Johnson earned honorable mention All-State and second team All-County honors in his final season with 41 tackles and three interceptions. He also joined the track team at Chaminade-Madonna, posting personal bests in the 110-meter hurdles (16.57), 300-meter hurdles (42.80), 400 meters (53.69) and high jump (5 feet 7 inches).

A three-star recruit, Johnson was the No. 154 cornerback in the 2017 recruiting class and the No. 211 recruit in Florida. His recruitment picked up after he transferred to Chaminade-Madonna, including his first offer from Louisville. Johnson added offers from Pittsburgh and South Florida, but he stayed loyal to his first offer and signed with Cardinals head coach Bobby Petrino (same recruiting class as Mekhi Becton). After three seasons at Louisville, Johnson graduated with his degree in marketing and entered the transfer portal. Looking for a “better opportunity” to show his talent, he signed with Virginia in January 2021, along with Oklahoma State transfer Jelani Woods. Johnson took advantage of the extra year of eligibility because of the pandemic and returned to school for his sixth season in 2022. He accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl (named the American Team MVP with a pick six in the game).

PRO DAY	6017	202	33 1/4	8 5/8	78	-	-	-	-	-	4.41	7.06	-	(stood on Combine runs, jumps, bench)

STRENGTHS: Above-average height/length/weight for the position ... uses his long arms to play through the hands of receivers and get the ball to the ground ... has a knack for finding angles to the catch point without going through receivers ... quarterbacks don’t want to try to throw over him ... creates timing issues for routes with his jam ... presses receivers to the sideline and looks for the ball ... reads route breaks and works hard to maintain proper positioning ... coaches trusted him to restrict run lanes and finish as a tackler ... brings a lot of energy the moment he enters a room, NFL scouts say ... impressive tackle and ball production, especially the past two seasons for the Cavaliers.

WEAKNESSES: Below-average speed and lower-body muscle-twitch by NFL standards ... upright in his backpedal and movements, impeding his ability to click and close ... struggles to sink and swing his hips to match sudden route movements ... needs a half-beat to accelerate after changing directions ... had three coverage penalties in 2022 (two pass interference flags, one defensive holding) ... gives up too much spacing in his attempts to bait throws ... continued technique work (in coverage and run support) will help limit costly mistakes ... will be a 24-year-old NFL rookie.

SUMMARY: A two-year starter at Virginia, Johnson was an outside cornerback in defensive coordinator John Rudzinski’s balanced scheme. After he had trouble getting on the field at Louisville, he resuscitated his career at Virginia, leading the team in passes defended and interceptions in both of his seasons with the Cavaliers. Johnson matches up well physically with size in press-man, and he displays the eye balance for quick reads from off coverage. But his upright stance and methodical gather to burst delay his effectiveness matching routes early and deep. Overall, Johnson looks the part with the coverage IQ and ball skills that has NFL teams interested, but his lack of high-end speed and explosive movements could limit his impact at the next level. He is best-suited for a zone-heavy scheme.

SUMMARY: Kaleb Hayes was born in Pasadena, Calif., and was primarily a quarterback at San Gorgonio High. He led the program to its first state title in 2016, combining for 5,749 yards (3,139 passing, 2,610 rushing) his junior and senior seasons. A three-star recruit, he signed with Oregon State (over BYU) as a cornerback and led the team in passes defended in 2019. He entered the transfer portal after the 2020 season but considered only BYU. He led the Cougars in passes defended both years in Provo. Hayes is a twitchy, urgent athlete with top-end speed and short-area burst to match up with NFL receivers. He needs to display more consistent composure to maintain phase and avoid penalties. He has great length to obstruct windows when he locates the ball, but he is still searching for his first interception. Overall, Hayes’ route processing and physicality need work, but he has the athletic traits to play sticky coverage. His elite pro day showing might get him drafted.

SUMMARY: Lance Boykin grew up playing football with his older brother, Ridge, who was a defensive end at Campbell (2015-2021). He attended High Point Christian Academy, where he combined for 1,560 rushing yards on offense and 14 interceptions on defense. A two-star "athlete" recruit, Boykin played corner at Old Dominion for three years before deciding to transfer to Coastal Carolina because of the coaching turnover. As a senior, he led the team in passes defended and interceptions. Boykin has long limbs and smartly uses his body length to smother receivers in press and get his hands on the football downfield. His confidence and route awareness are strengths of his game, but his lower-body burst doesn't match his eyes, and his tight transitions leave him in recovery mode. He's a strong tackler in the run game. Overall, Boykin lacks desired speed and twitch for the position, but he is long, physical and mentally tough — essential ingredients for an NFL press-man corner.

SUMMARY: Keidron (KEE-drun) Smith comes from a family of athletes: Both of his parents played college basketball, and his sister (Kaylon) plays for Vanderbilt's women's basketball team. He starred in basketball (surpassed 1,000 points) and football (seven career interceptions) at Oxbridge Academy. A three-star recruit, he was a four-year starter at Ole Miss before transferring to Kentucky for his super-senior season, leading the Wildcats with a pair of interceptions in 2022. Smith has an extensive resume (60 games played in the SEC) and was dependable in coverage on tape (didn't allow a completion over 25 yards in 2022). He uses his size and physicality to make receivers uncomfortable mid-route. That aggressiveness also carries over to the run game with his ability to trigger and finish downhill. Overall, Smith can be tied up against savvy route runners, but he is a good-sized athlete with length, ball skills and cover awareness, projecting best in a Cover-3 scheme.

SUMMARY: Jarrick Bernard-Converse was born in Baton Rouge and started playing football at age 8. He attended Evangel Christian Academy in Shreveport, where he posted three interceptions as a sophomore and led the program to the 2016 state title as a junior. A three-star recruit, he signed with Oklahoma State and became an immediate starter at safety. He moved to cornerback for the 2020 and '21 seasons in Stillwater before returning to his home state for his final season and transferring to LSU. Bernard-Converse offers a wealth of experience with more than 3,500 defensive snaps (64 games) and time at outside corner, nickel and safety. He drapes himself all over receivers in press but finds himself off balance trying to stay connected. He is more comfortable from off coverage, where he can read, drive and close space. Overall, Bernard-Converse needs to play more composed, but he has versatile experience, and his blend of length, speed and fluidity is worth molding.

SUMMARY: Arther “Art” Green grew up in the St. Louis area and played safety and receiver at Parkway Central High. He also set the school record in the 100 meters (11.04 seconds) and placed top 10 in the state in relays. Because of academics, he went the juco route, and he moved to cornerback full-time in 2018. A three-star juco recruit, he signed with Houston (over SEC offers) in 2020 and became a full-time starter in 2022, leading the team with 10 passes defended). Green has press-man size, but has also shown considerable growth understanding zone concepts and route recognition to better know when to stay patient and when to swoop in for plays on the ball. His footwork lacks desired fluidity and technical grace, which hurts his ability to stay connected. His look-and-lean and ball skills flashed during East-West Shrine Bowl practices. Overall, some NFL teams follow a simple formula at corner: They want tall, long athletes who can run. Green falls in that category.

SUMMARY: Kahlef (kuh-LEAF) Hailassie (huh-LOSS-ee) started playing football at age 7 and eventually became an All-Conference safety at Elk Grove High. He also was a standout receiver and returner. A three-star recruit, he flipped from Colorado to Washington State on signing day before making a late switch to Oregon. He spent two years at the juco level before transferring to WKU for his final two seasons, and he earned All-CUSA honors at cornerback as both a junior and senior. Hailassie is a twitchy athlete who can mirror and match, although he will surrender separation when caught upright and on his heels. He has outstanding length to crowd the catch point but must do a better locating to pick off passes. As a tackler, he stays balanced as a finisher when working from high to low. He plays fearless with a brash attitude. Overall, Hailassie needs to play with more disciplined eyes, but he is long, fluid and controlled in his movements to cover from press or off coverage.

SUMMARY: Larry “Tre” Hawkins III was a decorated athlete (football and track) at Temple High. He finished his senior season with 60 tackles and two interceptions. He was forced to go the juco route out of high school and played two seasons at Trinity Valley Community in east Texas. He signed with Old Dominion in the 2020 recruiting class, but that season was wiped out because of the pandemic. Hawkins started all 25 games the past two seasons and made noticeable improvements as a senior (his penalties dropped from six to only one in 2022). He has a tall, long and limber body type with the gather-and-go skills to quickly transition vertically and stay attached to receivers. His long speed is impressive, but his average lateral agility will put him in recovery mode and shows up as a tackler. Overall, Hawkins will get clingy and needs to improve his play recognition, but he passes the eye test with flying colors and has the athletic profile NFL teams will want to develop.

SUMMARY: Demeatrius “DJ” Ivey is a South Florida native who started his prep career at Homestead High before transferring to South Dade. As a senior, he collected six interceptions. A four-star recruit, he chose his hometown Hurricanes over offers from Auburn, Georgia and others. After a rocky first four years at Miami, he returned in 2022 and had his best season, although he still gave up too many explosive plays (see the 2022 Middle Tennessee and Florida State tapes). Ivey uses his long arms to jam and stay connected in his turn-and-run along the sideline. He has the short-area footwork to match routes, but his eye balance and lack of route recognition leads to wasted steps out of breaks and separation for the receiver. His tackling and ball skills are fine, but they aren’t exactly strengths of his game. Overall, Ivey struggles to anticipate, but he is tall, long and athletic, can play both man and zone and can compete for a spot on the back end of an NFL roster.

SUMMARY: Keenan Isaac grew up in Birmingham, Ala., and was a two-way player (cornerback and wide receiver) at Midfield High, earning Second-Team All-State honors as a senior. He also lettered in basketball and averaged 18.9 points per game. Lightly recruited, he received an FBS offer from Middle Tennessee State, but both of his parents attended an HBCU school, which led him to FCS Alabama State, his only other offer. He was a four-year starter for the Hornets and leaves with 32 passes defended over his career. Isaac does a great job at the line with his hands to reroute receivers, but he struggles to match the physicality of bigger opponents. His marginal strength also shows in the run game. In coverage, he flashes light, twitchy footwork to mirror receivers early and late. Overall, Isaac has only average long speed and instincts and needs continued strength development, but he has pro potential with his intriguing frame and short-area explosiveness.

SUMMARY: Ameer (ah-MEAR) Speed was an All-Conference cornerback at Sandalwood High in Duval County and led his team to an undefeated regular season and the 2016 district title. A three-star recruit, he committed to Georgia over Michigan State and three other finalists. However, he struggled to find his footing on the cornerback depth chart and logged more snaps on special teams (518) than defense (336) over his five years in Athens. He transferred to East Lansing for his final season in 2022 and had a mixed season in his debut as a full-time starter. Speed lives up to his name with the wheels to turn and run with anyone downfield. He has impressive size and length but needs to put his long arms to better use in press and downfield. His route recognition and ball skills are both areas of concern. Overall, Speed doesn’t have the body of work or college tape of an NFL Draft pick, but he has enticing athletic gifts for his size plus a ton of special teams experience.

1. BRIAN BRANCH | Alabama 5115 | 190 lbs. | 3JR Fayetteville, Ga. (Sandy Creek) 10/22/2001 (age 21.51) #14

BACKGROUND: Brian Branch, who is the youngest of five children (four boys, one girl), grew up south of Atlanta where he was raised by his mother (Sharon). He was introduced to sports, mainly basketball and football, at a young age and played for the Junior Patriots. Branch started working with a football trainer (Andre Powell) at PASS Football Academy in eighth grade. He enrolled at Sandy Creek High School, which produced several notable football players, including Pro Football Hall of Fame wide receiver Calvin Johnson. He made an immediate impact as a freshman safety and return man, collecting three interceptions. Branch was too good to take off the field and played offense (wide receiver), defense (cornerback/safety) and special teams. He was named all-county defensive player of the year as a junior with 58 tackles and five interceptions, adding 15 catches for 368 yards and three touchdowns. As a senior, Branch finished with 41 tackles, six interceptions and three forced fumbles and posted his best offensive season with 61 receptions for 1,107 yards and 14 touchdowns. He set the all-time school record for interceptions (16). Branch also was the team’s featured return man on kickoffs and punts, finishing his career with 1,213 return yards and two touchdowns. He lettered in basketball at Sandy Creek and started at guard.

A four-star recruit, Branch was the No. 3 safety in the 2020 class, No. 61 overall and the No. 8 recruit in Georgia (No. 4 defensive recruit behind Myles Murphy and Will Anderson). Branch started receiving offers after his sophomore season from programs like East Carolina, Louisville and Indiana. During his junior campaign, the major offers arrived, including those from Michigan, Ohio State, Oklahoma and Tennessee. Prior to his senior year, Branch committed to Alabama over the Buckeyes and Sooners. His older brother (Christian) played wide receiver at Kennesaw State (2015-16) and Southern (2018-19). His parents divorced when Branch was younger. His father (Clarence III) passed away in March 2020. Branch decided to skip his senior season and enter the 2023 NFL Draft.

STRENGTHS: Quick-footed athlete with rangy movement skills across the secondary ... naturally instinctive as a slot defender ... sticky in man coverage and alert in zones ... coordinated footwork to turn and run with receivers or plant, gather and go when he triggers plays in front of him ... able to intercept angles because of his drive mechanics ... calmly plays the ball well when he locates it ... reactive athleticism limits big plays (allowed only one catch of 20-plus yards in 2022) ... leverages well in the run game and takes proper pursuit angles ... comes to balance in space, squares and delivers pop as a tackler ... above-average blitzing skills ... plays well near the line (only three fewer tackles for loss than Will Anderson in 2022) ... was a regular on kick and punt coverages over his three college seasons ... had two punt returns (one muff and a 68-yard touchdown) ... Alabama coaches single him out as one of the best competitors on the team (NFL scout: "Go back and watch the Arkansas tape. ... It was like watching two different defenses before and after he was banged up.") ... legitimate position versatility, including practices at cornerback.

WEAKNESSES: Undersized by NFL standards with an average build and body type ... only adequate length and limited growth potential ... testing numbers were average-at-best ... ordinary play strength is apparent when he tries to disengage from wide receiver blocks ... allows too much cushion at times and can do a better job balancing his eyes between quarterback and route runner ... looks to mix things up mid-route and was penalized five times in 2022 (all five were pass interference penalties) ... played through minor injuries over his career, but NFL teams will have durability concerns because of his frame.

SUMMARY: A three-year starter at Alabama, Branch played the "star" nickel position in head coach Nick Saban's multiple scheme, lining up against the slot and playing in the box (the same role Minkah Fitzpatrick popularized). An extension of Saban on the field, the coaches gradually added to his plate, and he was always up to the task, finishing the 2022 season as the only FBS player with 90-plus tackles, 14.0-plus tackles for loss and at least two interceptions (only Alabama defender with multiple interceptions in 2022). Equally athletic and physical, Branch has terrific short area quickness with the pattern recognition and run/pass anticipation to match up in a variety of ways. Though you wish he was bigger, his lack of size wasn't a deterrent on tape, and he posted a high batting average as a tackler in college (an elite 2.3 percent missed tackle rate at Alabama). Overall, Branch might not have elite size/speed measurables, but he is above average in almost every other category NFL teams covet with his well-rounded game to run, cover and tackle. He projects as a starting nickel in the NFL and offers hybrid versatility across the secondary, similar in ways to Miami's Jevon Holland.

GRADE: 1st Round (No. 17 overall)

2. ANTONIO JOHNSON | Texas A&M 6017 | 198 lbs. | 3JR East St. Louis, Ill. (East St. Louis) 10/29/2001 (age 21.49) #27

BACKGROUND: Antonio Johnson, who is the oldest of four children, was born and raised by his mother (Damika Rogers) in East St. Louis. He grew up playing baseball, basketball and other sports, but football was always his focus. Johnson enrolled at East St. Louis High School, where he was a three-year letterman and played on both sides of the ball. After posting two interceptions as a sophomore safety, he recorded 81 tackles and five interceptions (one returned for a touchdown) as a junior in 2018, adding 32 receptions for 642 yards and nine touchdowns at wide receiver. Johnson was a U.S. Army All-American as a senior and led East St. Louis to an undefeated 14-0 season, including the 2019 6A state championship. He finished his final season with 89 tackles and two interceptions on defense with 39 catches for 837 yards and seven touchdowns on offense. Johnson finished his prep career with 234 tackles and nine interceptions on defense and 73 receptions for 1,531 yards and 16 touchdowns on offense.

A four-star recruit, Johnson was the No. 4 safety in the 2020 class (one spot behind Alabama's Brian Branch), the No. 1 recruit in Illinois (two spots ahead of Northwestern's Peter Skoronski) and the No. 78 overall recruit nationally. Johnson started to receive FBS offers after his sophomore season, including those from Virginia Tech, Missouri and Iowa. After his junior year, the heavy-hitters started to reach out, as Johnson added offers from Alabama, Georgia, LSU and Michigan. He initially committed to Tennessee in June 2019 while attending a summer camp. However, Johnson visited College Station a month later and decommitted from Tennessee, officially flipping to Texas A&M two months later. His younger brother (Sael Reyes) is a rising junior safety at DeSoto High School with several SEC offers (Arkansas, Missouri, Ole Miss and Texas A&M). Johnson elected to skip his senior season and enter the 2023 NFL Draft.

STRENGTHS: Physically imposing frame with his body/arm length ... agile-footed for his size with natural muscle twitch for quick reactions ... disciplined run fits with the speed angles to run the alley or cut off outside runs ... fills with closing burst downhill ... doesn't always do it, but can come to balance on the move to make open-field stops ... strikes with a lead shoulder to dislodge the ball at contact ... balanced near the line of scrimmage to bounce off blockers ... zone instinctive and reads the quarterback well to defend quick-hitters ... 2022 Auburn tape showed off blitzing potential ... was a regular on both punt and punt coverage teams ... has experience lining up in the box, slot and deep.

WEAKNESSES: Plays too upright ... average anticipation impedes backend range ... easily sucked up by play action and doesn't have the suddenness in feet/hips to quickly recover ... undisciplined technique and height can be a detriment with his pedal and tackling ... the missed tackles added up in 2022 and were usually a result of an inconsistent strike zone ... inconsistent physicality taking on blocks (aggressive some reps and soft on others) ... doesn't create interception opportunities (only one career INT) ... inconsistent coverage spacing incumbers chances of making plays on the ball ... flagged twice for pass interference in 2022 ... fewest bench press reps (eight) among all prospects at the combine ... missed three games as a junior because of injury (October 2022).

SUMMARY: A two-year starter at Texas A&M, Johnson was a nickel defensive back in defensive coordinator DJ Durkin's cover-3/cover-4 match scheme, playing multiple safety alignments. He was primarily a box and short-area defender for the Aggies and led the team in tackles per game (7.9) in 2022 (missed three games, and it was obvious when he was and was not on the field). A physical presence in the running game, Johnson has intriguing versatility with his body length and pursuit range and looks to tune up his target working downhill. He matches up well versus tight ends, but he will struggle to stay connected with NFL slots. Overall, Johnson has undisciplined tendencies and is still getting his body organized technically, but he is at his best near the line of scrimmage with his zone instincts and eagerness to drop the hammer in the run game. His play style is reminiscent of Jamal Adams (albeit in a different body type).

GRADE: 2nd-3rd Round (No. 70 overall)

3. QUAN MARTIN | Illinois 5110 | 194 lbs. | 5SR Lehigh Acres, Fla. (Lehigh Senior) 4/17/2000 (age 23.03) #21

BACKGROUND: Jartavius “Quan” Martin (Quan is his middle name) grew up in the Fort Myers area and started playing football at age 5. He played multiple positions, including running back and linebacker, throughout youth levels and was also a standout basketball player at Lehigh Acres Middle School. Martin attended Lehigh Senior High School where he was a four-year varsity letterman, getting the call-up as a freshman. He was part of the safety rotation as a sophomore and finished his junior season with 38 tackles, two forced fumbles and a pair of interceptions, helping Lehigh make the playoffs. As a senior, Martin recorded 87 tackles, 3.0 tackles for loss and one interception, adding four total touchdowns (three touchdown catches and one fumble recovery). He also was a three-year letterman on the basketball team, playing alongside his older brother (Jarvis). Martin, who also starred in the Florida Future U16 club, was the starting guard on the Lehigh Acres team that finished 26-4 record, including a district title.

A three-star recruit, Martin was the No. 113 safety in the 2018 class and the No. 242 recruit in Florida. He received interest from several Group of 5 programs, including offers from Air Force, Central Michigan, FIU, Georgia Southern and Tulane. Martin didn’t have a Power 5 offer until Illinois offered him a full ride in June 2017. He committed to former head coach Lovie Smith a month later. Martin, who was also the team’s barber, was part of the same recruiting class as other Florida defensive backs Kerby Joseph and Sydney Brown. He moved to cornerback as a freshman then back to safety before settling in as a nickel. Martin took advantage of the extra year of eligibility granted because of the pandemic and returned to Champaign for his fifth season in 2022. He accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl but missed the second half of the week because of an ankle injury.

PRO DAY	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	(no shuttle or 3-cone – choice) (stood on combine testing)

STRENGTHS: Cut-up, well-conditioned athlete ... quick-reaction player who generates rare explosion from his lower body (was dunking in middle school and participated in dunk contests in high school) ... dynamic footwork in the slot to redirect with routes, regardless of direction ... timed speed and play speed are both above average ... plays through the hands of receivers for late breakups ... properly reads his keys (Illinois head coach Bret Bielema: “He’s highly intelligent, great football IQ.”) ... high batting average as a tackler (led the team in solo tackles in 2022) ... does a nice job eluding blockers but will also get feisty near the line of scrimmage without sacrificing his balance ... takes coaching well and implements what he is taught on the field ... has a great reputation in the building as a relentless worker, especially when he thinks no one is watching.

WEAKNESSES: Looks small next to wide receivers ... has trouble finding the football once his back is turned to the line of scrimmage ... when in position to make plays on the ball, timing and ball skills tend to be inconsistent ... still developing route knowledge in the slot ... will bite on hesitation routes (out-and-ups, etc.), and smart quarterbacks will test his tendencies ... flagged only once for holding in 2022, but can get grabby versus quick-footed slots ... lack of ideal size and strength shows when wide receiver blocks engulf him ... tackling angles can be tightened up and sharper ... suffered a minor ankle injury in the second Senior Bowl practice (February 2023) and missed the rest of the week ... was not a full-time special-teamer but has experience on coverage teams.

SUMMARY: A five-year starter at Illinois, Martin played the nickel “star” position in former defensive coordinator Ryan Walters’ nickel base, rotating between the slot and single-high. Originally a boundary corner and safety for the Illini, he moved to the slot as a junior (when Walters arrived) and combined for 22 passes defended and four interceptions the past two years. Martin is an alert player with the on-field athletic twitch that didn’t disappoint at the NFL combine (his 1.44 10-yard split, 44-inch vertical and 11-1 broad jump ranked No. 1 among safeties at the combine). Though he covers a ton of ground, he can be a 90-10 player at times – coverage looks great the first 90 percent of the play but loses phase late attempting to find the football and make a play (see his touchdown allowed on 2022 Purdue tape). Overall, Martin needs to become a better finisher, but he is an outstanding athlete with cover skills, tackling attitude and above-average football character. Though he offers experience across the secondary, he is best suited inside as a nickel defender.

4. JI’AYIR BROWN | Penn State 5113 | 203 lbs. | 5SR Trenton, N.J. (Central) 1/25/2000 (age 23.26) #16

BACKGROUND: Ji’ Ayir (jeye-AIR) “Tig” Brown is one of four children and grew up in the Donnelly Homes neighborhood in North Trenton. He started playing flag football before graduating to Pop Warner, lining up at quarterback, running back and other positions. Brown attended Trenton Central High School where he was a four-year varsity letterman, seeing playing time as a freshman. An all-purpose weapon on offense and cornerback on defense, he earned all-conference honors as a junior captain with 232 receiving yards, 134 rushing yards as well as 44 tackles. As a senior captain, Brown was named first team all-state and all-conference with 111.3 all-purpose yards per game, adding 52 tackles and three interceptions. He scored a touchdown six different ways in 2017: rushing, receiving, passing, interception return, kick return and punt return. Brown also lettered in basketball and averaged 12.4 points, 10.4 rebounds and a state-best 6.7 steals per game as a senior, leading the team to the state playoff semifinals.

Brown wasn’t ranked by recruiting services in the 2018 class. His academics and low SAT numbers led to him being overlooked by FBS programs. Brown received interest from the Division III level (Montclair State) and junior colleges, but signing day came and went without any scholarship offers. After his high school graduation in July 2018, he received a late offer from Lackawanna Junior College and joined the football team a week later. Brown moved to safety and started alongside Jaquan Brisker in the secondary, helping Lackawanna to an undefeated 11-0 record in 2018 with 40 tackles and five interceptions. As a sophomore, he earned juco All-American honors and was named the conference’s defensive player of the year with 35 tackles and three interceptions, leading Lackawanna to the 2019 championship game. A three-star juco recruit, Brown attended a Penn State camp the summer before his sophomore year and received a scholarship offer as a safety, following in the footsteps of Brisker (Brown: “That’s my brother, more than just a friend.”). His mother (Joy Ingram) gave him the nickname, “Tig,” short for “Tigger” from Winnie-the-Pooh, because of the way he would bounce around as a kid. Brown took advantage of the extra year of eligibility granted because of the pandemic and returned for a fifth season in 2022. He accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl.

STRENGTHS: Competes with a contact-driven mentality and loves to get busy downhill ... quality run fitter and isn't shy throwing his body around ... urgently runs the alley on sweeps and screens ... plays with a wide base as an open-field tackler ... matches the physicality of tight ends and receivers in coverage ... quick to read run/pass ... good enough range to make plays on the ball outside the numbers ... consistently finds the ball before it arrives ... swallows the football with his massive hands and doesn't let interception opportunities go to waste ... shows a natural feel for when to roll the dice ... energetic tone-setter on defense and voted a senior captain in 2022 (NFL scout: "I wish all our guys practiced like this dude. ... Would make my job a lot easier.") ... driven competitor and earned the "Iron Lion" award for his strength and training work in the PSU program ... made plays on punt coverage, including a forced fumble in 2022 ... started every game the past two seasons.

WEAKNESSES: Arrives too hot and needs to be more controlled as a tackler ... gets himself in trouble when he drops his shoulder to deliver blows instead of using proper wrap technique ... prematurely leaves his feet and allows lesser athletes to juke him in space ... strength doesn't always match his intentions when engaged with blockers near the line of scrimmage ... overeager to make plays and frantic pursuit leads to wasted steps ... doesn't explode out of his transitions and has man-cover limitations ... can be manipulated from deep coverage by savvy quarterbacks.

SUMMARY: A two-year starter at Penn State, Brown was a versatile safety in defensive coordinator Manny Diaz's man/zone schemes, rotating between single-high and box responsibilities (played primarily cover-6 in 2022). After the juco level was his only option out of high school, he developed into an All-Big Ten safety and led the Nittany Lions in interceptions as a junior and senior (he is the only player in this draft class with double-digit interceptions over the past two seasons). Although he will attack before diagnosing at times, Brown is often "Johnny on the spot" with his big-play hunting instincts. He filled the leadership shoes of Jaquan Brisker in 2022, as Diaz describes Brown as a "warrior," the type of player you get to coach "once every five years." He fills fast and is aggressive in run support, but he must improve his angles and tackling balance to become a more consistent finisher versus NFL athletes. Overall, Brown must introduce more discipline and body control in his play, but he is a physical presence versus the run with the anticipation and ball skills to match up in coverage. He has the football character and skill set of an interchangeable starting safety at the next level.

GRADE: 3rd Round (No. 84 overall)

5. JORDAN BATTLE | Alabama 6010 | 209 lbs. | 4SR Fort Lauderdale, Fla. (St. Thomas Aquinas) 12/14/2000 (age 22.37) #9

BACKGROUND: Jordan Battle, who is the youngest of two boys, was born and raised in Broward County, just north of Miami near the Atlantic coast. His father signed him up for track at age 4, followed by football at age 6. Throughout the youth levels, Battle was a standout in both basketball and football and coached by his father in both sports until high school. He enrolled at St. Thomas Aquinas High School, a private Catholic school and football powerhouse, where he was a four-year varsity letterman. He was coached by Pro Football Hall of Famer Jason Taylor and was teammates with several current NFL players, including Chargers cornerback Asante Samuel Jr. and Browns wide receiver Elijah Moore. As a junior, he posted 55 tackles and four interceptions, including one returned for a touchdown. Battle was named an Under Armour All-American as a senior and finished the 2018 season with 27 tackles, 1.0 sack and three interceptions, adding a punt return touchdown and kick return touchdown. Aquinas had a record of 51-8 over Battle's four years there. He also lettered in basketball.

A four-star recruit, Battle was the No. 2 safety in the 2019 class (behind only Daxton Hill), the No. 6 recruit in Florida and the No. 43 overall recruit nationally. As a sophomore, Battle received his first offer from Florida Atlantic, followed by Pittsburgh, Virginia Tech and Michigan. He picked up offers from Florida, Georgia, Miami (Fla.), Texas and Ohio State as a junior and officially committed to the Buckeyes the summer before his senior year. However, Battle decided to flip to Alabama on signing day after Urban Meyer announced his retirement because of health issues. His father (Fred) played college basketball at Florida Memorial and is now a high school teacher and basketball coach. Jordan's older brother (Jalen) played defensive back at FCS Illinois State (2013-15) and was part of Division II Davenport's 2019 signing class. Battle graduated with his degree (December 2022). He accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl but pulled out prior to the event.

PRO DAY	6014	210	32	8 3/4	75	-	-	-	29 1/2	9'6"	4.37	7.31	(stood on combine testing)

STRENGTHS: Well-strapped-together safety ... smart run defender and fills quickly ... takes practical pursuit angles and puts himself in position to make strong tackles on the move ... does a great job cutting off outside speed to funnel ball carriers to his help ... zone alert and tracks the quarterback to drive ... stays balanced when covering tight ends and backs ... tough, physical striker to lay out pass catchers ... playmaker after interceptions, averaging 26.0 yards per return (6/156/3) ... all three of his pick-sixes were 40-plus yards ... zero penalties in 2022 ... voted a 2022 team captain, and his coaches said they had to force him off the practice field ... was a regular on special teams in college (789 career snaps and 14 tackles) ... played in every game (54) the past four seasons, finishing his career with 37-straight starts.

WEAKNESSES: Average (at best) range and play speed ... not a true sideline-to-sideline defender in the back end ... can be caught flat-footed and late to click and close cushion in man coverage ... lacks the suddenness in his lower body to stay attached to NFL slot receivers ... adequate breakdown and finishing skills in run support but will leave production on the field when tackling mechanics fall apart ... hard to find examples of him blitzing on 2022 tape ... below-average ball production (16 passes defended) for a defensive back with 44 career starts.

SUMMARY: A four-year starter at Alabama, Battle was the strong safety in head coach Nick Saban’s multiple scheme and switched between high and low alignments. He put together a veteran resume in Tuscaloosa as a two-time All-American and one of three captains in 2022 (along with Will Anderson and Bryce Young). Battle plays aware in zone coverage and assignment sound in the run game with accurate fits and the physical nature of a linebacker. However, he is a linear athlete with limited playmaking range and tackling inconsistencies. Overall, Battle’s tape and skill set scream “average,” but he is a smart, experienced safety with reliable football character and competitive toughness. He projects as a low-ceiling post/box starter in the NFL with core special teams skills.

GRADE: 3rd Round (No. 89 overall)

6. JL SKINNER | Boise State

6036 | 209 lbs. | 4SR

San Diego, Calif. (Point Loma)

BACKGROUND: JL Skinner III (JL is his given name, not an abbreviation) was born in Virginia before moving to the San Diego in fifth grade. He played flag football growing up in the Norfolk area but stopped playing to focus on basketball. Skinner returned to football in middle school as a running back and linebacker and realized football was his best sport. He was a three-sport letterman at Point Loma High School and played both ways on the football team (cornerback and wide receiver). After a tough first varsity season as a sophomore, Skinner blossomed as a junior cornerback with 33 tackles and three interceptions to earn first team all-conference honors, adding eight catches for 217 receiving yards and two touchdowns on offense. As a senior, he was named first team All-San Diego and finished the 2018 season with 40 tackles, five forced fumbles and an interception. On offense Skinner added wildcat duties as a senior, and he reached 1,000 all-purpose yards and 11 touchdowns. He lettered three years in both basketball and track (sprints and relays), setting personal bests in the 100 meters (11.30) and 200 meters (23.14).

A three-star recruit, Skinner was the No. 41 athlete in the 2019 class and the No. 80 recruit in California. He was recruited as a defensive back by some and wide receiver by others, collecting more than a dozen offers. He narrowed down the list to a final three of Boise State, California and Louisville, committing to the Broncos to play safety (a position he’d never played before). Skinner returned to school for his senior year to earn his degree (wants to enter the medical field after football). He accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl (voted the National Team’s safety practice player of the week).

STRENGTHS: Long, lithe athlete with rare height for the position ... stretched-out stride expands range and helps him mirror runs to the sideline ... decisive run-filler and takes sharp angles ... decent hip movements to open and redirect in pursuit with little resistance ... length and agility expand his tackling radius ... shows a knack for timing and drive quickness to dislodge or break up passes in coverage ... avoids coverage penalties because of that timing (only flag in 2022 was for targeting) ... large wingspan helps him reel in interceptions (high school wide receiver) ... not a rah-rah leader but loves to talk on the field ... coaches often point out his confidence and passion for getting better ... accounted for 460 snaps and nine tackles on special teams throughout career.

WEAKNESSES: High cut with rail-thin legs and average muscle definition ... sticks to blockers and needs to do a better job letting his length work for him ... has some lazy tackling habits, either throwing his shoulder instead of wrapping or not driving through target ... passion is easy to see but tends to be overzealous as a striker, leading to multiple targeting calls (says he models game after former Seahawks star Kam Chancellor) ... eyes tend to be all over the place ... route anticipation is underdeveloped ... more likely to react with or after the play instead of before ... can be caught flat-footed when asked to match up with slot receivers ... some NFL scouts see alignment versatility, though others question his natural position in certain schemes ... suffered a torn left pec (February 2023) while training for the bench press and underwent surgery (March 2023), which sidelined him for the remainder of the draft process.

SUMMARY: A three-year starter at Boise State, Skinner was the boundary safety in defensive coordinator Spencer Danielson’s 4-2-5 base scheme. With his hybrid skill set, he would often line up in the box while also showing his range in the post and seeing snaps in the slot. Skinner is a long-striding athlete with cover range versus both the run and pass because of his unique size (not many safeties have an identical body type to AJ Green). His eyes and coverage angles need to be more disciplined, but he doesn’t waste the interception opportunities created by his large catch radius. Overall, Skinner needs to improve his anticipation and tighten up his take-on and tackling, but he is a glider with the physical toughness to play in the box and range to cover tight ends. He fits best as a nickel safety or low-hole player with the upside of an NFL starter.

GRADE: 3rd-4th Round (No. 92 overall)

7. MARTE MAPU | Sacramento State

6030 | 221 lbs. | 6SR

Hawthorne, Calif. (Hawthorne)

11/8/1999 (age 23.47)

BACKGROUND: Marte-Myles “Marte” (mar-TAY) Mapu (mah-PU) grew up in Hawthorne, which is 15 miles south of downtown Los Angeles and only a few miles from the Pacific coast. Growing up, he was always on the go and played whatever sport he could, especially football, starting at the Pop Warner level where he played almost every position, including quarterback. Mapu attended Hawthorne High School and was a three-year letterman, playing on offense (quarterback and wide receiver) and defense (cornerback and safety). As a senior, he completed 62.2 percent of his passes and was responsible for 14 touchdowns on offense, earning first team all-conference honors. Mapu lined up across the secondary, including outside cornerback and single-high safety, and finished the 2016 season with 43 tackles and three interceptions.

Mapu wasn’t ranked by recruiting services and was overlooked by Division I programs (Hawthorne went 3-7 in each of his three seasons on varsity). He heard from a few FCS programs before signing with Sacramento State as a safety in the 2017 recruiting class. Mapu took advantage of the extra year of eligibility granted because of the pandemic and returned for his sixth season in 2022. He graduated with his degree in sociology and is pursuing a second degree in kinesiology. Mapu accepted his invitation to the 2023 NFLPA Collegiate Bowl and was also a late callup to the Senior Bowl (second player in school history to play in the Senior Bowl and first since 1986). He missed the second half of Senior Bowl week because of a groin/quad injury.

PRO DAY	6030	221	33 1/2	9 3/8	78 3/4	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	(no workout – right pec)

STRENGTHS: Boasts a long, filled-out frame with well-distributed mass ... has the tools to wear multiple hats for a defense ... stays patient and balanced at the top of routes to smoothly read and react with backs and tight ends ... understands depth in zone to float and find passing lanes ... reads run keys wonderfully to beat blockers to the spot and establish leverage ... mirrors well laterally with a burst to close that helps keep blocking hands off him ... lowers the boom as a drive-through, knockback tackler ... very aggressive and savvy as a blitzer ... smart and instinctive, which is a direct result of his devotion to film study ... brings a blue-collar work ethic, and football is important to him ... called the “silent assassin” by his college coaches for his humble personality but violent play ... rarely came off the field as a senior, playing defense and special teams.

WEAKNESSES: Couldn’t test or work out for NFL teams pre-draft after he suffered a torn right pectoral muscle (February 2023), which required surgery ... plays smooth in his change of direction, but not sudden ... average long speed and control in hips with man-to-man responsibilities ... doesn’t have the speed to match up with most NFL slot receivers ... physical at contact but needs to be more consistent with take-on techniques (overly reliant on his shoulder to slam into blockers, which can take him out of position to make a play) ... played really well against the two FBS opponents (Colorado State and Cal) on the schedule the past two seasons, but most of his experience came against FCS competition ... will be an age 24 NFL rookie.

SUMMARY: A two-year starter at Sacramento State, Mapu lined up as the “rover” in head coach Andy Thompson’s scheme, a hybrid nickel position. He was consistently productive in that role and started all 25 games the past two seasons, becoming the second player in school history to be named Big Sky Defensive Player of the Year (Sacramento State went 21-4 in his two seasons as the starting Rover). Mapu is a good-sized athlete with outstanding diagnose skills to quickly read pass-run and swarm to the play. His aggressiveness can be a double-edged sword. He plays with the physicality to work near the line of scrimmage, but he doesn’t have the quick twitch traits to easily recover after a false step. Overall, all 32 NFL teams are looking for long, explosive athletes who can play the run and cover, and Mapu has shown those traits as a potential matchup weapon. With his ability to identify as either a linebacker or “big” safety, he is scheme diverse with the talent to be a core special-teamer.

GRADE: 3rd-4th Round (No. 100 overall)

8. JAMMIE ROBINSON | Florida State 5105 | 191 lbs. | 4SR Cordele, Ga. (Lee County) 1/24/2001 (age 22.26) #10

BACKGROUND: Jammie (JAY-me) Robinson, who has five brothers, grew up around Cordele (about 100 miles north of the Florida-Georgia state line) and was raised by his mother (Satarius Monson). He started playing flag football at age 5 at the Crisp County Recreation Department and quickly established himself as a star at the pee wee and youth levels. Robinson attended Crisp County High School where he was teammates with Packers linebacker Quay Walker, who was one year ahead of him. Robinson saw varsity action as a freshman and was a two-way player at running back and safety. He had his breakout season as a sophomore with 1,384 rushing yards (7.3 yards per carry) and 16 touchdowns, adding 106 tackles and three interceptions on defense. As a junior, Robinson accounted for 1,056 rushing yards (8.2 average) and 16 touchdowns along with 15 receptions for 361 yards and four receiving scores. On defense, he posted 73 tackles, two interceptions and one forced fumble and also had three return touchdowns (two kicks, one punt). For his senior season, Robinson transferred to Lee County High School (a move from 3A football up to 6A football) to challenge himself as a player. His mother got a new job, and the family relocated to establish residency and make the transfer official. As a senior, Robinson focused on defense and special teams and helped Lee County to an undefeated 15-0 record and the 2018 6A state championship. He earned first team all-region honors and was named the state’s defensive player of the year with 104 tackles. Robinson was responsible for seven return touchdowns (three kicks, two punts and two interceptions) as a senior. He also lettered in track in high school.

A three-star recruit, Robinson was the No. 32 safety in the 2019 class and the No. 41 recruit in Georgia. After his sophomore season, his recruitment took off as he collected several notable offers, including those from Alabama, LSU and Notre Dame. Robinson narrowed down his final choice to Auburn, Georgia, Kentucky and South Carolina. On signing day, he committed to the Gamecocks. After two seasons as a starter at South Carolina, Robinson elected to transfer because of the coaching change (Will Muschamp was fired as head coach after the 2020 season). He entered the transfer portal and heard from several ACC and SEC programs before choosing Florida State. Shortly after he transferred, his family experienced tragedy in January 2021 when they lost their home to a fire. Robinson accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl (voted American team’s practice player of the week).

STRENGTHS: Natural eyes and anticipation ... sees both the quarterback and ball to drive on throws in front of him ... shows the same read-react urgency as a run defender ... shot out of a cannon downhill but settles his feet and stays balanced to make open-field stops ... rangy run defender who takes accurate speed angles to make stops outside his numbers ... plays a physical brand of football ... has the grit and balance to work through congestion near the line of scrimmage ... brings the same high energy every day and described as “extremely passionate” by FSU defensive coordinator Adam Fuller ... filled up the stat sheet in two seasons with the Seminoles and posted 13 career double-digit tackle games ... body held up in college, playing in every game the past four seasons.

WEAKNESSES: Undersized body type for the position with lean, short arms (smallest wingspan among all safeties in the class) ... average play strength with a frame nearly maxed out ... can be engulfed by blockers and tardy escaping contact ... doesn’t have the stature for press work ... can be out-quickened by dynamic slot receivers and will struggle to match deep speed ... turns hips prematurely versus inside routes and can be late to recover ... lacks discipline with technique and will false-step when digesting route combinations.

SUMMARY: A two-year starter at Florida State, Robinson was a field safety (two-high base shell) in defensive coordinator Adam Fuller’s scheme, also rotating down to nickel on sub downs. After transferring from South Carolina, he led the Seminoles in tackles in both of seasons in Tallahassee and became the first FSU defender to earn first team All-ACC in back-to-back years since Jalen Ramsey (2014-15). With his alignment versatility and toughness, Robinson trusts what he sees and takes fast angles to the ball in both coverage and run support. Though a strong batting average as an open-field tackler, his lack of ideal length and play strength will be more noticeable versus NFL talent. Overall, Robinson is a small-framed defensive back and labors at times when asked to run vertically, but he plays with the natural instincts and urgent read-react quickness desired for the nickel position. He is not on the same level as Jalen Pitre as an NFL prospect, but he has a similar skill set.

GRADE: 3rd-4th Round

9. CHRISTOPHER SMITH | Georgia 5105 | 192 lbs. | SSR Atlanta, Ga. (Hapeville Charter) 5/1/2000 (age 22.99) #29

BACKGROUND: Christopher Smith II, who is the oldest of two boys, was born and raised in Atlanta and got involved with sports at age 6. He attended Hapeville Charter School, a smaller school in Union City that has produced several NFL players, including Arden Key. Smith was a four-year varsity letterman, primarily at cornerback. As a junior, Smith earned all-conference honors with 32 tackles, 14 passes defended, five interceptions and one forced fumble. He led Hapeville to a 14-1 record and the 2017 2A state championship as a senior, finishing with 44 tackles, 14 passes defended, five interceptions (two returned for touchdowns) and three forced fumbles. Smith was named the 2A defensive player of the year, first team all-state with first team all-metro honors. He also lettered in track.

A four-star recruit, Smith was the No. 30 cornerback in the 2018 class and the No. 34 recruit in Georgia, five spots behind his Hapeville teammate, defensive end Kingsley Enagbare; 17 players from Hapeville’s state championship team signed college scholarships. He received his first offer from Kentucky, shortly after his sophomore season, followed by Auburn and USC. Smith received more than 30 scholarship offers and narrowed that down to three: Georgia, Michigan and Ohio State. He grew up rooting for the Bulldogs and signed with his “dream school.” His younger brother (TJ) played three years as a defensive back at Kansas State (2020-22) before transferring to Georgia Southern this offseason. Smith graduated with his degree in sport management (December 2022). He accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl.

STRENGTHS: Rangy, zone instinctive and plays with anticipation ... does an excellent job baiting throws and beating receivers to the catch point ... smooth hips to transition out of his pedal and play the post ... outstanding drive quickness to blow up screens and make plays at the line of scrimmage ... above-average ball skills and does a great job raking for the football ... only one coverage penalty as a senior (flagged for holding) ... determined tackler ... comes to balance and stays focused to wrestle receivers to the ground one-on-one ... coaches rave about his intangibles, and his teammates gave him the nickname “Soldier” (head coach Kirby Smart: “His toughness and leadership stand out.”) ... offers special teams experience (303 snaps), including a 96-yard touchdown on a blocked field goal in the 2022 SEC championship game ... started all 15 games as a senior.

WEAKNESSES: Small, thinly-built and doesn’t have the build/bulk desired at the position ... lack of length and play strength frequently show on tape ... willing tackler, but doesn’t consistently knockback or wrap up ... more of a hug-and-drag tackler than drive-through striker ... tight ends can rough him up and knock him off their route path ... doesn’t have explosive change of direction skills for quick recoveries after a misstep ... will misjudge drive angles versus slot speed, allowing easy completions in front of him ... missed three games as a junior because of a knee sprain (November 2021) ... durability could be a concern because of size.

SUMMARY: A three-year starter, Smith played free safety in head coach Kirby Smart’s 3-3-5 base scheme, also seeing time at the nickel “star” position. He played a key role in the Bulldogs’ 2021 national championship and was one of only three returning starters on defense in 2022, helping Georgia win back-to-back titles as only the 12th unanimous All-American in school history. With his peripheral awareness and closing burst, Smith has the range to jump routes and is routinely in the right place at the right time. Though he plays physical downhill, his lack of play strength and length shows on tape and will be much tougher to mask versus NFL competition. Overall, Smith looks more like a cornerback than a safety with his smallish body type, but he is a talented centerfielder with read-react ability from depth and opportunistic ball skills. Although his size will eliminate him from several teams’ draft boards, he has NFL starting potential with the right fit.

10. SYDNEY BROWN | Illinois 5096 | 211 lbs. | SSR London, Ontario (St. Stephen’s Episcopal) 3/21/2000 (age 23.10) #30

BACKGROUND: Sydney Brown, who has a sister and an identical twin brother (Chase), was born and raised in south Ontario and played youth and club football in London (also grew up wrestling, boxing and running track). He originally attended London South Collegiate Institute where he played wide receiver and safety. Looking for increased exposure as a football recruit, Brown and his brother transferred (on partial scholarship) to St. Stephen’s Episcopal School in August 2016, a private school in Bradenton, Fla. (45 miles south of Tampa). The 16-year-old twins moved in with their host family (Karen and Phil Yates). In his first year with his new school, Brown helped lead the program to the 2016 state title with 81 tackles, 2.0 tackles for loss and an interception, earning second team all-area honors. As a senior, he again led St. Stephen’s to a conference championship with 51 tackles, 7.0 tackles for loss, two interceptions and one forced fumble. Brown also lettered in track and was part of the 2018 state champion 400-meter relay (42.98) along with his twin brother. He set personal bests in the 100 meters (11.16), 200 meters (23.34) and 400 meters (50.42).

A three-star recruit, Brown was the No. 121 safety in the 2018 class and the No. 256 recruit in Florida. After his junior season, he received his first two offers from FCS McNeese State and South Dakota. A few months later, Central Michigan became his first FBS offer, and his first Power 5 offer arrived from Illinois. Brown signed and was the No. 16 recruit in the Illini’s 2018 class, one spot ahead of Kerby Joseph, another safety from Florida. The twins originally planned to attend the same school, but Chase chose Western Michigan because of the school’s flight program. However, Chase, who is two minutes older, transferred after one season, deciding to join his brother at Illinois in 2019. Brown’s father (Darren Isaac) was a running back for three seasons in the Canadian Football League (1991-93) and a former coach. His mother (Raechel Brown) is a former figure skater. Brown is a Canadian citizen and currently has a visa as an international student. He opted out of the 2022 bowl game and accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl.

PRO DAY	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	(stood on combine testing)

STRENGTHS: Thick, sculpted physique and looks like an “action figure,” according to coaches ... strict about nutrition and how he trains his body ... quick first step with above-average acceleration in pursuit ... football smart and diagnoses the run without wasting steps ... fills with purpose and control to stay underneath blocks or arrive at the ball carrier with violence ... physical in coverage (Iowa tight end Sam LaPorta: “Brown was the best player I faced. He’s tough, fast, physical.”) ... baits the quarterback into thinking he is wrapped or a step behind the route ... notched six interceptions as a senior and scored a pair of defensive touchdowns ... voted a senior captain and competes with a warrior temperament ... has the makeup needed for special teams and was a productive gunner on punt coverages in 2022 ... played a lot of college football with 50 career starts.

WEAKNESSES: Tight hips dull the sharpness of his change of direction ... lacks suddenness in coverage and struggles to match the burst of wide receivers and some tight ends ... allows too much space in coverage at times and is late in his drive/disrupt ... physical striker, but inconsistent finisher as a tackler ... needs to rely more on wrap-and-drive technique instead of the power in his shoulder ... must become more disciplined with his block anticipation and take-on skills near the line of scrimmage ... NFL scouts mention a history of concussions.

SUMMARY: A five-year starter at Illinois, Brown played strong safety in former defensive coordinator Ryan Walters’ scheme and lined up primarily in the box with some reps in the slot. After four solid seasons, he returned to the Illini in 2022 and played his best football with a Big Ten-best six interceptions, giving him 10 for his career (most since Eugene Wilson had 11 from 1999-2002). Brown plays with excellent leverage as a run defender along with the physicality and angles to make quick stops. Although his lack of explosiveness is clear versus wide receivers, he stays square in his drops versus tight ends with the smooth movements to be in the right place at the right time. Overall, Brown needs to shore up his tackling skills and discipline for NFL box duties, but he is instinctive while playing at full speed and leaves everything he has on the field. His value for an NFL team will be as a core special-teamer and rotational/subpackage box safety.

GRADE: 4th Round

11. DANIEL SCOTT | California 6007 | 208 lbs. | 6SR Pasadena, Calif. (St. Francis) 10/26/1998 (age 24.50) #32

BACKGROUND: Daniel Scott, who has an older brother, grew up outside of Los Angeles and participated in multiple sports, including AAU basketball and surfing. He originally played flag football before starting tackle football in fifth grade. Scott attended St. Francis High School, a Catholic all-boys school, where he was a three-year letterman and played on both sides of the ball as a safety and wide receiver – he wanted to be Wes Welker. As a junior, he accounted for 47 tackles and two interceptions on defense, adding 32 receptions for 567 yards and four touchdowns on offense. Scott produced a banner senior season and was named league defensive player of the year, all-area player of the year and first team all-division. A captain in his final season, he finished with 70 tackles, 4.0 tackles for loss and five interceptions and also led the team in receiving with 41 catches for 688 yards and 10 touchdowns, adding one rushing touchdown and one punt return touchdown. Scott also played point guard on the basketball team and lettered in baseball.

A three-star recruit, Scott was the No. 110 athlete in the 2017 class and the No. 154 recruit in California. With no Division I scholarship offers midway through his senior season, his recruitment was a slow burn. Scott eventually picked up offers from Fresno State and Hawaii and was ready to commit to the Bulldogs. However, California defensive backs coach Gerald Alexander attended one of his basketball games and extended a late offer that Scott accepted. He was part of Justin Wilcox’s first signing class at Cal. He took advantage of the extra year of eligibility granted because of the pandemic and returned to Berkley for his sixth season in 2022. His father (Duane) played college football and had several NFL tryouts before medically retiring because of his knee. Scott graduated with his degree in sociology (May 2021) and earned a graduate certificate in business administration (December 2021). He accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl.

PRO DAY	6010	209	30 1/4	9 3/4	74 5/8	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	(stood on Combine testing)

STRENGTHS: Good-sized athlete with attractive measurables ... fluid and fast on the field; testing data confirmed athleticism ... rangy backend skills with the field vision to digest multiple routes and maintain spacing ... locates and judges the flight of the ball with go-and-get-it skills ... led the team in interceptions as both a junior and senior ... Cal coaches trusted him as a run defender ... quick trigger once he sinks to spring-and-sting ball carriers ... above-average blitzing skills because of his speed and timing (see 2022 UNLV tape) ... has a ton of special teams experience (11 tackles and 661 snaps) and earned the team's special teams MVP award in 2019 ... voted a team captain ... intangibles give him an edge.

WEAKNESSES: Will open gate prematurely and lose leverage ... can be stemmed out of position by body fakes ... off-man coverage responsibilities are not a strong suit ... physical, strong run defender, but has unreliable tendencies as an open-field tackler ... inconsistent breakdown mechanics create wild angles (had multiple missed tackles on almost every 2022 tape studied) ... needs to be more disciplined in response to play action ... doesn't have ideal length or shed strength to easily detach from blockers ... will turn 25 during NFL rookie season.

SUMMARY: A two-year starter at California, Scott was a rotational safety in head coach Justin Wilcox's zone-matching defense. He posted strong production in his two seasons as a starter and turned heads with his testing at the combine – his 6.75 three-cone and 4.17 short shuttle were No. 1 among safeties at the combine. A staple of Wilcox's scheme is versatility, and Scott embodied that with his range and ball-tracking skills to make plays in the deep third of the field while also working in the box as a run defender and blitz. He is quick to react but was caught out of position too often and allowed a lot of completions on his watch (Caleb Williams had a productive night against him on the 2022 USC tape). Overall, Scott has better traits than tape and needs to become more buttoned up in several areas, but NFL teams are always searching for rangy, quick-footed safeties with his set of skills. His versatility on defense and special teams will be an attractive selling point on draft day.

GRADE: 4th-5th Round

12. JASON TAYLOR II | Oklahoma State 5115 | 204 lbs. | SSR Oklahoma City, Okla. (Carl Albert) 12/30/1999 (age 23.33) #25

BACKGROUND: Jason Taylor II, who has two sisters, was born and raised in Oklahoma City and started playing football at age 7. He wanted to follow in the footsteps of his father (Jason), who played defensive line at FCS Langston. Tragically, his father was shot and killed outside of an Oklahoma City convenience store on New Year's Eve (December 2007), a day after Taylor's eighth birthday. The family moved to Midwest City, Okla., when Taylor was in middle school, and he attended Carl Albert High School where was a four-year varsity letterman on offense (wide receiver) and defense (safety). As a junior, he helped Carl Albert to a 13-1 record and the 2016 5A state championship with 72 tackles and four interceptions. As a senior, Taylor led the program to a second-straight state championship with a 14-0 record in 2017. He finished his final season with nine interceptions on defense and 42 catches for 796 yards and 14 touchdowns on offense, earning first team all-state and district MVP honors. Taylor also lettered in basketball.

A three-star recruit, Taylor was the No. 59 safety in the 2018 class and the No. 14 recruit in Oklahoma. He received offers from Memphis and Tulsa, but he had his eyes on Stillwater once Oklahoma State offered him a scholarship. Taylor committed to head coach Mike Gundy prior to his junior season. His older sister (Ja'Lynn) played college volleyball at Langston in 2017. Taylor accepted his invitation to the 2023 NFLPA Collegiate Bowl and was also a late callup to the Senior Bowl.

PRO DAY	5114	203	32 1/8	9 3/8	77 3/4	-	-	-	-	-	4.20	7.16	(stood on Combine testing)

STRENGTHS: Well-built with good length for his size ... aggressive working from the top down versus both the pass and run ... plays with functional range and lower body explosion (43-inch vertical was second among all combine prospects) ... above-average instincts from the post or box ... anticipates well and trusts his vision to decisively break on crossers/in-breakers ... balances his eyeline between quarterback and route mid-motion ... accounted for 19 passes defended and eight interceptions over the past two seasons ... didn't commit a penalty in college ... fills inside/outside run lanes with conviction ... faces up the ball carrier and drives through his target as a tackler ... offers a ton of experience on special teams (536 snaps) ... tape got better and better each season.

WEAKNESSES: Follows the eyes of the quarterback to the ball, and savvy passers will know how to use it against him ... will take the cheese and false step, creating open windows ... inconsistent deep-third tracking, and the ball can get over the top of him as a single-high defender ... lacks elite long speed to hold up in mirror-and-match man coverage versus the slot ... inconsistencies as a tackler show at times ... must improve his footwork and fundamentals in the open field ... doesn't always play through blockers with his eyes and can get stuck at the point of attack.

SUMMARY: A two-year starter at Oklahoma State, Taylor was a field safety in former defensive coordinator Derek Mason’s scheme. His play and production improved each season in Stillwater, and he created big plays with eight interceptions the past two seasons and three career touchdowns (two defensive, one special teams). Though he makes some missteps in man-to-man, Taylor offers athletic range and ball skills from the post/deep half and has outstanding eyes from depth to read and track the football. He can run the alley and takes fast angles to the ball carrier, but he needs to stay controlled with his finishing fundamentals. Overall, Taylor needs to clean up his overaggressive tendencies, but he displays above-average instincts and play urgency to the football. He projects best as a post safety in the NFL with core special teams ability.

GRADE: 4th-5th Round

13. CHAMARRI CONNER | Virginia Tech 6000 | 202 lbs. | 5SR Jacksonville, Fla. (Trinity) 7/11/2000 (age 22.79) #1

BACKGROUND: Chamarri (chuh-MAR-ee) Conner, who is one of four children, was born and raised in Jacksonville and started playing football at age 6. He also started playing basketball as a kid and continued all the way through high school. Conner attended Trinity Christian Academy where he was a three-year varsity starter, primarily as a nickel safety (played in same secondary as the Patriots’ Shaun Wade). Conner helped Trinity to an undefeated 14-0 record as a sophomore with 70 tackles, 5.0 tackles for loss, seven passes defended, two interceptions (one returned for a touchdown) and one forced fumble. As a junior, Conner earned all-conference honors with a team-best 99 tackles along with five passes defended, one interception, one forced fumble, one blocked field goal and a pair of touchdowns (fumble recovery and punt return). As a senior, he again led the team with 107 tackles and finished with 1.5 sacks, one forced fumble, one blocked field goal and a scoop-and-score touchdown. Trinity won the 3A state championship Conner’s sophomore and junior years (four straight state titles for the program). He also lettered in basketball.

A four-star recruit, Conner was the No. 24 safety in the 2018 class and the No. 55 recruit in Florida. He started to receive FBS scholarship offers as a sophomore from Oregon State, Wake Forest and North Carolina. Several high-profile offers arrived like those from Florida and Michigan, but Conner committed to Virginia Tech midway through his junior season and signed after his senior year. He was the No. 5-ranked recruit in the Hokies 2018 class. Conner took advantage of the extra year of eligibility granted because of the pandemic and returned to Blacksburg for his fifth season in 2022. Conner accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl.

PRO DAY	6001	209	31 1/4	9 1/4	76 3/8	-	-	-	-	-	4.30	6.91	-	(stood on Combine testing)

STRENGTHS: Versatile athlete and controlled mover ... quick-footed to mirror transitions from the slot (receivers or tight ends) ... displays astute play recognition to quickly process what he sees ... zone instinctive and balances sightlines between the backfield and routes ... uses well-timed swipes at the catch point to make plays on the ball before it reaches its destination ... urgent tackler and flashes a burst when closing ... won’t hesitate when locking horns with heavy runners ... was a special teams ace in college, logging 802 snaps ... durable and started 48 straight games to finish his career (school record since Virginia Tech joined the ACC) ... 314 career tackles rank No. 10 in school history.

WEAKNESSES: Gives up a step of separation when he delays at the top of his pedal ... average speed shows when tasked with covering go/fade patterns from the slot ... inconsistent feel in coverage with back to the football ... more likely to hand fight downfield than turn his head and find the ball (see pass interference on 2022 West Virginia tape) ... guilty of stopping his feet at contact and not driving through the ball carrier ... missed too many tackles because of erratic tendencies: shallow angles, leaving his feet prematurely or throwing his shoulder and hoping for the best ... set career-lows across the board with 2022 production.

SUMMARY: A four-year starter at Virginia Tech, Conner moved to safety in head coach Brent Pry’s 4-3 with both man and zone principles. He moved between whip linebacker, safety and slot cornerback over his time in Blacksburg and despite lackluster production in 2022, he said he learned more in his one season under Pry than in previous years. A fearless, competitive athlete, Conner offers versatility with his physicality near the line of scrimmage and the range to turn and run. But he is at his best in zone where he can read, drive and make plays. Overall, Conner needs to iron out his tackling and become more reliable with his back to the ball in coverage, but his versatility, play recognition and baseline athleticism will help him compete for a nickel role. His special teams background should stand out from Day 1 of training camp.

14. JAY WARD | LSU 6006 | 188 lbs. | 4SR Moultrie, Ga. (Colquitt County) 7/13/2000 (age 22.79) #5

BACKGROUND: Je’Dacus “Jay” Ward, who is the middle child of three boys, was born and raised in Moultrie (about an hour north of Tallahassee). He attended Colquitt County High School where he was a three-year varsity letterman as a defensive back. Ward became a full-time starter as a junior and registered 46 tackles, 12 passes defended, four interceptions and one forced fumble. As a senior, he led Colquitt County to a 14-1 record with the only loss coming in the 2018 7A state championship game. Ward finished his final season with 67 tackles, 15 passes defended, six interceptions (one returned for a touchdown) and one forced fumble, earning All-American, all-state and all-conference honors. He posted 11 career interceptions and also blocked four field goals and a punt. Ward played baseball at Colquitt County as an underclassman and joined the track team as a junior. He set personal bests in the 100 meters (11.54), high jump (6 feet 4 inches), long jump (20’9) and triple jump (45’7).

A three-star recruit, Ward was the No. 50 cornerback in the 2019 class and the No. 54 recruit in Georgia. Although not considered a top-500 recruit nationally, he received several high-profile offers from programs such as Florida State, Ohio State and Texas A&M. After his junior year, Kentucky became his first offer, and he committed to the Wildcats in the summer before his senior year. However, he decommitted in November 2018 after several new offers arrived, including one from LSU, the team he grew up supporting. On national signing day, his family and friends expected him to choose Kentucky, but LSU was able to flip him the night before, and he signed with the Tigers. His older brother (Johnny) was a four-year starting defensive back at South Florida (2013-16). His younger brother (Jaheim) is a rising sophomore defensive back at FCS Austin Peay. Ward accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl.

STRENGTHS: Good body length ... flashes burst in his mirror movements on man-cover reps ... above-average range that is expanded even further with his high-effort style to chase down plays from different angles on the field ... displays natural ball skills to find and attack passing lanes ... plays with the competitive chops to charge downhill and attack blocks ... targets the hip and belt buckle of ball carriers on tackle attempts ... blocked two field goals in his career (blocked four field goals in high school) ... served as the leader of the LSU defense ... one of the more versatile defensive backs in the class with starting experience at cornerback, safety and nickel.

WEAKNESSES: Thinly-built with below-average play strength ... misses too many tackles because of technique and finishing issues (see 2022 Florida State and Auburn tapes) ... will go for the jarring hit or strip, allowing the ball carrier to slip out of his grasp ... concedes too much route space and needs to play more situationally aware, especially at the sticks ... often arrives at the ball without full control of his body, leading to penalties (three pass interference penalties and three personal fouls in 2022) ... suffered a torn meniscus during 2020 fall camp and required surgery.

SUMMARY: A three-year starter at LSU, Ward played all over the secondary in defensive coordinator Matt House’s scheme. He split his 23 starts for the Tigers at safety (13 starts), slot cornerback (6) and outside cornerback (4) and was described as the “glue” of the defense. There is a fine line between versatile and tweener, and NFL scouts are split on which side of the fence Ward falls. He is coordinated in coverage with cornerback ball skills, but he lacks high-end athleticism and anticipation in space. Though he is more than willing in run support, his marginal strength leads to matchup opportunities for tight ends and missed tackles. Overall, Ward has strong football character and takes pride running alleys and crowding catch points, but his tweener traits create position/scheme fit questions. Despite being listed as a safety, he is more of a true nickel and special-teamer.

GRADE: 5th Round

15. BRANDON HILL | Pittsburgh

5103 | 193 lbs. | 4JR

Apopka, Fla. (Wekiva)

BACKGROUND: Brandon Hill, who is one of two boys, was born in Queens, N.Y., before his family moved to the Orlando area when he was 3. He enrolled at Wekiva High School in Apopka where he was teammates with several future FBS players, including Clemson defensive tackle Tyler Davis. Hill was a four-year letterman on varsity and played both ways as a wide receiver and safety. As a junior, he collected three interceptions and led the program to a 12-2 record and 2017 district championship. He earned first team all-conference as a senior with 29 tackles, 4.0 tackles for loss, 12 passes defended and five interceptions, adding 202 rushing yards and six rushing touchdowns on offense. Hill led Wekiva to an 11-2 record and back-to-back district championships in 2018. He also lettered in track and set personal bests in the 100 meters (11.48), long jump (20 feet 6 inches) and high jump (5'0).

A three-star recruit, Hill was the No. 50 safety in the 2019 class and the No. 77 recruit in Florida. He had a breakout junior season at Wekiva and picked up Power 5 offers, including those from Boston College, Duke, Georgia Tech, Iowa State, Maryland, Minnesota, Missouri, NC State, Purdue and Virginia. Hill visited Pittsburgh in June 2018 and was won over by the city and coaches, committing almost on the spot. He was the third-highest ranked recruit in head coach Pat Narduzzi’s 2019 class. Hill opted out of the 2022 bowl game and skipped his senior season to enter the 2023 NFL Draft.

STRENGTHS: Plays fast on tape and lit up stopwatches during testing (4.43 40-yard dash was No. 1 among safeties at the combine) ... ranges well off the hash to make plays at the sideline or overlap zones ... sudden out of transitions and doesn’t waste steps searching for balance ... resets his vision quickly and gets back into position after play-fakes ... plays the ball well in front of him ... aggressive high-to-low tackler and keeps foot on the gas through contact ... restricts cutback angles ... vocal presence and often takes command in the middle of the huddle to spark teammates ... athleticism helped him score a pair of long touchdowns on defense in his career.

WEAKNESSES: Frame is shredded and muscular, but small and maxed out ... lack of length and average play strength will be more pronounced when matched up versus NFL tight ends ... lackluster eye discipline and spacing leads to inconsistent coverage angles ... small wingspan and will struggle to win jump-ball situations ... below-average ball production on 2022 tape ... tackling looks pristine on some 2022 tapes (Georgia Tech), but then appears to be a real issue on others (West Virginia) ... inconsistent centering his target on the move and often leads with shoulder instead of wrapping up.

SUMMARY: A two-year starter at Pittsburgh, Hill lined up as the boundary safety in head coach Pat Narduzzi’s quarters-based scheme. He announced himself as a legitimate NFL prospect during his 2021 season, though you must scour the 2022 tape to find his plays on the football. Hill is explosive in and out of his speed turns and when flying downhill, living up to his fast 40-yard dash. However, wild angles dent his tackling batting average and leave him out of position in coverage. Overall, Hill doesn’t have the instincts of a playmaker and needs to improve his spatial relationship with route runners, but he covers a ton of ground and hunts for plays with his aggressive nature. He projects as a potential backup and special-teamer.

16. GERVARRIUS OWENS | Houston6003 | 195 lbs. | 6SRMoore, Okla. (Southmoore)10/14/1999 (age 23.54)#2

BACKGROUND: Gervarrius (ger-VAHR-ee-us) Owens was born and raised in Greenville, Miss. before his family moved to Atlanta and then to Oklahoma. The summer before he started high school, his family lost their home when an EF-5 tornado tore through Moore. Temporarily displaced in Norman, he enrolled at Southmoore High School in 2013 where he was a four-year varsity letterman, playing both ways as a safety and wide receiver. Owens posted 88 tackles, 7.0 tackles for loss and 3.0 sacks as a sophomore. As a junior, he finished with 64 tackles, 13.0 tackles for loss, 10 passes defended and a pair of interceptions, adding 15 receptions for 406 yards (27.1 average) and seven touchdowns on offense. Owens led Southmoore in receiving as a senior with 40 catches for 811 yards and eight touchdowns. He also accounted for 58 tackles and a forced fumble in 2016. Owens also lettered in track and wrestling.

A three-star recruit, Owens was the No. 93 safety in the 2017 class and the No. 21 recruit in Oklahoma. His offer sheet started to fill up after his junior season, including those from Ohio, Cincinnati and Iowa State (his first Power 5 offer). The summer before his senior season, Owens committed to Memphis, but decommitted three months later. On signing day, he chose Kansas State over Houston, Memphis and Purdue. However, he didn’t report to the football team and didn’t play in 2017. Owens enrolled at Northeastern Oklahoma A&M College where he was a juco All-American with 51 tackles and three interceptions. He was a three-star juco recruit and the No. 5 juco safety in the 2019 class. Owens signed with Minnesota and was expected to enroll over the summer. However, he was released from his letter of intent in June and signed with Houston. Owens graduated with his degree in sociology. He accepted his invitation to the 2023 East-West Shrine Bowl, but he left early in the week for the birth of his son.

STRENGTHS: Long, good-looking body type ... quick read-and-trigger skills versus both the run and pass ... has twitch to accelerate smoothly and the long strides to cover a lot of ground ... zone-aware as a floater ... tracks the ball well with the wingspan to do something about it when he arrives ... played cornerback growing up and at the juco level and doesn’t look awkward in his turn-and-run transitions ... physical run filler who won’t hesitate to slam his body into oncoming traffic ... shows an understanding of leverage in his pursuit ... uses his hands to punch his way off blockers ... voted a senior captain ... tape shows a high-motor player ... experienced on special teams coverages (361 career snaps) ... started 42 games at Houston.

WEAKNESSES: Choppy footwork in man coverage and can be crossed up by shifty route runners ... made some impressive plays on the ball on tape but also missed too many should-have-been interceptions ... plays with more violence than brute strength ... tackling mechanics leave much to be desired ... hugs high and wrestles to the ground instead of wrap-driving through the target’s belt ... late to throttle down, sink and control his body to square, giving ball carriers cut back opportunities ... missed one game as a senior because of a concussion (September 2022) ... will be an age 24 NFL rookie.

SUMMARY: A four-year starter at Houston, Owens played a free safety role in defensive coordinator Doug Belk’s 4-2-5 base scheme. He played 46 games the past four seasons for the Cougars (missed only one game) and proved himself as a factor at all three levels of the field. Owens reads the backfield action well for efficient response times as he races to the action, though his field vision and cover skills were better in zone compared to man. He has the mentality and toughness for downhill run support, but his control and finish as a tackler must improve. Overall, Owens lacks consistency in several areas (ball skills, tackling, route recognition), but he anticipates with the aggressive athleticism pro coaches will appreciate. He projects as a backup and special-teamer who can be more with NFL coaching.

GRADE: 5th-6th Round

17. ANTHONY JOHNSON JR. | Iowa State5115 | 205 lbs. | 5SRSt. Petersburg, Fla. (St. Pete)12/2/1999 (age 23.40)#1

BACKGROUND: Anthony Johnson Jr. attended St. Petersburg High School where he became a starting cornerback as a sophomore and posted 31 tackles, 16 passes defended and a team-best six interceptions. As a junior, he led St. Petersburg to an 8-2 finish with 46 tackles, 23 passes defended and seven interceptions to earn all-state honors. As a senior, Johnson again took home all-state honors and was named all-conference for the third straight season. Despite missing time because of injury, he finished the 2017 season with 36 tackles, four interceptions, two forced fumbles and a blocked punt for a touchdown. Johnson also saw time on offense and finished his prep career with seven touchdowns (three receiving, two interception returns, two punt returns). He lettered in track and set personal bests in the 100 meters (11.19), 200 meters (23.06), 400 meters (49.22) and long jump (19 feet 10.5 inches).

A three-star recruit, Johnson was the No. 116 cornerback in the 2018 class and the No. 215 recruit in Florida. South Florida was the first school to offer him a scholarship in April 2016 when he was a sophomore. Other Group of 5 schools like Bowling Green, Buffalo, Marshall, Tulane and Western Kentucky soon followed. Iowa State became his only Power 5 offer, and he committed to head coach Matt Campbell in May 2017. Johnson was part of the same Cyclones’ recruiting class as Will McDonald and Brock Purdy. He took advantage of the extra year of eligibility granted because of the pandemic and returned to Ames (and switched positions from cornerback to safety) for his fifth season in 2022. Johnson graduated with his degree in communications. He accepted his invitation to the 2023 NFLPA Collegiate Bowl.

PRO DAY	6003	205	31 7/8	8 5/8	75 7/8	-	-	-	-	-	4.31	7.07	12 (stood on Combine runs, jumps)

STRENGTHS: Solidly built and has worked hard to develop his body (added 45 pounds since enrolling at Iowa State at 160 pounds) ... displays the athleticism to mirror runners or defend the cutback ... bursts to finish as a downhill run filler ... understands field leverage to restrict run lanes, forcing ball carriers towards pursuit ... has functional drop range with strong cover awareness ... moves with the transitional quickness of a former cornerback ... NFL scouts rave about his character ... known as a great teammate and competitor who will be a natural fit in any NFL locker room ... was a regular on punt return and punt coverages (418 career special teams snaps) ... durable and finished his career with 53-straight starts (54 starts overall).

WEAKNESSES: Tends to play reactionary and late to jump throws ... below-average ball production with zero interceptions in 42 starts at cornerback (first two interceptions came at safety in 2022) ... choppy footwork and average hip flexibility disrupt his balance in space, especially when attempting to cover slot receivers ... limited recovery speed/skills once he is drawn out of position by play-fakes or route stems ... ball carriers escape his grasp more than they should ... needs to do a better job calming his feet to break down and finish in the open field.

SUMMARY: A five-year starter at Iowa State, Johnson played free safety in defensive coordinator Jon Heacock’s 3-3-5 base scheme, lining up mostly as a nickel in the slot. After four years at cornerback, he transitioned to a hybrid safety-nickel role as a super senior and passed former Texas quarterback Colt McCoy in the record books for the most career starts (54) in Big 12 history. Johnson plays with mirroring range in man coverage and against the run and reads concepts well in zone coverage to fluidly work his area. The ball seems to find him more than he finds the ball, and he is still learning the ins and outs as a true safety. Overall, Johnson might not have a sky-high ceiling at the next level, but his character, experience and functional size/speed traits raise his floor and will keep him earning an NFL paycheck. His game and journey are reminiscent of Rams’ 2019 seventh-rounder Nick Scott.

18. RONNIE HICKMAN | Ohio State 6004 | 203 lbs. | 4JR South Orange, N.J. (DePaul Catholic) 10/11/2001 (age 21.54) #14

BACKGROUND: Ronnie “Rocket” Hickman Jr., who has four siblings (two brothers on his mom’s side and two sisters on his dad’s side), grew up in South Orange and started playing football and lacrosse at a young age. He played for the Maplewood-South Orange Packers at the pee wee level with his father (Ronnie Sr.) serving as commissioner of the program and his mother (Hanifah Crawley) the president. Hickman enrolled at DePaul Catholic High School in Wayne where he was a two-sport standout in football and lacrosse. A four-year letterman, he saw varsity action as a freshman and played both offense (wide receiver) and defense (safety). After a breakout sophomore season, Hickman led DePaul to an 8-3 record and the 2017 non-public Group 3 state title, finishing his junior year with 44 catches for 809 yards and 10 touchdowns along with 44 tackles, 11 passes defended and two interceptions. In four games as a senior, he posted 26 catches for 609 yards and nine touchdowns with 19 tackles on defense before a knee injury ended his 2018 season. He finished his prep career with 1,418 receiving yards and 22 total touchdowns. A U.S. Army All-American in football, Hickman was also a high school All-American in lacrosse and played at the club level for Building Blocks Lacrosse.

A four-star recruit, Hickman was the No. 10 safety in the 2019 class and the No. 3 recruit in New Jersey. His first scholarship offer came from Rutgers to play lacrosse, and he committed as a freshman. However, Hickman realized football was his better long-term sport, especially once he started to receive several high-profile offers. He narrowed down his final six to Florida, Notre Dame, Ohio State, Penn State, Rutgers and Virginia Tech. He grew up a Buckeyes fan, so there was no surprise when he committed to Ohio State in April 2018. Because of his torn ACL as a senior, Hickman was forced to redshirt in 2019 as he rehabbed. When he was a toddler, he was given the “Rocket” nickname by his father because of the way he would try to take off and run when he was crawling. Hickman graduated with a degree in human development and family sciences. He elected to skip his senior season and enter the 2023 NFL Draft. Hickman accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl.

PRO DAY	6006	209	33 1/4	9 3/8	78	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	- (no workout – right hip)

STRENGTHS: Long, lean-muscled frame ... talented linear athlete to pedal, collect himself and drive ... didn’t surrender many explosive plays with zero touchdowns allowed in 2022 ... attacks the run with fast angles, finding the quickest route from A to B ... uses long-striding speed to beat blockers to the point and leverage outside run plays ... utilizes wide base and low pads to be a physical tackler ... was a regular on kick coverage and punt return duties in 2022 ... finished his Buckeyes career with 26 straight starts ... experienced in the box, slot and as a single-high defender.

WEAKNESSES: Needs to better use his long levers to fight off blocks for quicker detachments ... plays tall and tight-hipped, impeding the acceleration out of transitions versus slot speed ... lateral agility will be challenged versus NFL tight ends in isolated matchups ... questionable peripheral vision and late to feel route combinations mid-pedal ... play recognition tends to be a half beat behind ... doesn't take many chances in coverage ... can tweak tackling mechanics to be more reliable and forceful ... needs to continue bulking up and would benefit by getting to 210-215 pounds ... suffered a torn ACL in his right knee (October 2018) as a senior in high school, forcing him to redshirt at Ohio State; unable to work out at the combine or pro day because of a right hip labrum injury (March 2023).

SUMMARY: A two-year starter at Ohio State, Hickman played the “adjuster” safety position in defensive coordinator Jim Knowles’ 4-2-5 base scheme. After playing the hybrid “bullet” role as a linebacker/safety in 2021, he transitioned to more of a free safety as a junior, which cut his tackles in half from the previous year, but he led the Buckeyes in passes defended in 2022. Hickman takes sound angles to the ball when his eyes are in position, and his keys help him anticipate the play design. However, his tape does not show a quick-reaction player from depth, and his conservative nature led to ball production left on the field. Overall, Hickman is a long, linear athlete with baseline physical traits, but you wish he saw things a half second sooner and was more aggressive making plays on the ball. He projects as a special-teamer and rotational NFL “robber” safety.

19. KAEVON MERRIWEATHER | Iowa 6000 | 205 lbs. | 5SR Belleville, Mich. (Belleville) 12/20/1999 (age 23.35) #26

BACKGROUND: Kaevon Merriweather, who is the oldest of two boys, was born and raised outside of Detroit by his mother (LaTanya Franklin). He played multiple sports growing up but gravitated toward basketball as his go-to sport. Merriweather attended Romulus High School where he was a three-year letterman point guard. To help with conditioning, he decided to join the football team as a junior and recorded 34 tackles and 8.0 tackles for loss as a defensive end and linebacker, earning second team all-conference honors. For enhanced exposure at a bigger program, Merriweather transferred to Belleville High School for his senior year and planned to only play basketball. However, the Belleville coaches convinced him to join the football team as a defensive back (after his summer AAU schedule was complete). Merriweather finished the 2017 season with 43 tackles, 4.0 tackles for loss and 1.0 sack. Along with basketball and football, he also lettered in track and posted a personal-best 23.38 in the 200 meters.

A three-star recruit, Merriweather was the No. 156 safety in the 2018 class and the No. 45 recruit in Michigan. As a basketball recruit, he received offers from Western Michigan and Ferris State and planned to commit to WMU after his AAU season finished in summer 2017. However, Merriweather started to see college football as a realistic path. Midway through his senior year, several programs took interest, including Iowa defensive coordinator Phil Parker. The Hawkeyes offered him days before signing day, which ended up being the only football offer he received. Merriweather opted out of the 2022 bowl game and accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl.

STRENGTHS: Above-average athlete for the position ... strong frontside and backside pursuit to the football ... flashes the closing speed downhill to cover up screen passes and force short gains ... runs the alley with urgency ... stays dialed in with his eyes in the right place to pick up on play indicators ... didn't put many unforced errors on tape with only one career penalty, and it was declined ... communicates pre-snap movement based on his reads ... was the leader of the defensive back room with a “smart, inquisitive” nature, according to coaches ... presented with the Duke Slater Award for his “cooperation with media and professional integrity” ... versatile experience playing in the box or in space.

WEAKNESSES: Rigid hip fluidity and lacks burst off his spot, which shortens his range ... doesn't always play as fast as he tested ... ball skills are only average ... took advantage of poor decisions by quarterbacks but won't create much ball production on his own ... has a bad habit of setting his feet prematurely instead of driving through targets as a ball carrier ... though chase skills are urgent, pursuit angles lack precision ... needs to be more efficient escaping blocks ... missed most of the 2019 season because of a lingering right foot injury (September 2019) ... paltry special teams resume for a safety with his athleticism.

SUMMARY: A three-year starter at Iowa, Merriweather was a versatile safety in defensive coordinator Phil Parker's press-man and zone-match schemes. He had more basketball scholarships than football offers out of high school, and his coverage skills improved each season, setting career bests as a senior. Merriweather was versatile for the Hawkeyes as he rotated between strong, free and slot duties but was at his best driving downhill or lurking underneath zones. He can be manipulated by savvy quarterbacks and play designs, leading to inconsistent response times versus both the pass and run. Overall, Merriweather doesn't have the college tape that suggests he will be a playmaker in the NFL, but his instincts and athletic traits are both at or slightly above the baseline. He is a potential NFL backup if he can prove himself on special teams.

GRADE: 6th Round

20. DEMARCCO HELLAMS | Alabama 6005 | 203 lbs. | 4SR Washington, D.C. (DeMatha) 6/5/2000 (age 22.89) #2

BACKGROUND: DeMarcco “Marcco” Hellams (HELL-ums), who has a brother and sister, grew up in southeast Washington D.C. near the Maryland border. He played youth football for the Watkins Hornets in the Capitol Hill neighborhood (coached by his father, Delante Sr.) followed by the West Lake Bulldogs in eighth grade. Hellams enrolled at DeMatha Catholic High School, a private all-boys school and football powerhouse, where he was teammates with several future FBS players, including Chase Young (Ohio State), Anthony McFarland (Maryland), Nick Cross (Maryland) and Olu Oluwatimi (Michigan). He saw varsity reps as a freshman and helped DeMatha win state championships in 2015 and 2016, his first two seasons in the program. A two-way player as a wide receiver and defensive back, Hellams was named the metro offensive player of the year as a senior with 78 receptions, 1,469 yards and 21 touchdowns. On defense, he posted 12 interceptions (three returned for touchdowns), including an interception against Gonzaga’s Caleb Williams that sealed DeMatha’s triple overtime win against Gonzaga (Williams got his revenge in the playoffs). Hellams also lettered in track with personal bests in the 100 meters (12.24), 200 meters (24.50) and long jump (18 feet 5.5 inches).

A four-star recruit, Hellams was the No. 8 safety in the 2019 class, the No. 3 recruit in Maryland (behind Cross) and the No. 84 overall recruit nationally. Hellams received his first scholarship offer (Maryland) before he enrolled in high school. Several national programs followed, including Michigan, Notre Dame, Ohio State, Penn State and Tennessee. After his junior season, Alabama officially offered, and Hellams was sold after his official visit to Tuscaloosa, committing the summer before his senior season. His older brother (Delante Jr.) was a starting wide receiver with DeMarcco on DeMatha’s 2016 title team before signing with FCS Stony Brook (2017-22), finishing his career with 75 receptions, 1,098 yards and three touchdowns. Hellams graduated with his degree in communication studies (December 2022). He accepted his invitation to the 2023 Senior Bowl but missed most of the week because of a concussion.

STRENGTHS: Steps downhill to make open-field stops with his wide, squared base ... stays centered when filling to wrap and secure ball carriers ... healthy appetite for contact working high to low ... coordinated mover in space with smooth hips and footwork ... covers a lot of ground and trusts his active play style to lead him to the football ... holds up well when asked to cover tight ends or backs in man coverage ... stays controlled downfield to track and stay in position to make a play ... tougher than a $2 steak and benefited from the “older brother” theory ... experienced on special teams coverages (400 career snaps) ... durable and played in all 54 games over the past four seasons.

WEAKNESSES: Tight pedal with unbalanced transitions ... struggles when asked to match speed/quickness in the slot ... doesn’t have the recovery athleticism to make up for lost steps in space ... inconsistent eyes in zone and needs to better sort through route combinations ... needs to better toggle his eyes between the quarterback and route to jump routes ... takes aggressive outside angles and invites runners to cut back ... suffered a concussion during Senior Bowl practices (February 2023) ... never earned All-SEC honors in four college seasons.

SUMMARY: A three-year starter at Alabama, Hellams was the free safety in head coach Nick Saban’s multiple scheme, also seeing time in the slot and box. He showed improvements in each of his four seasons in Tuscaloosa and led the Crimson Tide with 108 tackles as a senior (No. 3 in the SEC), including six games with double-digit tackles. Hellams is quick to trigger in the run game with physical and sound open-field tackling mechanics. He flies around the field and has solid tape covering tight ends, but his anticipation and zone eyes must improve for the next level. Overall, Hellams will struggle to mask his lack of recovery speed, balance and burst versus NFL athletes, but he always seems to be around the ball and competes with the attacking demeanor that fills up the stat sheet. He projects as an NFL strong safety and low-hole defender who should be a regular on special teams.

GRADE: 6th Round

21. BRANDON JOSEPH | Notre Dame 6003 | 202 lbs. | 4JR College Station, Texas (College Station) 2/5/2001 (age 22.23) #16

BACKGROUND: Brandon Joseph grew up in College Station and spent a lot of time on the Texas A&M campus, as both of his parents worked for the school. His mother (Gina) is a lawyer and a member of the school’s general counsel, and his father (Jerome) works in IT in the health science center. Joseph played football throughout his childhood in youth and 7-on-7 leagues, primarily as a quarterback and wide receiver. He attended College Station High School where he continued playing offense and served as a return man, but his focus switched to defense as a sophomore when he added safety duties. As a junior, Joseph helped College Station to a 14-2 record, including the 2017 Texas 5A state championship. As a senior, he earned all-state honors and finished with 95 tackles, 10 passes defended, five interceptions and two forced fumbles. Joseph finished his prep career with a school record of 16 interceptions and recorded three touchdowns (kick return, punt return, fumble recovery). He also played basketball as a freshman and sophomore and lettered in track (relays and jumps), setting personal bests in the high jump (5 feet 10 inches), long jump (20’6.5) and triple jump (43’4.25).

A three-star recruit, Joseph was the No. 83 safety in the 2019 class and the No. 130 recruit in Texas. Despite growing up on the Texas A&M campus with close ties to the school (and season tickets), he never received an offer from the Aggies. He started to receive FBS offers after his junior season, including from several Ivy League schools (Dartmouth, Harvard, Cornell) and Power 5 programs (Arizona, Colorado, Iowa State, Purdue, Utah, Vanderbilt). Joseph ultimately committed to Northwestern over Texas Tech. After three seasons with the Wildcats, he entered the transfer portal and heard from dozens of schools, seriously considering Baylor and Oregon. However, Joseph had his eyes on Notre Dame, which was the only program he visited before signing with newly hired head coach Marcus Freeman. He enrolled in South Bend in January 2022. Joseph was on pace to graduate in December 2022, but his transfer added additional credit hours and pushed back his expected graduation date. Joseph decided to skip his final season of eligibility and enter the 2023 NFL Draft.

STRENGTHS: Adequate height/speed mix for the position ... stays controlled in man-cover transitions and shows a natural feel for matching routes from off-coverage ... reads well from the post to accurately leverage the deep third of the field ... keeps head on a swivel to sustain eye balance between quarterback and route ... plays the ball well, even from a compromised position (10 interceptions over the past three seasons) ... missed tackles dropped considerably from his 2021 tape (20) to 2022 tape (4) ... became the featured punt returner at Notre Dame, averaging 9.9 yards per return (18/179/0) ... doesn't lack for confidence ... finished career with the same number of penalties as you and I (zero) ... logged 100-plus special teams snaps each of the past three seasons.

WEAKNESSES: Non-explosive athlete, especially at the top of his pedal ... top-end acceleration is ordinary and will struggle if asked to cover speed from the slot one-on-one ... missed tackle rate improved in 2022, but breakdown technique is still an issue ... less than average functional strength, limiting ability to shed blocks and drag down ball carriers when off balance ... had a quiet final season in college after transferring to Notre Dame (averaged 3.0 tackles per game and managed only two passes defended) ... missed three of the final four games as a junior because of an ankle injury (November 2022).

SUMMARY: A one-year starter at Notre Dame, Joseph played free safety in defensive coordinator Al Golden's scheme. He put his name on the NFL radar with his All-American redshirt freshman season at Northwestern (his name is on the second deck of Ryan Field as one of only 14 consensus All-Americans in school history), but his consistency and impact the past two seasons fell short of the hype. In coverage, Joseph shows range to reach his landmarks in deep zones or attack plays in the flat, but his ball skills are not as impressive as his career interception total would suggest. Though he's made improvements in the run game, he is prone to reckless tendencies and hasn't been a secure, open field tackler. Overall, Joseph works well from his centerfield perch to read and put himself in position to make plays, but his lack of explosive traits and inconsistent technique will be more noticeable versus NFL competition. He projects as a potential backup and special-teamer.

22.

JORDAN HOWDEN | Minnesota

5115 | 203 lbs. | SSR

San Diego, Calif. (Desert Pines)

#23

BACKGROUND: Jordan Howden (HOW-din), who has seven siblings, grew up in the Inland Empire area of Southern California where he started playing football. After he was home-schooled for middle school, he enrolled at Vista Murrieta High School and had the necessary credits to skip his freshman year. Howden played on varsity as a junior cornerback and was teammates with Bills wide receiver Khalil Shakir. He finished the 2016 season with 29 tackles, seven passes defended and 3.0 sacks. With little attention as a recruit, he moved in with his cousin in Rhodes Ranch, Nev. and transferred to Desert Pines High School in Las Vegas for his final season. Howden led the program to a 10-2 record and 2017 state title. Despite missing the first three games because of eligibility issues, he earned all-conference honors in his final season with 45 tackles and three interceptions. He lettered in track at both Murrieta and Desert Pines and won the 2018 3A state championship in the long jump (21 feet 5 inches). He also won titles in the 4x100 and 4x200 relays and finished fourth in the 100 meters (11.21).

Howden wasn't ranked by online recruiting services and struggled to get noticed by college recruiters. Signing day came and went, and Howden was unsure of his next step. Shortly before his high school graduation, head coach P.J. Fleck and Minnesota extended a preferred walk-on opportunity, and Howden was packed up and on campus within a few days. He arrived as a cornerback but was moved to safety his first week into camp and was pressed into a starting role as a true freshman because of injuries. Howden was put on scholarship in January 2019 (about six months after he arrived on campus). He took advantage of the extra year of eligibility granted because of the pandemic and returned to Minnesota for his fifth season. His father (Ramsese) played cornerback at Grambling State. His cousin (Saladin Martin) was a defensive back at San Diego State and played three seasons in the NFL (1979-81). Howden graduated with his degree. He accepted his invitation to the 2023 East-West Shrine Bowl.

STRENGTHS: Meets the height/weight/speed thresholds for most schemes ... sleek and controlled when changing directions ... decisive to key and diagnose ... trusts eyes to lead him to the ball ... comes to balance on the move and doesn't allow ball carriers to escape his grasp when he is in position (missed tackle rate decreased each year) ... flashes secondary quickness after shedding blocks ... hunts crossers and will stroke ball carriers across the middle ... intelligent zone player and feels routes coming ... breaks quickly to make plays on the ball in the air ... well-versed on special teams coverages (527 career snaps) ... played in 58 games over five seasons with the Gophers.

WEAKNESSES: Needs to button up his reactions to play development ... misjudges downhill angles in run support and struggles to leverage the field, allowing runners to get outside ... will benefit by adding strength to match up with NFL talent ... play action and eye candy will lure him off his spot ... upright, predetermined backpedal and wastes too many steps ... mirroring skills will fail him and concede separation to pass catchers ... ball production was fine in college but doesn't have the ball skills to scare quarterbacks ... missed one game because of a thigh injury (September 2021), the only game he missed in five seasons.

SUMMARY: A five-year starter at Minnesota, Howden was part of a rotation in defensive coordinator Joe Rossi's scheme, seeing snaps in the box, split and against the slot. A former walk-on cornerback, he was pressed into action as a freshman after Antoine Winfield Jr. was injured. He is one of the more battle-tested defensive backs in this draft class (more than 3,000 career snaps). Howden sees the field well from different alignments, but his reaction quickness to break on throws tends to be inconsistent. He made clear strides in his finishing skills as a tackler, but his pursuit angles tend to be inconsistent. Overall, Howden doesn't consistently play up to his impressive testing numbers, but he is football smart and has a feel for limiting big plays. He is a potential backup and special-teamer.

GRADE: 6th-7th Round

23. TREY DEAN III | Florida

6021 | 200 lbs. | 5SR

Hampton, Ga. (Dutchtown)

BACKGROUND: Thaddeus “Trey” Dean III, who is one of three children (has two older sisters), was born in Atlanta and started playing football at age 4 in Ellenwood. He also grew up playing baseball and basketball and has several professional athletes in his family, including his great-grandfather (Thaddeus Deane – the second “e” was later dropped), who grew up in Cuba before coming to the United States and playing major league baseball. Dean attended Dutchtown High School and ran track but soon decided to focus only on football. He was a four-year letterman as a defensive back while also seeing time on offense as a wide receiver. As a junior, he logged 24 tackles, eight passes defended and an interception. Dean earned Under Armour All-American and all-county honors as a senior, finishing with 17 tackles, six passes defended, two interceptions and one forced fumble. After three straight 5-5 seasons in his first three years, Dean helped Dutchtown to seven wins and the state playoffs in 2017.

A four-star recruit, Dean was the No. 17 safety in the 2018 class and the No. 23 recruit in Georgia (No. 2 safety). The summer before his junior season, he received his first offer (Florida) and was ready to commit, but he kept his options open as the offers started to pour in. Dean added offers from Georgia, Louisville, Ole Miss, Penn State, South Carolina and UCLA during his junior year. He later received offers from Clemson, Michigan and Texas prior to his senior year. Before his senior season began, Dean committed to Tennessee and head coach Butch Jones, but decommitted after a coaching change midseason. He was set on committing to Alabama but decided to give Florida (the team he supported growing up) one more look and decided to commit to Dan Mullen and the Gators. He has two cousins with NFL experience, including Browns wide receiver Amari Cooper and Ahmad Black, who played defensive back at Florida (2007-10) and was drafted in the fifth round in the 2011 NFL Draft, playing three seasons for the Buccaneers. Dean took advantage of the extra year of eligibility granted because of the pandemic and returned to Gainesville for a fifth season in 2022. He graduated with his degree in education sciences (December 2021). Dean accepted his invitation to the 2023 East-West Shrine Bowl.

STRENGTHS: Lean, good-looking athlete ... doesn’t play twitchy but stays smooth and loose in his movements (NFL scout: “His 3-cone was the fastest time I’ve ever recorded.”) ... runs with alley acceleration to make plays near the line of scrimmage ... stays patient and controlled in coverage (zero touchdowns allowed and only one coverage penalty in 2022) ... picks up receivers flying through zones with secondary acceleration to close ... no stranger to the weight room (25 bench press reps were No. 1 among all defensive backs at the combine) ... called the, “best trash-talker on the team” by his teammates ... played a lot of football in college (62 games played) with starts across the secondary.

WEAKNESSES: Average long-speed by NFL standards ... lacks burst in transitions to open and easily match speedy slot receivers ... coverage anticipation (man and zone) isn’t always consistent, and he must stay locked in on his keys ... could use improvement with his spatial relationships when guarding different route combinations ... needs to refine some tackling and pursuit angle inefficiencies to cut down on misses ... has decent arm length and strength, but can improve shedding blocks with urgency to keep himself detached ... questionable fit on special teams coverages.

SUMMARY: A four-year starter at Florida, Dean was a versatile safety in former defensive coordinator Patrick Toney’s scheme. Originally a cornerback as a freshman, he moved to a hybrid “star” role before returning to safety where he was asked to match, work single-high or come down in the box. Dean has interesting testing data with a below-average 40-yard dash (4.67) but elite results in the 3-cone (6.69 and bench press (25). That inconsistent profile also matches his tape, which can be all over the place – both above and below average. Overall, Dean must become more consistent with his route recognition and finishing skills, but he has a versatile background and plays with promising length, toughness and loose movements. His best NFL fit is a matchup weapon against tight ends.

24. CHRISTIAN IZIEN | Rutgers

5086 | 199 lbs. | 5SR

Far Rockaway, N.Y. (Erasmus Hall)

BACKGROUND: Christian Izien (is-e-in), who has a younger brother (Tyler), grew up in the Far Rockaway neighborhood in Queens, N.Y., with his mother (Michelle Matthews). When he was 12, his family was displaced from their home in the Arverne by the Sea complex by Hurricane Sandy. Izien originally started playing football at age 6, and it quickly became his passion. He originally attended St. Francis Prep in Queens for his freshman and sophomore years before transferring to Pope John XXIII Regional High School in Sparta, N.J. As a junior, Izien rushed for 287 yards on 47 carries (6.1) and caught 23 passes for 216 yards and five total touchdowns. For his senior season, he transferred to Erasmus Hall in Brooklyn and was a two-way player at wide receiver and cornerback. Izien led the team to an 11-1 record, and he was named defensive player of the year in New York City. He finished the 2017 season with 65 tackles and five interceptions and also scored on a pair of punt returns. Izien also was a standout track athlete with personal bests in the indoor 55 meters (6.53), 100 meters (11.26), 200 meters (22.58) and indoor 300 meters (36.22).

A three-star recruit, Izien was the No. 117 athlete in the 2018 class and the No. 18 recruit in New York. He was undersized and transferred twice to get more notice as a recruit, but he helped himself by earning MVP honors at several recruiting camps. After his junior season, Florida Atlantic reached out with his first offer. He also had several FCS offers, but once Rutgers offered midway through his senior season, Izien was ready to commit and stay close to home. He was part of the same recruiting class as Chiefs running back Isiah Pacheco. Izien initially accepted his invitation to the 2023 Hula Bowl before he received an invite to the 2023 East-West Shrine Bowl.

STRENGTHS: Rocked-up, muscular build with decent length considering his height ... explosive athlete with immediate acceleration once he triggers ... appears smooth in his cover transitions and quickly closes ground ... feisty and tough in man coverage versus slots (tight ends and receivers) ... has rabbit feet for leaping opportunities at the catch point ... aggressive in run support, striking with hip snap and finishing with hand strength ... made a concerted effort to minimize missed tackles on 2022 tape compared to 2021 ... extensive special teams resume (572 snaps) with a blocked punt as a senior ... maniacal worker in the weight room to maintain his body at peak condition ... durable and played in every game the past four years ...

WEAKNESSES: Short with a maxed-out frame ... quickly makes up ground, but will lose phase too easily at the top of routes because of his guessing ... can be drawn out from his spot by the eyes of the quarterback ... bites on initial route movements and late to sort through combinations ... subpar ball instincts and struggles with his back to the quarterback ... massive size differences between him and NFL tight ends will be tough to overcome ... play strong, but can be too easily held up by blockers ... zero interceptions and only eight pass breakups over his final 25 college games.

SUMMARY: A four-year starter at Rutgers, Izien was the strong safety in defensive coordinator Joe Harasymiak's 4-2-5 scheme. He entered the starting lineup midway through his redshirt freshman season and started every game since (41), becoming just the 14th player in school history to reach 300 tackles. Izien is an explosive mover with rabbit feet and the physicality to operate near the line of scrimmage. He needs to do a better job allowing the game to come to him with not enough ball production to justify his overaggressive nature. Overall, Izien's shorter stature will remove him from consideration for several teams, but he has the toughness, speed and quick-twitch reflexes to be a core special-teamer and backup. His impressive pro-day performance will earn him a secondary look by evaluators.

25. RASHAD TORRENCE II | Florida 5115 | 193 lbs. | 3JR Atlanta, Ga. (Marietta) 3/20/2002 (age 21.10) #22

BACKGROUND: Rashad Torrence II originally attended Carrollton High School as a freshman before transferring to Marietta High School (just north of Atlanta) as a sophomore. He played both ways as a safety and running back and finished with 89 tackles, five passes defended and one interception as a sophomore, adding four rushing touchdowns. Prior to his junior year, Torrence was ruled ineligible for the 2018 season. His parents worked in the Marietta school system so he could attend Marietta High School, but they didn't work at the high school, making him ineligible to play sports there. Marietta was forced to pay a fine and surrender their eight wins from the 2017 season. After sitting out as a junior, Torrence became eligible as a senior and helped Marietta to a 13-2 record and the 2019 Class 7A state championship. He finished with 101 tackles, nine passes defended, two forced fumbles and one interception.

A four-star recruit, Torrence was the No. 33 safety in the 2020 class and the No. 32 recruit in Georgia. His first scholarship offers arrived the summer prior to his sophomore season, including those from Florida, Syracuse and Duke. Other national programs including Alabama, Clemson, Michigan, Notre Dame, Stanford and Tennessee joined the mix, and many believed the Crimson Tide to be the favorite. Torrence committed to Florida in December 2018 and didn't waver, signing in December 2019 and enrolling early in January. He elected to skip his senior season to enter the 2023 NFL Draft.

STRENGTHS: Fluid athlete with plus body control in all of his movements ... shows the diagnose instincts for early drives on throws before the quarterback's arm is moving forward ... acceleration is average at best but does flash a burst when closing ... understands positioning to attack passing lanes for the best chance at disruption ... works well in short and deep zones ... tracks the ball well to leverage pursuit angles ... displays decent play strength to finish tackles once he finds his grip ... led the Gators in tackles in his final season (one of 11 SEC defenders to average 7.0-plus tackles per game in 2022) and combined for 171 tackles over the past two seasons ... aligned at multiple positions in the secondary.

WEAKNESSES: Undersized for a safety and has the size and build of a cornerback ... doesn't run well enough to match NFL speed at receiver ... his foot quickness will struggle to keep up with slot receivers ... inconsistent moments as a run defender – looked like a strong tackler on some of his 2022 tapes (Kentucky) but below average on others (Utah, LSU) ... needs to rely more on wrap fundamentals to become more dependable as a tackler ... below-average ball production ... had more personal foul penalties (2) than times he got his hands on a pass (one pass breakup, zero interceptions) in 2022.

SUMMARY: A two-year starter at Florida, Torrence played free safety in former defensive coordinator Patrick Toney's scheme. Lining up in the box, slot and post, he was constantly around the action and was one of only five SEC players with 84-plus tackles each of the past two seasons. Torrence is a loose mover with functional vision to impact the game as both a run defender and cover man. Though he sees the action well to read and react, he doesn't always have the speed to get there in time, leaving production on the field. Overall, Torrence checks the defensive back boxes for instincts and fluidity, but the lack of explosiveness shows in the plays he struggles to make, and his tackling must improve. He is a potential end-of-the-roster defensive back in the NFL.

SUMMARY: Tyler “Ty” Okada grew up playing football outside of Minneapolis and was coached by his father (Chris). He played quarterback at East Ridge High and was also a standout baseball player and wrestler. Without any Division-I scholarship offers, he jumped at the preferred walk-on offer from FCS-level Montana State. He moved to defensive back and battled injuries his first few seasons before emerging as a playmaking nickel back as a junior and senior. Okada played corner, safety and nickel and learned how to play defense from various alignments. He is occasionally out-flanked as a run defender, but he is a strong tackler when his angles are right. In coverage, he is fast and fluid with terrific reactive quickness. His coaches say his discipline and football character are “outstanding.” Overall, Okada masks his average size with athletic versatility and football IQ plus the makeup for special teams. After his pro-day performance, he has a decent chance to be drafted.

SUMMARY: Allister “AJ” Finley Jr. grew up in Mobile and started playing football (quarterback) at age 4. He was a cornerback and running back at St. Paul’s Episcopal School and helped the program to state titles his first three years (led the team in rushing as a junior). As a senior, he posted six interceptions. A three-star recruit, he committed to Ole Miss (over Iowa and Tennessee) and moved to safety full time. He married his college sweetheart (Ruby Draayer) in May 2022. Finley is a long, slender athlete with below-average play strength. He displays adequate speed and instincts from the hash or single-high to cover the sideline and deep third of the field. His inconsistent physicality is a concern when working downhill, and he doesn’t have the quick twitch directional change to pattern match NFL receivers. Overall, Finley has a chance to make a pro roster because of his functional range and athletic ball skills, but he must become a more secure tackler to earn his way.

SUMMARY: Tyreque Jones grew up outside of Los Angeles and started his prep career as a quarterback at Kaiser High. He transferred to San Gorgonio High for his senior season and caught 52 passes for 1,128 yards and 16 touchdowns, adding 77 tackles and two interceptions. A three-star recruit, Jones signed with Boise State, and he quickly became part of the safety rotation, setting career-bests in 2021. He moved to nickelback in 2022 as a super senior with mixed results. Jones offers above-average straight-line speed in coverage and when giving chase in the run game. With his physicality, he looks to run through ball carriers, but cares more about striking than wrap-tackling. Against the pass, he sees plays develop, but he lacks the short area balance and burst to stay connected to routes. Overall, Jones has impressive length and zone instincts, but his low batting average as a tackler and tight coverage transitions will be high hurdles to clear in the NFL.

SUMMARY: Tanner McCalister was born in Dallas and was a four-year letterman at Rockwall-Heath High, rushing for 2,443 yards in prep career. He also logged five forced fumbles and four interceptions at cornerback. A three-star recruit, McCalister committed to Arkansas before flipping to Oklahoma State, where he played corner before moving to safety in 2020. For his final season, he followed defensive coordinator Jim Knowles and transferred to Ohio State as a slot safety (and became an extra coach on the field, helping OSU defenders transition to the new scheme). Hyper-alert in coverage, McCalister moves like a former corner with terrific footwork/fluidity to transition from his pedal and defend multiple routes. He strikes with timing and authority but must fine-tune his tackling angles and techniques. Overall, McCalister doesn't have elite size/speed and is somewhat of a tweener, but NFL coaches will appreciate his instincts, urgency and nose for the football.

SUMMARY: Jerriek Reed II, who is one of four children, played cornerback and wide receiver at Olive Branch High. He earned All-Region as a senior with 99 tackles, 7.0 tackles for loss and seven interceptions. A two-star recruit, he originally committed to Tennessee-Martin before landing at the juco level for one season. Reed transferred to New Mexico, where he was a productive safety with cornerback flexibility (combined for 183 tackles and 20 passes defended over his junior and senior seasons). Reed has the athletic versatility and toughness to play nickel, accelerating with a burst to close on routes and in the run game. He has the range and tracking skills to play over the top as a single-high safety. He is well-built for his frame, but his stature will show versus larger-framed receivers. Overall, Reed needs to put a higher premium on attacking field leverage, but he has the aggressive read-react skills to play fast regardless of depth (on defense and special teams).

SUMMARY: Macon Clark, the oldest of three children, was a three-year letterman at Destrehan High and played the "cat" position as a linebacker, cornerback and safety. He earned District MVP as a senior with 71 tackles, 4.0 sacks and one interception (returned for a touchdown). A three-star recruit, he stayed close to home and signed with Tulane in New Orleans (20 miles from his high school). He started at strong safety for two seasons before playing well in more of a nickel role in 2022. Clark gives off flashbacks of T.J. Ward with the way he drives downhill, using aggressive angles and anger behind his pads to lay a lick on the ball carrier. Though he sees the field well, his range can be limited if he doesn't trigger in time, and he can be caught in no man's land when he bites. Overall, Clark will need to prove himself with NFL coverage duties, but he is pound for pound one of the most physical players in the draft, which should translate well to NFL special teams.

SUMMARY: Quindell Johnson was primarily a quarterback growing up in New Orleans before he requested a move to defense as a sophomore at Edna Karr High to get on the field. He started three seasons at safety and helped the program to back-to-back state titles in his junior and senior seasons. A three-star recruit, he signed with Memphis where he played with his twin brother, Kendell. He was a four-year starter for the Tigers and filled up the stat sheet in different ways. Called the “heartbeat” of the defense by his coaches, Johnson anticipates well in coverage to drive on throws. He leverages well in the run game and creates knockback at contact, but his body tightness creates rigid movements and unbalanced tackle attempts, allowing ball carriers to get free (see 2022 Mississippi State tape). Overall, Johnson has straight-line tendencies as an athlete, but he is instinctive, long and physical enough to make plays in the run and pass games and on special teams.

SUMMARY: Isaiah “Zay” Bolden was a receiver and defensive back at Bartram Trail High before transferring to Wesley Chapel (though he was temporarily dismissed from the team in 2017). He was also a standout track athlete, winning conference titles in the 100 (10.54) and 200 meters (21.74). A four-star recruit, he flipped from Florida State to Willie Taggart and Oregon, then flipped back to FSU after Taggart was hired there as head coach. After two seasons, he left the team early in the 2020 season and transferred to Jackson State to play for Deion Sanders. Bolden led the FCS in kick return yards (36.9 average) in 2021 and became a starting cornerback in 2022. Although his technique and play recognition are underdeveloped, he moves differently than most his size. As a return specialist, he has special acceleration. Overall, Bolden isn’t a squeaky-clean prospect and is unproven in several areas, but his rare mix of speed, length and explosive traits is ready to be cultivated.
